

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. I. NATURE AND EXTENT.

(A) NATURE, CREATION, DURATION, AND EFFECT IN GENERAL.

§ 1. Nature of right.

[a] (Sup. 1879)

Exemption of property from execution is a mere personal privilege, to which the execution defendant must make some claim before it will be conceded, and to which only a limited class of debtors known as householders are entitled, and under 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 352, it is only on judgments founded on contracts that an execution defendant is entitled to exemption.—Terrell v. State, 66 Ind. 570.

[b] (App. 1899)

The right of exemption is a personal privilege, purely statutory, and the judgment debtor is only entitled thereto upon a compliance with the statute.—Kahn v. Hayes, 53 N. E. 430, 22 Ind. App. 182.

[c] (App. 1906)

The right of exemption is purely statutory.—Hobbs v. Town of Eaton, 38 Ind. App. 628, 78 N. E. 333.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. EXEMP. § 1.

See, also, 18 Cyc. p. 1374.

§ 2. What law governs.

[a] (Sup. 1888)

A new promise to pay a debt discharged by bankruptcy revives the old debt as of the date of the new promise, which will be governed by the exemption law in force at the time it is made.—Willis v. Cushman, 115 Ind. 100, 17 N. E. 168.

[b] (Sup. 1903)

Exemption laws have no extraterritorial force or effect.—Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Hollenbeck, 69 N. E. 136, 161 Ind. 452.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Exemp. § 2.

See, also, 18 Cyc. pp. 1376-1378; note, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 195; notes, 2 Am. St. Rep. 240, 19 Am. St. Rep. 145, 122 Am. St. Rep. 451.

§ 3. Constitutional and statutory provisions.

Time of taking effect, see STATUTES, § 250.

Acts 1897, p. 234, amending Code Civ. Proc. § 243 (Burns' Supp. 1897, § 971; Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 959), providing that the wages of a householder in excess of $25 shall not be exempt against garnishment, and that no exemption shall be allowed except as therein provided, applies only to nonresident householders, as it does not repeal by implication Burns' Rev. St. 1894, §§ 715, 730 (Horner's Rev. St. 1897, §§ 703, 718), permitting a resident householder to claim $600 in wages due him, as exempt.—Pomeroy v. Beach, 49 N. E. 370, 149 Ind. 511.

The repeal by Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 7770 (Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 767), of former statutes allowing the purchaser at foreclosure sale to collect rents and profits during the year for redemption, does not enlarge the exemption law as to the owner, since the right of possession during such year is appraised as part of his property in determining his exemptions.—World Building Loan & Investment Co. v. Marlin, 52 N. E. 198, 151 Ind. 630.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Exemp. §§ 2, 3.

See, also, 18 Cyc. pp. 1380-1382; note, 45 Am. Dec. 251.

§ 4. Construction of exemption laws in general.

Time of taking effect, see STATUTES, § 250.

[a] (Sup. 1876)

Statutes to carry into effect the provision of the constitution that "the privilege of the debtor to enjoy the necessary comforts of life shall be recognized by wholesome laws, exempting a reasonable amount of property," etc., and proceedings in carrying such statutes out practically should be liberally construed.—Gregory v. Latchem, 53 Ind. 449.

[b] Exemption statutes are to be liberally construed to effect their intent and purpose.—(Sup. 1882) Puett v. Beard, 86 Ind. 172, 44 Am. Rep. 280; (1883) Astley v. Capron, 89 Ind. 167; (1885) Butner v. Bowser, 104 Ind. 255, 3 N. E. 889; (App. 1891) Pickrell v. Jerould, 27 N. E. 433, 1 Ind. App. 10, 50 Am. St. Rep. 192; (1891) Coppage v. Gregg, 27 N. E. 570, 1 Ind. App. 112; (1907) Miller v. Swhier, 40 Ind. App. 465.

The court will apply the exemption statute to cases that fall, not only within the strict letter of the law, but all such as come within the equity and spirit of the act.—Coppage v. Gregg, 27 N. E. 570, 1 Ind. App. 112.

[d] The constitutional provision relating to exemptions and statutes founded thereon were designed as a protection to poor and destitute families. They are based upon considerations of public policy and humanity, and are not alone for the benefit of the debtor, but for his family as well. Such statutes should be liberally construed.—(App. 1893) Eisenhauser v. Dill, 33 N. E. 220, 6 Ind. App. 188; (1897) Kolb v. Raisor, 47 N. E. 177, 17 Ind. App. 551.

Statutes relating to exemptions must be applied and carried into effect in the liberal spirit, which gives rise to such laws. They are intended, not for the benefit of the debtor himself alone, else their provisions would be extended to persons who are not householders; but the purpose of such enactments is to secure provision for the wants of indigent families.—Green v. Simon, 46 N. E. 603, 17 Ind. App. 360.

[f] (Sup. 1898)

The constitutional provisions relating to exemptions and the statutes passed pursuant to the requirements thereof are to be liberally construed.—Pomeroy v. Beach, 49 N. E. 370, 149 Ind. 511.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Exemp. § 4.

See, also, 18 Cyc. pp. 1380, 1390.

§ 5. Retroactive operation.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Exemp. §§ 5-7.

See, also, 18 Cyc. pp. 1378; note, 45 Am. Dec. 252.

§ 6. — Liabilities and liens existing before exemption law.

[a] (Sup. 1879)

The right to an exemption must be determined by the law which was in force when the debt was contracted, and not by that which is in force when the exemption is claimed.—O'Neill v. Beck, 69 Ind. 239.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Exemp. § 6.

§ 7. — Liabilities existing before acquisition of right of exemption.

[a] (Sup. 1889)

Under the statute allowing to every bona fide resident householder of the state $600 worth of personal property exempt from execution, an execution debtor who marries after levy, but before sale, thus becoming a bona fide householder, is entitled to the exemption.—Robinson v. Hughes, 117 Ind. 298, 20 N. E. 220, 10 Am. St. Rep. 45, 3 L. R. A. 383.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Exemp. § 7.

(B) PERSONS ENTITLED.

§ 17. Householders.

Absence or removal as affecting character as resident householder, see post, § 29.

[a] (Sup. 1862)

An unmarried white man, over 21 years of age, living with his sister, each owning personal property, and each by labor contributing to the household expenses, he directing and controlling, is a householder, and entitled, as such, to hold a horse as exempt from execution under the $300 act.—Graham v. Crockett, 18 Ind. 119.

[b] (Super. 1873)

The declared intention of not again living with his family does not absolve a married man from the legal or moral obligation of providing for them, and, although living separate and apart from them, he is still amenable to the law for their support, and is, therefore, a resident householder within the meaning of the act of exemption, and as such is entitled to claim the privilege of exemption of his property from sale on execution.—Roney v. Wood, Wils. 378.

[c] (Super. 1874)

One occupying rooms in a hotel with his family, though paying no board, is a householder within the meaning of the act exempting the furniture of the householder from execution.—Sullivan v. Canan, Wils. 532.

[d] (Sup. 1881)

The wife of judgment debtor having died, he employed a family to keep house for him and his adopted daughter, who was dependent on him for support. While she was on a visit to her natural mother, an execution was levied on the debtor's property, which he claimed to be exempt. Held, that he was a householder, within the meaning of the statute, and entitled to the exemption.—Bunnell v. Hay, 73 Ind. 452.

[e] (Sup. 1881)

A bachelor, who occupies a house and maintains a household of hired servants, is a householder, within the meaning of the law exempting a certain amount of a resident householder's property.—Kelley v. McFadden, 80 Ind. 536.

[f] (Sup. 1882)

A man who, being a widower, lives in another man's house, but pays the board of his three children and supports them, is a householder, within the meaning of the exemption laws.—Lowry v. McAlister, 86 Ind. 543.

[g] (Sup. 1883)

A "householder," within the meaning of that term as used in the exemption acts, need not necessarily be a housekeeper. It is enough if he is the head of a family to whose support he contributes.—Astley v. Capron, 89 Ind. 167.

[h] (Sup. 1886)

A widower who has no one necessarily dependent on him for support, but who lives in a house belonging to a married daughter, in which he lived at the time of his wife's death, and on which he pays the taxes and keeps up improvements, without paying other rent, and who contributes to the living expenses of the daughter, who acts as his housekeeper, her husband, and himself, is a householder, within the meaning of the exemption law.—Bipus v. Deer, 106 Ind. 135, 5 N. E. 894.

[i] (Sup. 1896)

Burns' Supplement 1897, § 971, providing that no exemption shall be allowed as against garnishment except as in that section provided, only means that no exemption shall be allowed as against garnishment to the class of householders named in that section, to wit, householders other than resident householders, except as provided in the section.—Pomeroy v. Beach, 49 N. E. 370, 149 Ind. 511.

[j] (App. 1901)

Where a judgment debtor residing in G. county had two sons, living apart from him and supporting themselves, and a daughter and two small boys, whom he visited once a year, and who lived with and were supported by their grandmother from the time of their mother's death, five years before, except for small sums and presents which their father sent occasionally, the evidence supported a finding that such debtor was not a resident householder, within a statute exempting a resident householder's property, not exceeding $600, from liability under a judgment on contract.—Gregg v. Brickley, 59 N. E. 1072, 27 Ind. App. 154.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Exemp. § 20.

See, also, 18 Cyc. p. 1404.

§ 19. Married women.

Under the constitution, which declares that "the privilege of the debtor to enjoy the necessary comforts of life shall be recognized by wholesome laws, exempting a reasonable amount of property from seizure or sale, for debt," and the act in pursuance thereof (2 Gav. & H. St. p. 367), exempting property, not exceeding a certain amount, owned by any resident householder, from sale on execution, etc., where the husband and wife are living together, and the property of the husband does not reach the limit fixed by law, and the wife is the owner of the property levied upon and yet claimed as exempt, and is herself the real debtor in the judgment and execution, her claim to exemption is valid to the extent necessary to make, with her husband's property, the amount protected by statute.—Crane v. Waggoner, 33 Ind. 83.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Exemp. §§ 21, 22.

See, also, 18 Cyc. p. 1403.

§ 26. Residence.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Exemp. §§ 30-33.

See, also, 18 Cyc. pp. 1403, 1407.

§ 27. — Domicile in general.

[a] (Sup. 1856)

Exemption laws of the state protect the property of residents only.—Hoagland v. Roe, 8 Ind. 275.

[b] (Sup. 1860)

Every resident householder of the state, without regard to the particular locality of his residence, is entitled to the benefit of the exemption law, as well when in transit with his family and property from one residence to another as when permanently settled.—Mark v. State ex rel. Bowless, 15 Ind. 98.

[c] (Sup. 1873)

When an execution defendant ceases to be a resident householder of the state, his right to exempt any of his property from execution ceases.—Finley v. Sly, 44 Ind. 206.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Exemp. § 30.

See, also, 18 Cyc. p. 1406.

§ 29. — Absence or removal.

[a] (Sup. 1861)

Execution was levied on the property of an execution debtor, which was within the value protected by statute from levy. He was at the time keeping himself hidden to avoid a criminal prosecution, but was occasionally seen in the county. His family were staying temporarily with his brother, on account of the sickness of his wife, whom, however, he occasionally met at their regular place of residence. Held, that these facts did not show that he had changed or lost his residence, or ceased to be a householder, in such sense as to deprive him of the privileges of the statute exempting such property from levy.—Norman v. Bellman, 16 Ind. 156.

[b] (Sup. 1895)

One who, with his family and part of his household goods, leaves the state for government service in one of the territories, with the intention of returning when such service shall terminate, is not a "resident householder," within the meaning of Rev. St. 1881, § 703, exempting certain property of "resident householders" from execution sale.—Ross v. Banta, 140 Ind. 120, 34 N. E. 865, 39 N. E. 732.

[c] (App. 1897)

Where a guardian who was a resident householder entitled to an exemption under Rev. St. 1894, § 715 (Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 703), embezzled funds of the ward, and judgment was obtained against him therefor, but no prosecution was instituted, and he absconded and his whereabouts were unknown, he did not lose his domicile, and his wife, therefore, might claim an exemption in his behalf, under Rev. St. 1894, § 727 (Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 715).—Green v. Simon, 46 N. E. 693, 17 Ind. App. 360.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Exemp. § 33.

See, also, 18 Cyc. p. 1407.

§ 30. Surviving husband, wife, children, or next of kin.

[a] (Sup. 1892)

Where in some parts of the record of probate proceedings, setting apart to the widow property claimed as exempt from decedent's creditor, a widow is named "Tobetha," and in others "Delilah Parker," but in all cases she is mentioned as the widow of James Parker, it sufficiently appears that the name "Tobetha" was a clerical mistake, and that the person named was the widow of James Parker.—Threlkeld v. Allen, 32 N. E. 576, 133 Ind. 429.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Exemp. § 34.

See, also, 18 Cyc. p. 1400.

(C) PROPERTY AND RIGHTS EXEMPT.

§ 31. General exemptions of personal property.

[a] (Sup. 1834)

Though a debtor may allow property exempt from execution to be levied on and sold, the property which may be taken on execution not by permission of the debtor, but in spite of him and by force of law, is alone subject to execution.—Simpkins v. Smith, 94 Ind. 470.

§ 32. Property within general exemption.

§ 33. — Nature in general.[a] (App. 1881)

There is no rule of law which prescribes to a debtor what kind of property he shall or shall not claim as exempt.—Coppage v. Gregg, 27 N. E. 570, 1 Ind. App. 112.

§ 36. Amount of exemption and value of property.[a] (Sup. 1861)

Where a debtor has not $300 worth of property, and all he has is personalty, it does not become subject to the lien of the execution.—Godman v. Smith, 17 Ind. 152.

[b] (Sup. 1870)

Where husband and wife are living together, and the property of the husband is not of the value of $300, and the wife is the owner of the property levied on under an execution, and is the real debtor in the judgment and execution, she may, under Act 1852 (2 Gav. & H. St. p. 367), providing for an exemption of property to the value of $300 to a resident householder, claim her individual property to the extent necessary to make, with the husband's, the amount of $300.—Crane v. Waggoner, 33 Ind. 83.

[c] (Sup. 1897)

The mere fact that a debtor has less than $900 worth of property does not withdraw it from the lien of a judgment or execution in the hands of an officer.—Moss v. Jenkins, 146 Ind. 580, 45 N. E. 780.

[d] (Sup. 1897)

Under Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 734, providing that, in ascertaining the value of exempt property, the sheriff shall "appraise the property according to its cash value at the time, deducting liens and incumbrances," the value of the land for the purpose of exemptions is its value over and above the incumbrances.—Citizens' State Bank of Noblesville v. Harris, 48 N. E. 856, 149 Ind. 208.

[e] (Sup. 1898)

Code Civ. Proc. § 243, as amended by Acts 1897, p. 234 (Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 950), limiting the exemption of the wages of householders against garnishment to $25, and providing that no exemption as against garnishment shall be allowed save as therein provided, does not apply to resident householders, who are entitled under Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 715 (Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 703), to an exemption of $400.—Hart v. O'Rourke, 51 N. E. 330, 151 Ind. 205.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Exemp. § 39.

§ 50. Life insurance.[a] (Sup. 1886)

Rev. St. 1881, § 3848, providing for the exemption from the claims of creditors of benefits in certain mutual benefit associations, applies only to corporations organized under the laws of Indiana.—Presbyterian Mut. Assur. Fund v. Allen, 106 Ind. 593, 7 N. E. 317.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

§ 58. — Property purchased with exempt money.[a] (Sup. 1882)

Property purchased by a pensioner with pension money is not exempt.—Cavanaugh v. Smith, 84 Ind. 380.

[b] (Sup. 1886)

Pension money from the United States stands upon the same footing, after it is received by the pensioner, as other money; and property purchased therewith is as liable to execution as any other property.—Faurote v. Carr, 9 N. E. 350, 108 Ind. 123.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Exemp. § 80.

§ 59. Ownership or possession of property in general.[a] (Sup. 1882)

One who has in good faith sold property claimed as exempt, and subsequently rescinded the sale and regained possession, may still claim such property as exempt.—Boesker v. Pickett, 81 Ind. 554.

[b] (Sup. 1899)

When a conveyance is set aside as fraudulent at the suit of vendor's creditors, the title does not revert in the vendor so as to give him a right to exemptions therein, under Burns' Rev. St. § 715 (Rev. St. 1881, § 703; Horner's Rev. St. § 703), providing that property not exceeding $400, owned by resident householders, "shall not be liable to sale on execution or any other final process from a court for any debt growing out of or founded upon a contract."—McNally v. White, 54 N. E. 794, 56 N. E. 214, 154 Ind. 163.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Exemp. § 81.

See, also, 18 Cyc. pp. 1382-1386; note, 32 Am. Dec. 242.

§ 61. Partnership property.[a] (Sup. 1880)

One partner cannot claim as exempt partnership property mortgaged by the partnership to secure a partnership debt.—Love v. Blair, 72 Ind. 281.

[b] Partnership property cannot be claimed and held by a member of the firm as exempt from execution.—(Sup. 1881) Smith v. Harris, 76 Ind. 104; (1884) State ex rel. Talbatt v. Emmons, 99 Ind. 452.

[c] (Sup. 1885)

Partners who have made an assignment for the benefit of creditors cannot claim that any part of the partnership property be set apart to them as exempt from execution.—Ex parte Hopkins, 104 Ind. 157, 2 N. E. 587.

[d] (Sup. 1889)

Where the joint interest in the partnership property is severed by the sale of one of the partners to the other of his interest in the remaining property, it is no longer firm property, and the debtor has the right to an exemption.—Goudy v. Werbe, 19 N. E. 764, 117 Ind. 154, 3 L. R. A. 114.

Where, before creditors of an insolvent firm acquire a lien on its property, the firm is dissolved in good faith, one of the members purchasing all the firm property, and assuming all the liabilities of the partnership, such member may claim his exemptions out of the property, though he had no such right before the dissolution, and the firm creditors cannot object to the conveyance as fraudulent.—Id.

[e] (App. 1891)

Execution on a judgment against a partnership was issued and placed in the hands of an officer prior to a dissolution of the partnership and division of the property thereof between the two partners. After such dissolution and division the execution was levied on the share of the property allotted to one of the partners. Held, that such partner was not entitled to claim the same as exempt from levy under the execution in question.—State ex rel. Miller v. Day, 3 Ind. App. 155, 29 N. E. 436.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

(D) LIABILITIES ENFORCEABLE AGAINST EXEMPT PROPERTY.

§ 62. Exceptions from exemptions in general.[a] (Sup. 1858)

Acts 1843, p. 52, § 2, provides that whenever the state bank shall discount any bill prepared to be discounted in said bank, and judgment shall be recovered thereon, no appraisement or valuation shall be required or allowed before the sale of the property, which may, on being duly advertised, be sold to the highest bidder. Held that, as the intention of the legislature was to sell without appraisement only upon such paper as was prepared for the purpose and intended by the parties to be discounted in the bank, where a bill was not drawn to be discounted at the state bank or its branches, but generally to raise money wherever it could be done, but was discounted at the state bank, the case was not within the provision of the statute.—State Bank of Indiana v. Holland, 11 Ind. 150.

Under Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 715 (Rev. St. 1881, § 703; Horner's Rev. St. 1901, § 703), a resident householder can claim an exemption of his property from sale on execution or other final process from a court only when such execution or other process is issued on a judgment for a debt growing out of or founded on contract, express or implied. Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6076 (Rev. St. 1881, § 4951; Horner's Rev. St. 1901, § 4951), provides that any person betting on any game and losing may recover the amount lost by action at any time within six months thereafter. Section 6678 (4953) provides that if the losing party shall not, within the time fixed in section 6676 (4951), sue for the money lost, it shall be the duty of the prosecuting attorney, on information filed with him, to sue for and recover the same in the name of the state, with costs of suit, from the winner, for the benefit of the wife or minor children, if either be living, of the loser, and, in case there shall be no such wife or minor children, then for the benefit of the common schools. Held, that the state's right to recover depends on the statute alone, and that one winning at gambling is not entitled to the benefit of the exemption law as against an execution issued on a judgment against him in its favor.—State ex rel. Kelly v. Morgan, 67 N. E. 186, 160 Ind. 474.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Exemp. § 88.

§ 63. Statutory provisions.[a] (Sup. 1864)

Under 2 Gav. & H. St. p. 220, a judgment rendered in a suit on a guardian's bond is collectible without the benefit of the valuation or appraisement laws; and said statute applies to bonds executed before, as well as after, its passage.—Potter v. State ex rel. Thompson, 23 Ind. 607.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Exemp. § 89.

§ 64. Exception of pre-existing liabilities and liens.[a] (Sup. 1886)

A devisee of land upon which a judgment in favor of a creditor of the devisor has been declared to be a lien cannot claim it as exempt from execution.—Graves v. Graves, 106 Ind. 118, 5 N. E. 879.

[b] (App. 1908)

A mortgagor after the sale of property under foreclosure proceedings is not entitled to claim his exemption as a resident householder out of the remainder of the proceeds derived from the sale before the entire decree has been satisfied.—Broeker v. Morris, 42 Ind. App. 417, 85 N. E. 982.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Exemp. § 90.

See, also, 18 Cyc. p. 1395.

§ 72. Liabilities incurred in fiduciary capacity.

Retroactive effect of statutory provisions, see ante, § 63.

[a] In a suit on the bond of a guardian, the court may add 10 per cent. damages to the amount found against the latter, and order it to be collected without relief from valuation laws.—(Sup. 1864) Potter v. State ex rel. Thompson, 23 Ind. 550, 607; (1878) Bescher v. State ex rel. Hammann, 63 Ind. 302.

[b] (App. 1897)

Rev. St. 1894, § 2691 (Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 2527), declares that a suit on a guardian's bond is governed by the law regulating suits on bonds of executors and administrators (sections 2614, 2615, Rev. St. 1894; sections 2459, 2460, Horner's Rev. St. 1897), which provides that the measure of damages in such suits is the value of the property converted by the representative, with interest, such exemplary damages as the jury may be willing to give, and 10 per cent. of the whole amount assessed, but contains nothing as to whether the representative may claim exemptions. Held, that a suit on a guardian's bond, which was set out with the complaint for money concealed by the guardian and converted to his own use, was in contract, within Rev. St. 1894, § 715 (Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 703), providing for an exemption as against debts which grew out of or are founded on a contract, and hence the guardian was entitled to an exemption as against the judgment in said suit.—Green v. Simon, 17 Ind. App. 360, 46 N. E. 693.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Exemp. § 96.

§ 74. Liabilities for torts.

[a] (Sup. 1857)

Under Const. art. 1, § 22, providing that a reasonable amount of property shall be exempt from seizure or sale for the payment of any debt or liability hereafter contracted, and Act Feb. 17, 1852 (2 Rev. St. p. 337), providing that property not exceeding $300 in value, owned by a resident householder, is not liable to sale on execution or any other process from a court on any debt growing out of or founded on a contract, express or implied, property is exempt to a debtor only in actions on contract.—State ex rel. Haven v. Melogue, 9 Ind. 196.

[b] (Sup. 1879)

A judgment for alimony is not a debt founded on contract, and therefore a debtor cannot claim exemption of any property from execution on such a judgment.—Menzie v. Anderson, 65 Ind. 239.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

Under the statute providing that an amount of property, not exceeding $300 in value, owned by any resident householder, shall not be liable to any sale on execution for any debt growing out of or founded on a contract, express or implied, a debtor cannot claim exemption, where judgment recovered was for a penalty for running by a toll gate to avoid paying toll, since such judgment is not founded on a contract, within the statute.—Keller v. McMahan, 77 Ind. 62.

[d] (Sup. 1881)

An action to recover real property and a compensation for its use is an action sounding in tort; and therefore no property is exempt from an execution issued on a judgment in such case, under 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 353, and Acts 1877, p. 127, relating to exemptions, and applying only to debts growing out of or founded on contract.—Dorrell v. Hannah, 80 Ind. 497.

[e] (Sup. 1882)

Where the form of an action is tort, and the damages found are therefore such as result from the tort, the defendant cannot show, for the purpose of showing a right to an exemption, so as to defeat plaintiff's right to sell under the execution, that the judgment was in fact taken upon a claim lying in contract, instead of in tort.—Smith v. Wood, 83 Ind. 522.

The damages recovered in an action of ejectment wherein plaintiff alleges that defendant held possession without right arise from tort, and not from contract; and hence no exemption can be allowed against execution upon a judgment for such damages.—Id.

[f] (Sup. 1883)

Where a widow, by concealing an antenuptial contract whereby she relinquished all interest in her husband's estate, obtained from his administrator personal property in her right as widow, and the administrator obtained judgment therefor, the judgment was for tort; and no property was, under Rev. St. 1881, § 703, exempt from the execution issued upon it.—Nowling v. McIntosh, 89 Ind. 503.

[g] (Sup. 1890)

A complaint alleged that, plaintiff's shoulder having been dislocated, defendant, being a practicing physician, "undertook faithfully, skillfully, and diligently to treat and set, and endeavor to cure," the shoulder, but conducted himself so negligently that it was permitted to remain out of place, until it became impossible properly to set and cure it. Held, that the complaint is for the tort, and defendant is not entitled to any exemption on an execution issued on a judgment rendered therein.—De Hart v. Haun, 128 Ind. 378, 26 N. E. 61.

[h] (Sup. 1891)

In an action to set aside a sheriff's sale of land, it appeared that plaintiff recovered a judgment upon a complaint uniting two causes of action in tort with one on contract. Held, that defendant is entitled to treat the judgment as one rendered upon contract, and to claim his exemption.—Ries v. McClatchey, 128 Ind. 125, 27 N. E. 349.

[i] (Sup. 1893)

A sale of land under execution will not be enjoined on the ground that it is within the exemption from liability for debts founded on contract, (Rev. St. 1888, § 703,) unless it is alleged by plaintiff or found by the court that the judgment on which the execution issued was founded on contract.—Goldthait v. Walker, 134 Ind. 527, 34 N. E. 378.

[j] (App. 1897)

Where property claimed as exempt was seized on execution, and claimant replevied same, evidence was not admissible that the suit in which the execution issued was in tort, where the complaint therein was unequivocal as to the character of the cause of action, since in such a case the nature of the cause must be determined by the pleadings.—Green v. Simon, 46 N. E. 693, 17 Ind. App. 360.

[k] (App. 1897)

An action by a landlord to recover possession of premises from a tenant holding over after the termination of his lease, and for damages for the detention, brought under Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 1706 (Rev. St. 1881, § 5225), sounds in tort, and there are no exemptions as against the judgment for damages, though the lease, which is merely evidence in the action, is improperly set out in the complaint.—Thomas v. Walmer, 46 N. E. 695, 18 Ind. App. 112.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

§ 75. Liabilities as surety.

[a] (Sup. 1882)

A resident householder who becomes replevin bail on a judgment obtained against a defendant in a prosecution for bastardy is entitled to the benefit of the exemption law. The undertaking is a contract, and possesses all the essential requisites thereof.—Maloney v. Newton, 85 Ind. 565, 44 Am. Rep. 46.

[b] (Sup. 1883)

The sureties on a guardian's bond are not entitled to the benefit of the appraisement laws.—Williams v. State ex rel. Roberts, 89 Ind. 570.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Exemp. § 102.

See, also, 18 Cyc. p. 1389.

§ 76. Judgments.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

Where a judgment for a gross amount includes a debt as against which the debtor's property is exempt, and also an obligation to which the exemption laws do not extend, an officer holding an execution on the judgment may sell property of the judgment debtor to an amount sufficient to satisfy that part of the judgment as to which the property is not exempt.—Keller v. McMahan, 77 Ind. 62.

[b] The costs recovered in an action of tort are part of the judgment for damages, and are not subject to exemption rights.—(Sup. 1883) Church v. Hay, 93 Ind. 323; (1886) Russell v. Cleary, 105 Ind. 502, 5 N. E. 414.

[c] A judgment for the costs of the opposite party is not a debt growing out of a contract, express or implied, and as against such costs the Indiana statute does not allow exemptions.—(Sup. 1884) State ex rel. Wingler v. McIntosh, 100 Ind. 439; (App. 1891) Donaldson v. Banta, 5 Ind. App. 71, 29 N. E. 362; (Sup. 1893) Ross v. Same, 140 Ind. 120, 34 N. E. 865, 39 N. E. 732.

[d] (Sup. 1889)

A judgment creditor does not obtain any enforceable claim upon property which the law declares shall be exempt from seizure.—Ray v. Yarnell, 20 N. E. 705, 118 Ind. 112.

[e] (Sup. 1895)

No exemption is allowable on an execution for costs.—Ross v. Banta, 34 N. E. 865, 39 N. E. 732, 140 Ind. 120.

[f] (App. 1906)

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6825, providing that no benefit of exemption shall be allowed on a commutation money judgment, controls such a debtor's right of exemption, as against section 715, declaring that property of the value of $600 shall be exempt, and authorizes a judgment creditor in a commutation judgment to have any property in the possession of a third person belonging to the debtor applied to the payment of the judgment.—Hobbs v. Town of Eaton, 78 N. E. 333, 38 Ind. App. 628.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Exemp. §§ 100, 101.

II. TRANSFER OR INCUMBRANCE OF EXEMPT PROPERTY.

Validity as to creditors or subsequent purchasers, see FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES, § 51.

§ 79. Power to transfer or encumber in general.

[a] (Sup. 1884)

Under 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 353, providing that "an amount of property not exceeding in value $300, owned by any resident householder, shall not be liable to sale on execution," the exemption applied to property owned by the judgment debtor at the time the judgment lien attached, whether afterwards conveyed or not.—Berry v. Nichols, 96 Ind. 287.

[b] (Sup. 1897)

Where a bona fide resident householder is possessed of less than $600 worth of property over and above incumbrances, he may, before sale on a judgment founded on contract, convey his equity in the land freed from the lien of the judgment or execution.—Citizens' State Bank of Noblesville v. Harris, 48 N. E. 856, 149 Ind. 208.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Exemp. § 105.

See, also, 18 Cyc. p. 1446.

§ 81. Sale or exchange.

[a] (Sup. 1861)

After $300 worth of property has been actually set off to an execution debtor, he may sell it discharged of the lien of the execution.—Godman v. Smith, 17 Ind. 132.

[b] (Sup. 1887)

Property exempt from execution is unaffected by execution liens, and may be sold or exchanged, even while writs of execution are in the hands of the proper officer.—Barnard v. Brown, 112 Ind. 53, 13 N. E. 401.

[c] (Sup. 1888)

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 608, providing that a judgment is a lien on real estate and chattels real, subject to execution, where the property of a resident householder at the time of rendition of a judgment is less than allowed by law as exempt from execution, and so continues, her grantee takes it exempt from any lien of the judgment or execution.—Dumbould v. Rowley, 113 Ind. 353, 15 N. E. 463.

[d] (Sup. 1889)

Where land has been duly set apart to a judgment debtor as exempt, he may thereafter convey it as he chooses, free from any lien of the judgment or right of the judgment creditor.—Ray v. Yarnell, 118 Ind. 112, 20 N. E. 705.

After property has been set off by the sheriff under the exemption law as exempt from sale on execution, it may be sold by the judgment debtor free from the lien of the execution and judgment.—Moss v. Jenkins, 45 N. E. 789, 146 Ind. 539.

§ 88. Rights of purchasers as to exemption.

[a] (Sup. 1858)

Where a debtor's whole property is less than $300, the execution creditor and officer having notice of the debtor's intention to claim the statute exemption, and having delayed the levy four months, the exemption will be enforced, without a formal claim, in favor of an intermediate vendee.—Vandibur v. Love, 10 Ind. 54.

[b] (Sup. 1886)

Where a mortgagor, at the time of executing the mortgage, had no property subject to execution, the mortgagee could hold the property against an execution issued against the mortgagor.—Durbin v. Haines, 99 Ind. 463.

[c] (Sup. 1886)

Property exempt from execution may be sold or given away, and still remain exempt, in the hands of the vendee or donee, from seizure and sale for the debts of the former owner.—Burdge v. Bolin, 106 Ind. 175, 6 N. E. 140, 55 Am. Rep. 724.

[d] (Sup. 1889)

Where land has been set apart to a judgment debtor as exempt, and is afterwards conveyed by him, his grantee is protected by the deed, and is not bound to oppose an issue of execution against the land, or to procure additional schedules to be filed by his grantor.—Ray v. Yarnell, 118 Ind. 112, 20 N. E. 705.

[e] (App. 1891)

A note which is exempt in the hands of a husband, as against a judgment recovered against him, will not be rendered subject to such judgment by an assignment to his wife.—Pickrell v. Jerauld, 1 Ind. App. 10, 27 N. E. 433, 50 Am. St. Rep. 192.

[f] (Sup. 1897)

The purchaser of real estate which the vendor could have claimed as exempt from sale on execution may maintain an action to quiet his title, if brought before the execution sale, but he cannot bring such action after the execution sale.—Moss v. Jenkins, 146 Ind. 539, 45 N. E. 789.

III. WAIVER OR FORFEITURE.

§ 89. Power to waive.

[a] (Sup. 1857)

The exemption of property from execution is a personal right which the debtor may waive or claim at his election.—State ex rel. Haven v. Meloque, 9 Ind. 196.

[b] (Sup. 1882)

Where the right of exemption exists, it cannot be waived by contract prior to the issuing of an execution on the judgment.—Maloney v. Newton, 85 Ind. 565, 44 Am. Rep. 46.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Exemp. § 112.

See, also, 18 Cyc. p. 1449.

§ 93. Acts or omissions constituting waiver in general.

[a] (Sup. 1860)

A written waiver of "appraisement laws" is also a waiver of the valuation laws.—Vesey v. Reynolds, 14 Ind. 444.

[b] (Sup. 1860)

The giving of a delivery bond by an execution debtor does not prevent him from afterwards claiming the property seized as exempt.—Eltzroth v. Webster, 15 Ind. 21, 77 Am. Dec. 78.

[c] (Sup. 1889)

Rev. St. § 2670, provides that, where a voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors is made, it shall be the duty of the appraisers to set off to the assignor such articles of personal property, or so much of the real estate mentioned in the inventory, as he may select, so that the same shall not exceed a certain amount, and to specify what articles of personal property and the value thereof, or what part of the real estate and its value, they have set apart to the assignor. Held, that the failure of the assignor to claim his exemptions at the time and manner prescribed by the statute constitutes a waiver thereof.—Graves v. Hinkle, 120 Ind. 157, 21 N. E. 328.

[cc] (App. 1891)

Where a note is exempt in the hands of a husband as against a judgment recovered against him, and is assigned to his wife, the fact that the exemption is not claimed until after the suit is brought on the note and the judgment is pleaded as a set-off does not divest the right to an exemption.—Pickrell v. Jerauld, 1 Ind. App. 10, 27 N. E. 433, 50 Am. St. Rep. 192.

[d] (App. 1891)

Rev. St. § 2670, as amended by Act March 29, 1879, provides that, if an assignor for the benefit of creditors be a resident householder, the appraisers shall set off to him such property mentioned in the inventory as he may select, not exceeding in value $600. Held, that where an assignor, a few days before the appraisement, asked his assignee to set off certain property, which the latter promised to do, the assignor's failure, by reason of sickness, to be present at the appraisement, will not constitute a waiver of his right to such set-off.—Doherty v. Ramsey, 1 Ind. App. 530, 27 N. E. 879, 50 Am. St. Rep. 223.

[e] (App. 1895)

The rule that, upon an assignment for the benefit of creditors, the right of exemption is waived unless, at the time of the appraisement, the assignor selects such property as he desires to have set off to him under Rev. St. 1894, § 2907 (Rev. St. 1881, § 2670), does not apply where the assignor foregoes the right of selecting specific articles out of a retail stock of merchandise, in pursuance of an agreement with the assignee that, in lieu of such property, he shall have the proceeds thereof to that amount in money when the stock is sold. Graves v. Hinkle (1889) 21 N. E. 328, 120 Ind. 157, distinguished.—Faulkner v. Jones, 13 Ind. App. 381, 41 N. E. 830.

[f] (App. 1895)

Failure to assert a right of exemption at the time and in the manner prescribed by the statute which confers such right is a waiver of the privilege.—Wagner v. Barden, 18 Ind. App. 571, 41 N. E. 1067.

[g] (Sup. 1897)

Under Rev. St. 1894, § 715, which provides that property not exceeding in value $600, owned by any resident householder, shall be exempt; and section 725, which provides that, to receive the benefit of the exemption, a debtor must deliver to the officer holding the execution a schedule of all his property, as now provided by law in case an exemption on execution is claimed,—the exemption is a personal privilege, which is waived by a failure to claim it before a sale, and the officer cannot set apart property as exempt unless he has received such an inventory.—Moss v. Jenkins, 45 N. E. 789, 146 Ind. 589.

[h] (App. 1907)

Where an execution defendant, who is a householder, fails to claim his statutory exemption until after the property is sold on execution, he waives his right to such exemption.—Miller v. Swbier, 40 Ind. App. 465, 79 N. E. 1092.

[i] (App. 1908)

A householder must claim his statutory exemption before a sale is made and the fact that he did not know whether the property would sell for more than enough to satisfy the liens thereon is not a sufficient excuse.—Broeker v. Morris, 42 Ind. App. 417, 85 N. E. 982.

§ 94. Mortgage or pledge as waiver.

[a] (Sup. 1858)

Seemle, that a man cannot mortgage land to one of his creditors who is willing to give him time—his wife not joining in the mortgage—and let his other creditors sell his other property to pay their claims, and then select the mortgaged property as exempt from execution, as against the mortgagee, when he shall seek to foreclose, as well as against the other creditors; nor can the right to select a portion out of many articles of property render any article actually exempt till the selection has been made.—Slaughter v. Detiney, 10 Ind. 103.

[b] (App. 1836)

Where plaintiff in an action to recover the possession of certain property, being a resident householder and entitled to the benefit of the exemption laws after the levy and before sale, presented to the sheriff a schedule of all his property of every description whatever, and demanded that the property be set off to him as exempt from execution, and it was appraised as required by law, but the sheriff refused to set it off to him, the plaintiff was entitled to have the property set off to him as exempt from execution, and the fact that it was mortgaged did not deprive him of the right, and the defendants were in the wrong in retaining the possession of the property, and could not shield themselves behind a condition broken of the mortgage, for that was a privilege personal to the mortgagee alone.—Adams v. Hessian, 39 N. E. 530, 11 Ind. App. 598.

§ 95. Consent to levy and sale.

The giving up of property to an officer on execution is not a waiver of the right of defendant afterwards to claim it as exempt.—Eltzroth v. Webster, 15 Ind. 21, 77 Am. Dec. 78.

§ 98. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1861)

Where a note contains a waiver of appraisalment and benefit of exemption, it is not necessary, when judgment is obtained thereon, to render a separate judgment for costs, since the waiver of appraisalment relates to both judgment on the debt and for the costs.—Martindale v. Tibbetts, 16 Ind. 200.

[b] (Sup. 1878)

A bond was given conditioned to hold the maker of a note harmless thereon, and provided that, on breach of its condition, the obligee should recover judgment without relief from valuation or appraisalment laws. Held, that the payee of the note, in an action to enforce the bond, was entitled to a judgment without relief.—South Side Planing Mill Ass'n v. Cutler & Savidge Lumber Co., 64 Ind. 560.

[c] (Sup. 1893)

It is error to render a personal judgment against a mortgagor for the recovery of the debt due without relief from valuation or appraisalment laws; where no such stipulation is contained either in the mortgage or in the notes which it is given to secure.—Duckwall v. Kisner, 136 Ind. 99, 35 N. E. 607.

§ 104. — Fraudulent conveyance or concealment.

[a] (Sup. 1848)

If, between the rendition of judgment and the issuing of execution, defendant fraudulently conveys all his property to a third person, and it is afterwards levied on to satisfy the execution, he is not entitled to hold $125 worth of the property exempt from execution.—Mandlove v. Burton, 1 Ind. 39, Smith, 3.

[b] (App. 1891)

An attempt by the assignor to commit fraud by assigning $10,200 to another for his own use, a few days prior to his assignment, will not effect his right to exemption, particularly when, subsequent to the assignment, he gave his assignee an order on such person for the money.—*Doherty v. § 108. — In general.

Where a judgment was obtained against an insolvent owning an equitable interest in land, and an action was brought to subject his interest to the judgment, and the court found that the insolvent owned personal property to the value of about $100, and was entitled to about $200 out of the value of his equitable interest to make up the $300 to which he was entitled as an exemption, and that he owed $100 which was a lien on the land, and the land was sold and purchased by the judgment plaintiffs, and they tendered the amount of the lien, but did not tender the $200 exemption, an order to convey to the purchaser the equitable estate in fee was unauthorized.—Smith v. Vanscoten, 20 Ind. 221.

§ 112. — Foreclosure proceedings.

[a] (Sup. 1880)

The statute exempting property from seizure and sale for debt does not apply to cases where the debtor voluntarily conveys, by way of mortgage, his property to the creditor.—Love v. Blair, 72 Ind. 281.

§ 113. — Set-off and counterclaim.

A. obtained against B. a judgment for an amount less than the statute exemption. A. had no property whatever from which he could claim his exemption, except this judgment. Held, that B. could not set off against it a judgment against A. which B. had obtained by assignment.—Puett v. Beard, 86 Ind. 172, 44 Am. Rep. 290.

[b] (Sup. 1885)

In an action to have defendant's judgment set off against one held by the plaintiff, and for judgment for the balance, the defendant has a right to claim his judgment as part of his exemption from execution, all of his property, including such judgment, being less in value than $600.—Butner v. Bowser, 104 Ind. 255, 3 N. E. 889.

[c] (Sup. 1888)

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 5124, a party will not be permitted to set off a judgment held by him against one held by a husband and wife, where the husband and wife claim their interest in the judgment held by them as exempt.—Junker v. Hustes, 113 Ind. 524, 16 N. E. 197.

[d] Under Rev. St. 1881, § 703, providing that "property, not exceeding in value $600, owned by any resident householder, shall not be liable to sale on execution or any other final process," a plaintiff, whose entire property does not exceed $600, may claim as exempt the demand in suit, and thus defeat a judgment pleaded against him in set-off.—(Sup. 1888) Carpenter v. Cool, 115 Ind. 134, 17 N. E. 266; (App. 1891) Coppage v. Gregg, 1 Ind. App. 112, 27 N. E. 570.

In an action on a promissory note, defendant pleaded, by way of set-off, plaintiff's indebtedness to him, exceeding the note sued on; to which plaintiff replied that he was a resident householder of the state, and had less property than the law exempted from execution, and claimed the note in suit as exempt. Held, on demurrer, that the reply was good. A debtor may rightfully claim a promissory note as exempt from execution, although the maker holds notes or judgments against him.—Smith v. Sills, 126 Ind. 205, 25 N. E. 881.

[f] (App. 1891)

Where, in an action on a note by the assignee thereof, the assignor was made a party plaintiff, and the proceeds of the note, were claimed as exempt against a judgment pleaded in set-off by defendant, and which had been obtained before the assignment, the fact that no execution had been issued on the judgment did not divest the right of exemption.—Pickrell v. Jerauld, 27 N. E. 433, 1 Ind. App. 10, 50 Am. St. Rep. 192.

[g] (App. 1891)

A debtor may have his right of exemption against a set-off, although the creditor be dead; Rev. St. 1881, § 852, having no application to the case of an insolvent debtor who seeks to have his property exempted from judicial process.—Coppage v. Gregg, 27 N. E. 570, 1 Ind. App. 112.

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 703, providing that property not exceeding in value $300 owned by any resident householder shall be exempt from sale on execution or any other final process, a plaintiff whose entire property does not exceed $300 may claim as exempt the demand in suit, and thus defeat a judgment pleaded as a set-off against him.—Id.

[h] (App. 1893)

A debtor, plaintiff in an action on a note, and whose property does not exceed $600, may claim such note as exempt against a note pleaded as a set-off to his note, and may do this by way of reply to the answer of set-off.—Coffing v. Dungan, 6 Ind. App. 386, 33 N. E. 815; Id., 6 Ind. App. 388, 33 N. E. 816.

§ 116. — In general.

2 Gav. & H. St. p. 370 (2 Rev. St. p. 337), providing that no mortgage or sale of the real estate exempt under the act shall be valid, when executed by a married man, unless the deed be acknowledged by the wife in due form of law, such exemption is not made absolute; but, where a mortgage is placed on exempt property, it must be claimed as exempt in order to protect such right.—Sullivan v. Winslow, 22 Ind. 153.

[b] (Sup. 1873)

A debtor, desiring to have the benefit of the exemption, must claim it and give notice of claim; and notice under one execution does not dispense with notice under a different execution.—Finley v. Sly, 44 Ind. 206.

[c] (Sup. 1876)

Where, on supplementary proceedings, a finding is had that the execution debtor is a resident householder, and that he has no property subject to execution, except the amount exempt by law, defendant is entitled to a judgment in his favor without demanding his exemption.—Wallace v. Lawyer, 54 Ind. 501, 23 Am. Rep. 661.

[d] (Sup. 1882)

If one would claim property as exempt from levy, he must make the claim at the time and in the manner provided by law.—Boesker v. Pickett, 81 Ind. 554.

[e] (Sup. 1884)

Where a judgment debtor would avail himself of his exemption, he must make the schedule required by the statute.—Guerin v. Kraner, 97 Ind. 533.

[f] (Sup. 1889)

While it is true that the right to claim property as exempt from execution is the personal privilege of the debtor as such exemption is for his benefit, the law presumes that he will make such claim.—State ex rel. Hulman v. Harper, 22 N. E. 80, 120 Ind. 23.

A defendant, entitled to claim property as exempt, may exercise his right at any time before sale.—Pate v. Swann, 7 Blackf. 500.

[b] After the court has rendered final judgment for the sale of property attached, it is too late for the attachment defendant to claim it as exempt from sale.—(Sup. 1860) State ex rel. Biddinger v. Manly, 15 Ind. 8; (1868) Perkins v. Bragg, 29 Ind. 507; (1883) Haas v. Shaw, 91 Ind. 384, 46 Am. Rep. 607.

[c] (Sup. 1860)

A mortgagor cannot, after the mortgaged property has been ordered to be sold on foreclosure, claim the property as exempt from execution.—Slaughter v. Detiney, 15 Ind. 49.

[d] (Sup. 1883)

A mortgagor should assert his claim at the hearing for the appointment of a receiver, and is not entitled to claim as exempt from execution rents accruing from mortgaged property, where a decree has been rendered adjudging that the mortgagee is entitled to the rents, appointing a receiver, and directing him to collect and apply the rents to the mortgage debt.—Storm v. Ermantrout, 89 Ind. 214.

[e] (Sup. 1883)

Rev. St. 1881, § 918 (Code 1852, § 161), provided that an order of attachment should require the sheriff to seize and take into his possession the property of the defendant in his county not exempt from execution. Held, that if in any case defendant claimed that his attached property was exempt, and not subject to seizure under an order of attachment, it was necessary that he should assert such claim before final judgment in the attachment proceedings.—Haas v. Shaw, 91 Ind. 384, 46 Am. Rep. 607.

[f] (Sup. 1884)

A judgment defendant may assert his right to his exemption before levy.—State ex rel. Stallings v. Read, 94 Ind. 103.

[g] (Sup. 1899)

Where the issues in an action to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance have been submitted, and the court has made and filed special findings, the defendant cannot, by application to the court, raise the question of his right to exemption.—McNally v. White, 54 N. E. 794, 56 N. E. 214, 154 Ind. 163.

[h] (App. 1900)

A debtor whose property has been levied on under an execution may claim his exemptions at any time before the execution sale.—Stout v. Price, 24 Ind. App. 300, 55 N. E. 964, 56 N. E. 857.

§ 121. — In general.

[a] Where the right to claim an exemption clearly exists, formal and technical objections should not be allowed to defeat it, if it has been asserted substantially as the law requires. —(Sup. 1883) Haas v. Shaw, 91 Ind. 384, 46 Am. Rep. 607; (1886) Burdge v. Bolin, 106 Ind. 175, 6 N. E. 140, 55 Am. Rep. 724.

[b] (App. 1891)

When a right of exemption is claimed in a pleading in court, the party claiming it must show that all the property of the debtor does not exceed $600 in value.—Coppage v. Gregg, 27 N. E. 570, 1 Ind. App. 112.

[c] (App. 1904)

In an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance from a husband to wife, the question of the right of the husband to an exemption as a resident householder cannot be raised by motion to modify, but should be presented by answer and tendering issue thereon before trial.—Bass v. Citizens' Trust Co., 70 N. E. 400, 32 Ind. App. 583.

§ 122. — Affidavit.

A wife's affidavit of exemption of property from levy, made in her husband's absence, is not to be deemed insufficient for a trifling and immaterial informality.—Astley v. Capron, 80 Ind. 167.

[b] (Sup. 1883)

Although a claimant of exemptions from execution owns other property than that mentioned in his schedule, and is liable for perjury on a false statement in the affidavit, he is not thereby precluded from claiming the property as exempt.—Over v. Shannon, 91 Ind. 90.

Where a claim for exemption is substantially in accordance with the statute, and the schedule is sworn to as the statute requires, the sheriff cannot refuse to appraise and set aside the property on the ground of perjury in the affidavit.—Id.

A schedule filed by an execution defendant, to entitle him to exemption, is not bad because, after swearing that it contained "all my property," it omitted "within or without this state," and in enumerating "goods, credits, money," etc., it omitted "rights."—State ex rel. Stallings v. Read, 94 Ind. 103.

[d] (App. 1893)

Rev. St. 1881, § 715, provides that, when an execution defendant is absent from the state, his wife may make out and verify the schedule of his property, and claim and receive the exemption provided in the act. Held, that where the wife, in her affidavit and schedule filed with the sheriff, sets out specifically all the property, credits, and rights of her husband, within and without the state, of which she has any knowledge, and her affidavit contains in substance all that the statute requires, the fact that she adds thereto the statement that there may be something which her husband owns in some other state of which she has no knowledge will not defeat the claim for exemption.—Eisenhauer v. Dill, 6 Ind. App. 188, 33 N. E. 220.

§ 123. — Inventory or schedule.

Failure to file schedule as waiver of right to exemptions, see ante, § 93.

Necessity of setting out schedule in pleading in action to enforce rights, see post, § 147.

Pleading filing of schedule, see post, § 147.

[a] (Sup. 1860)

Under the provisions of the exemption law of 1852 (2 Rev. St. p. 336), the execution defendant was not required to make out a schedule of his property, but only to point out to the officer the property he claimed; and a claim to hold all his property as exempt from sale was good, under that law, without a designation of each article claimed.—Mark v. State ex rel. Bowless, 15 Ind. 98.

[b] (Sup. 1876)

An inventory presented by an execution defendant to the officer purported to be an inventory in the language of Act March 5, 1859, § 1, as amended in 1861, but omitted the words "within or without this state." The affidavit attached thereto stated that the foregoing inventory contained a full account of all the property held by him on the date of the issuing of the execution, and that none of said property had been since disposed of, except certain articles mentioned, and the inventory showed the disposition made of them and of the proceeds. Held, that it was sufficient.—Gregory v. Latchem, 53 Ind. 449.

[c] (Sup. 1878)

The omission of articles from the schedule of a judgment debtor's personal property does not deprive him of the right to claim his exemptions as to the articles actually scheduled.—Douch v. Rahmer, 61 Ind. 64.

A sheriff is not authorized by law to question the correctness of schedule of property claimed as exempt by an execution debtor.—Id.

Where an execution debtor presents an inventory and schedule of property, duly verified, claimed as exempt, evidence is not admissible in an action to recover the same to show that such schedule did not include all his property.—Id.

Where an officer is sued by an execution creditor for failure to seize property on execution, and it appears that the officer has accepted in good faith a schedule from the debtor, the schedule will receive a liberal construction, not only in behalf of the defendant, but also of the officer.—State ex rel. Stallings v. Read, 94 Ind. 103.

The caption of a debtor's schedule of exempt property was as follows: "Schedule of property belonging to" the debtor—followed by a date which was followed by a specific description of the property, which was followed by a sworn statement reciting that the debtor swore that the foregoing was a complete schedule of all his property owned and belonging to him on the specified date, and that he had not sold any property since that date to the present time other than that accounted for in the schedule. Held, that the schedule sufficiently showed that the debtor had not disposed of any property since the date of the issuance of the writ of execution.—Id.

Where the sworn statement following a debtor's schedule of exempt property recited that the debtor did swear that the foregoing was a full and complete schedule of all his property "real and personal, goods, credits, moneys and effects and choses in action," the schedule was not defective for failure to contain, after the word "money" in the statement, the words "or on deposit," nor was it bad for failure to use the word "rights."—Id.

Where a debtor's schedule of exempt property describes all the property owned by the debtor on the day of the issuance of the writ of execution and shows that he still owned it at the time the schedule was executed, the schedule is not open to the objection that it does not state that the debtor had not disposed of any property since the date of the issuance of the writ.—Id.

In an action to set aside a sale of land which had been set apart as exempt from execution, a schedule describing the property as "a life estate in a house and two lots in A.," with an affidavit that plaintiff owned no other property, was sufficient.—Barkley v. Mahon, 95 Ind. 101.

[f] (App. 1891)

When a right of exemption is claimed in a pleading in court, it is only necessary that the party who pleads the exemption shall file a statement substantially complying with the requirements of the statute in a schedule.—Coppage v. Gregg, 27 N. E. 570, 1 Ind. App. 112.

[g] (App. 1899)

A schedule of a judgment debtor, claiming an exemption of property, is fatally defective, where the affidavit thereto does not show that it contains all the debtor's real estate, as required by Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 714.—Kahn v. Hayes, 53 N. E. 430, 22 Ind. App. 182.

§ 125. Appraisement.

Waiver of appraisement as waiver of right to exemptions, see ante, § 93.

[a] (Sup. 1858)

Where an execution defendant claims land as exempt from execution, and selects a freeholder as an appraiser, and such freeholder is not a householder, the sheriff must choose an appraiser for him.—Slaughter v. Detiney, 10 Ind. 103.

[b] (Sup. 1878)

Under 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 355, §§ 9-11, providing that the officer holding an execution, where the debtor claims property as exempt, shall cause the same to be appraised, the act required of the sheriff is ministerial, and he is without discretion in the matter.—Pudney v. Burkhart, 62 Ind. 179.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

Under an exemption statute providing that, in case either party failed to select an appraiser, the same shall be selected by the officer holding the execution, the failure of a debtor to select an appraiser competent to act does not deprive him of the benefit of the statute.—Kelley v. McFadden, 80 Ind. 536.

[d] (Sup. 1881)

Where a judgment under which an execution sale was made was for a sum exceeding $1,000, more than $300 of which was collectible under the judgment without relief from valuation or appraisement laws, it was not error to make the sale without appraisement.—Mugge v. Helgemeier, 81 Ind. 120.

[e] (Sup. 1883)

Where an execution defendant claimed real estate exempt in the manner required by statute, the sheriff cannot make a valid sale thereof by disregarding the claim of exemption and declining to have an appraisement of real estate claimed as exempt.—Over v. Shannon, 91 Ind. 99.

The fact that perjury was committed in swearing to false schedule will not give validity to a sale of real estate claimed as exempt on failure of the sheriff to make an appraisement as required by the statute.—Id.

In the valuation of the plaintiff's property a demand in suit is to be taken at its real value, and not necessarily as the full amount of the demand.—Coppage v. Gregg, 1 Ind. App. 112, 27 N. E. 570.

Where a demand in suit is claimed as exempt against a judgment pleaded in set-off, and in a reply the plaintiff avers that all his property does not exceed the amount of the statutory exemption, and sets up a schedule thereof, it is not necessary that the property be appraised as in case of a levy under an execution.—Id.

§ 126. Selection.

Failure to make claim as waiver of right to exemptions, see ante, § 93.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

Where a levy is made on the property of a resident householder entitled to exemption, he is not required to designate the particular articles which he desires set off to him until an appraisal has been made, since until that time it could not be known but that his entire property would be exempt, and, if that was not so, he would be entitled to make his selection with reference to the respective items as appraised.—Kelley v. McFadden, 80 Ind. 536.

[a] (Sup. 1865)

Where an execution defendant notifies the sheriff who holds the execution that he claims certain property as exempt from seizure, and has the same set off to him, the property is relieved from the lien of the execution.—Hall v. Hough, 24 Ind. 273.

[b] (Sup. 1879)

In applying the exemption act of March 20, 1879, by the terms of which the exemption was not to extend to debts contracted before the passage of the act, the additional $300 worth of property rendered exempt by the act is to be set apart from the bulk of the assets, and the debtor allowed such a portion thereof as his debts contracted after the act took effect bears to the whole of the debts, and distributing the residue thereof ratably to the creditors whose claims arose prior to the statute in addition to what they may receive in common with the subsequent creditors.—O'Neil v. Beck, 69 Ind. 239.

Where, on an assignment being made, there are debts contracted before Act March 20, 1879, increasing exemptions from $300 to $600, took effect, and also debts contracted after the taking effect of the act, the additional $300 worth of property should be set aside from the bulk of the assets, and the debtor should be allowed such a proportion thereof as his subsequent debts bear to the whole of his debts, and the residue thereof should be distributed to the prior creditors, in addition to what they may receive in common with the subsequent creditors.—Id.

[c] (Sup. 1884)

Where, in an action to set aside a sheriff's sale of certain real estate, the evidence fails to show that the property in controversy had been actually set apart to plaintiff by the sheriff before the commencement of the action as exempt from the execution under which it was afterwards sold by him, a finding for plaintiff cannot be sustained, as such evidence was indispensable to her right to recover.—Barkley v. Mahon, 95 Ind. 101.

[a] (Sup. 1890)

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 703, which allows judgment debtors an exemption to the amount of $600, it is no answer to a claim for an exemption that the execution is an alias, and that defendant has been allowed an exemption as against the original execution.—Chatten v. Snider, 126 Ind. 387, 26 N. E. 166.

§ 133. — Levy on or sale of exempt property.

[a] (App. 1893)

Where, before the sale of property levied on, the debtor delivers to the sheriff a schedule of his property, demanding that he set off the amount exempt from sale, and the sheriff fails to do so, the debtor may proceed against him for the amount of the exemption, and also against the execution creditor and purchaser, who, with full knowledge of the rights of the debtor, receives the benefit of such action by the sheriff.—Eisenhauer v. Dill, 6 Ind. App. 188, 33 N. E. 220.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Exemp. § 161.

§ 134. — Evasion of exemption law.

[a] (Sup. 1885)

Where a just debt is transferred outside the state, where, on account of different exemption laws, it is collected with greater facility and more effectually than it could have been within the state, no action for damages will lie therefor, though the debtor may have been annoyed and put to additional inconvenlence by such transfer, and though the statute of the state makes such transfer a misdemeanor.—Uppinghouse v. Mundel, 103 Ind. 238, 2 N. E. 719.

One who carries a claim "upon his own person" out of the state, with intent to deprive the debtor, who is within its jurisdiction, of the benefit of exemption laws, "sends" it out of the state, within the meaning of Rev. St. 1881, § 2162, which provides for the punishment of every person who, with intent to deprive a resident of the state of his rights under its exemption laws, "sends or causes to be sent" out of the state any claim against a debtor within its jurisdiction, for collection by garnishment.—State v. Dittmar, 120 Ind. 54, 22 N. E. 88; Id., 120 Ind. 388, 22 N. E. 299.

[c] (App. 1891)

A creditor who, by assigning his claim, to a resident of another state for the purpose of evading the exemption laws of his state, an act forbidden by Rev. St. 1881, §§ 2162, 2163, collects his claim against a debtor who resides in the same state with himself from property that would have been exempt had suit been brought in his own state, is liable therefor to his debtor in a civil action for damages.—*Kestler v. Where a conveyance of land was set aside on the ground of fraud, a motion to allow defendant an exemption of $300 out of the proceeds of the sale was properly refused, where no issue was tendered on the subject at the trial, and no evidence offered that defendant was a resident householder.—*Chandler v. § 140. — Injunction in general.

[a] (Sup. 1879)

Since under 2 Rev. St. 1852, p. 147 (2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 222, § 488), providing that death of an execution defendant after delivery of the writ for service shall not affect the sheriff's proceedings thereon, except that the absolute allowance of property to the widow shall be exempt from levy and sale, the interest of a widow in her deceased husband's real estate is exempted from sale under execution issued during his life, she cannot maintain an action to enjoin the sale.—Mead v. McFadden, 68 Ind. 340.

[b] (Sup. 1889)

The statute secures to a bona fide resident of the state certain property exempt from execution, and a person coming within its terms, being entitled to claim such property as exempt from execution, is entitled to an injunction to restrain the sheriff from selling it.—*Robinson v. § 143. — In general.

[a] (App. 1893)

Where the sheriff and the execution creditor have, at the time the schedule and claim for exemption were filed, given strong assurances that the claim would be granted, and that there would be no trouble whatever about allowing it, they are not in a position to urge technical objections to defeat the right of exemption.—Eisenbauer v. Dill, 6 Ind. App. 188, 33 N. E. 220.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Exemp. § 163.

§ 146. Parties.

[a] (Sup. 1887)

The grantor and grantee of land which the former was entitled to claim as exempt from execution may join in a complaint against creditors of the former who had obtained judgments, issued executions, and filed transcripts of their judgments, which were taken before a justice of the peace, in the clerk's office, prior to such conveyance, the former to have his right to exemption established and the latter to have his title quieted.—Barnard v. Brown, 112 Ind. 53, 13 N. E. 401.

[b] (App. 1893)

Rev. St. 1881, § 715, provides that, when an execution defendant is absent from the state, his wife may make out and verify the schedule of his property, and claim and receive the exemption provided in the act, and "exercise all the rights which would belong to her husband were he present." Held that, where the sheriff and execution creditor fail to pay the amount of the statutory exemption, the wife may maintain an action therefor, either in her own name or in the name of herself and her husband.—Eisenhauer v. Dill, 6 Ind. App. 138, 33 N. E. 220.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Exemp. § 170.

See, also, 18 Cyc. pp. 1400, 1491.

§ 147. Pleading.

[a] (Sup. 1888)

Under 2 Rev. St. p. 404, § 71, providing that, in replevin before a justice, affidavit of plaintiff must state that the property has not been taken under execution or other writ against him, an affidavit that plaintiff was a resident householder, and entitled to possession of certain personalty; that said property was exempt; that he made a demand that it be set off to him, and defendant constable refused to set off said property after levy—held insufficient.—Green v. Aker, 11 Ind. 223.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

An allegation by one claiming an exemption of property from execution, that "defendant filed with the sheriff a schedule of his property," does not sufficiently show the filing of such a schedule as the law requires.—Over v. Shannon, 75 Ind. 352.

[c] (Sup. 1884)

In pleading the statutory exemption for goods seized on execution, it is not necessary for the execution defendant to set out the schedule.—State ex rel. Stallings v. Read, 94 Ind. 103.

[d] (Sup. 1884)

Where an exemption is made by an officer in a case not allowed by law and he subsequently sells the property regardless of the exemption, the facts on which he relies in justification of his act in selling it must be especially pleaded by him.—Barkley v. Mahon, 95 Ind. 101.

A complaint in replevin for property claimed to be exempt, which alleged the filing of a schedule, and that the property was of less value than $800, but failed to allege that the schedule was such as the law requires, and that the judgment on which the execution was issued, under which the property was seized, was founded on contract, was insufficient.—Newcomer v. Alexander, 96 Ind. 453.

[f] (Sup. 1884)

A complaint to set aside a sheriff's sale of property claimed as exempt should allege the filing of a true schedule of all the debtor's property, as required by Rev. St. 1881, §§ 713, 714.—Guerin v. Kraner, 97 Ind. 533.

[g] (Sup. 1887)

In an action by the grantor and grantee of land which the former was entitled to claim as exempt from execution as against his creditors, who had issued executions against the land, it is sufficient that the complaint state the value of the grantor's property at the time of the filing of the transcripts of the judgments on which execution was to be issued, and of the conveyance, showing it to be exempt from execution at the time, without stating the value at the time of instituting the action, and no demand need be alleged.—Barnard v. Brown, 112 Ind. 53, 13 N. E. 401.

[h] (App. 1891)

Where a demand in suit is claimed as exempt, in order to defeat a judgment pleaded as a set-off, such exemption is sufficiently claimed by a reply which gives a schedule of all the plaintiff's property, and avers that it does not exceed the amount allowed the debtor as exempt.—Coppage v. Gregg, 1 Ind. App. 112, 27 N. E. 570.

[i] (App. 1893)

In a suit against an execution creditor and the sheriff for the amount of the statutory exemption, the fact that the complaint alleges that the debtor filed an affidavit and inventory containing a full account of all his property "at the date of the execution," while the statute requires the affidavit to state his property "at the date of issuing the writ," is immaterial.—Eisenhauer v. Dill, 6 Ind. App. 188, 33 N. E. 220.

[j] (App. 1903)

The right of exemption is given only upon contracts express or implied, and, when such right is pleaded, it must appear that the judgment was of a character entitling the claimant to the exemption.—Franklin Ins. Co. v. Feist, 68 N. E. 188, 31 Ind. App. 390.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

See, also, 18 Cyc. p. 1491.

§ 148. Evidence.[a] (Sup. 1862)

In a suit to replevy property claimed to be exempt from execution, the claimant must prove a demand to have his property set off, that he furnished a schedule, and proved the value thereof.—Graham v. Crockett, 18 Ind. 119.

[b] (Sup. 1876)

A sufficient inventory of property claimed as exempt, presented to the officer holding the execution, before sale, is material evidence in an action by the execution defendant against said officer and the execution plaintiff to recover possession of articles sold by the officer to the execution plaintiff, under such execution, in disregard of the demand for their exemption from such sale.—Gregory v. Latchem, 53 Ind. 449.

[c] (Sup. 1882)

In replevy by a resident householder to recover property levied on as exempt from execution, the burden is on plaintiff to show that the judgment on which the writ issued was rendered on a contract, and that plaintiff owned the property.—Thompson v. Ross, 87 Ind. 156.

[d] (Sup. 1884)

In an action to set aside a sale of exempt property under execution, the execution, advertisement, and appraisal are proper evidence for plaintiff.—Barkley v. Mahon, 95 Ind. 101.

[e] (Sup. 1885)

A schedule and affidavit made by the wife of the debtor, who was absent, and presented to the sheriff, with a demand for exemption from levy, pursuant to the statute, are admissible in evidence in replevin against the sheriff for goods levied on by him under execution and claimed by plaintiff as exempt.—Astley v. Capron, 89 Ind. 167.

[f] (Sup. 1885)

An execution defendant in replevin for property seized must show that it was exempt from execution.—Hartlep v. Cole, 101 Ind. 458.

[g] (Sup. 1894)

In an action to set aside a sale under a judgment on the ground that the property sold was exempt, it must appear that the debtor was a resident householder at the time the execution was in the hands of the sheriff, or at the time of the sale; and the fact that he is a resident householder at the time of filing his complaint is insufficient.—Kingen v. Stroh, 136 Ind. 610, 36 N. E. 519.

[h] (App. 1895)

In attachment a schedule of the property seized, and claimed by defendant as exempt, filed with the answer as an exhibit, may be looked to for a description of the property, though not available in determining the sufficiency of the answer.—Wagner v. Barden, 13 Ind. App. 571, 41 N. E. 1067.

§ 150. Trial.[a] (Sup. 1883)

In replevin for property alleged to have been taken on execution in violation of plaintiff's exemption rights as a householder, the court charged: "As to what constitutes a householder within the meaning of the statute, I instruct you that a householder is the father or head of a family whom he supports or assists in supporting. It is not necessary that the family should keep house in the ordinary sense of that term. The father, as the head of the family, may put his family out to board, and still be entitled to the benefit of the law. If the plaintiff, at the time of the demand for exemption, and after the bringing of the suit, was supporting his wife or aiding in her support, and was intending to continue to live with her and to return to Indiana to reside or remain permanently or indefinitely when his business in Colorado was terminated and finished, then he was a householder within the meaning of the term in the statute providing for the exemption of property from sale on execution." Held, that there was no substantial error in the instruction, and a contention that it was imperfect and ambiguous and not sufficiently clear and full as a definition of the term "householder" was untenable.—Astley v. Capron, 89 Ind. 107.

In replevin for property alleged to have been taken on execution in violation of plaintiff's exemption rights, the court charged that, "as to the nature of the debt to satisfy which the property was taken, the plaintiff introduced no evidence, but the judgment on which the execution was issued was read in evidence, and that shows it was founded upon a contract. This evidence was introduced by the defendant it is true, but the plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of it, as if he had introduced it himself." Held, that there was no substantial error in the instruction.—Id.

In replevin for property alleged to have been taken on execution in violation of plaintiff's exemption rights, the court charged that "it is unnecessary that I should give you any particular instructions in regard to value. The evidence is before you, and if, in your judgment, you can determine from it the value of the property to a reasonable certainty, it is sufficient. All you have to do is to say what that value is." Held that, the court having already told the jury that the value of the property must be established to a reasonable certainty by a preponderance of the evidence, a contention that the instruction was erroneous as likely to mislead the jury was untenable.—Id.

In replevin for property taken by an officer belonging to a debtor absent from the state, the complaint averred that the debtor's wife filed a schedule claiming an exemption, as she was entitled to do under the statute in the absence from the state of her husband. The court charged that the affidavit attached to the inventory showed that certain articles therein named had been sold, but did not show what disposition was made of the proceeds, but that the same articles were mentioned in the inventory and referred to by the affidavit as marked B. and evidence of the value of the articles had been given to the jury; that, if the jury should find that the value of the articles together with the value of other property named in the inventory did not exceed $300, then that would be a sufficient accounting of the proceeds of the articles sold to comply with the law in that respect. Held, that there was no error in the instruction.—Id.

In a suit to set off judgments, a finding that defendant is insolvent, and has no property subject to execution, does not imply a finding that all his other property does not amount to $600,—the exemption in cases founded on contract under Rev. St. 1881, § 703,—and so require a denial of relief.—Carpenter v. Oool, 115 Ind. 134, 17 N. E. 266.

[c] (App. 1891)

Where a judgment is pleaded in set-off to plaintiff's demand, and in reply plaintiff claims his demand as exempt, and avers that all his property, of which he files a schedule, does not exceed the amount of the statutory exemption, the truth of such averments is a question for the jury.—Coppage v. Gregg, 1 Ind. App. 112, 27 N. E. 570.

A finding by the court in attachment proceedings that the debtor is entitled to hold exempt certain personal property which, when attached, was appraised at $38.25, and also $321, the balance due on a note executed to him by one of the garnishees, which together are worth less than $600, is defective, in that it does not contain sufficient facts to make the aggregate value a matter of computation, and not of conjecture.—Emerson & Fisher Co. v. Marshall, 4 Ind. App. 265, 30 N. E. 1009.

Act 1867, directing that a person held in custody under a warrant issued by the governor of Indiana upon the requisition of the governor of another state, as a fugitive from justice, shall be taken before a judge of the circuit or common pleas court for identification, is constitutional, since the act of congress declaring that it shall be the duty of the governor to secure the arrest of the person demanded has not determined what steps he shall take, and how he shall identify the person arrested, and the act does no more than secure the writ of habeas corpus to every one so arrested.—*Robinson v. [a] (Sup. 1886)

The appellant committed a felony in Michigan, and fled to Indiana, where he committed another felony, for which he was indicted, arrested, and imprisoned. While he was in prison a requisition from the governor of Michigan was delivered to the governor of Indiana, who issued his warrant. After this warrant was issued, the appellant escaped, and fled to Ohio; whereupon a requisition was obtained, and, on a warrant issued by the governor of Ohio, the appellant was brought back to the prison from which he had escaped, and after a time the prosecutor entered a nolle prosequi. Held, that the appellant was rightfully surrendered to the agents of the state of Michigan.—*Hackney v. § 32. Indictment or affidavit charging offense.

In requisition proceedings it is sufficient if the copy of the affidavit duly certified by the governor of the demanding state is produced and delivered by him, with the demand, to the governor of the state in which the accused is found.—Johnston v. Vanamringe, 5 Blackf. 311.

[b] (Sup. 1867)

In order to give the governor of this state jurisdiction to issue his warrant for the arrest, under the act of March 9, 1867, of a fugitive from justice of another state, an authentic copy of the affidavit charging the offense committed must be produced.—Ex parte Pfützer, 28 Ind. 450.

[c] (Sup. 1878)

Mere recitals in the demanding governor's requisition are not sufficient, of themselves, to authorize the arrest and surrender of the alleged fugitive.—Hartman v. Aveline, 63 Ind. 344, 30 Am. Rep. 217.

[d] (Sup. 1879)

A requisition of the governor of another state, accompanied by a copy of an affidavit charging petitioner with the commission of a certain act, and by a certificate of such governor that such act constitutes a crime under the law of that state, makes a prima facie showing authorizing petitioner's arrest.—Tullis v. Fleming, 69 Ind. 15.

[e] (Sup. 1886)

Where the papers and information accompanying a requisition for a fugitive from justice are authenticated by the signature of the prosecuting attorney and by affidavit, it is sufficient.—Hackney v. Welsh, 107 Ind. 253, 8 N. E. 141, 57 Am. Rep. 101.

It is not necessary for the governor who issues a requisition for a fugitive from justice to certify that the information and other papers accompanying the requisition are genuine; it is sufficient to certify that they are duly authenticated.—Id.

§ 36. Warrant for arrest and delivery.

The governor of Kentucky made his requisition on the governor of this state for one C. as a fugitive from justice, and a writ for her arrest was issued. It set forth that requisition had been made, etc., in which was the allegation that C. had been indicted for, etc., a certified copy of which indictment accompanied the requisition, and directed C. to be delivered to N. as agent to convey her to Kentucky. N. returned, to a writ of habeas corpus, that he held C. in custody by virtue of the writ, which he annexed. Held, that it was not necessary that a copy of the indictment should accompany the writ, that the writ was prima facie evidence of the indictment as alleged, and that it sufficiently showed N.'s authority to make the arrest, without producing any authority from the governor of Kentucky.—Nichols v. Cornelius, 7 Ind. 611.

[b] (Sup. 1867)

In case of the arrest of a person upon a requisition from the governor of another state, it is not necessary that a copy of any indictment or affidavit accompany the warrant, the warrant, and the indictment and requisition therein recited, constitute good cause for the arrest and detention.—Robinson v. Flanders, 29 Ind. 10.

Under the act of congress making it the duty of the executive authority of a state or territory to arrest and secure till notice, etc., a fugitive from justice from another state, a general warrant from the governor is good, though not directed to any named officer.—Id.

There is nothing either in Rev. St. U. S. § 5278, or in Rev. St. Ind. 1876, p. 420, upon the subject of fugitives from justice, which requires that a warrant shall be issued for the fugitive upon the charge against him before his return can be demanded from the state or territory to which he may have fled. It is the indictment or affidavit, and not the issuing of a warrant, which constitutes the charge against a fugitive upon which his return can be required.—Tullis v. Fleming, 69 Ind. 15.

An extradition warrant should show a demand made on the Governor of the state of refuge that the prisoner has been charged before a tribunal with power to try, with the commission of a crime in the demanding state, and that a regular proceeding has been begun therein to punish accused for such crime, together with the time and place of the commission.—Kemper v. Metzger, 169 Ind. 112, 81 N. E. 603.

A requisition for the return of an alleged fugitive should show a copy of the indictment duly certified as authentic, charging the fugitive with the crime; but the Governor's warrant of arrest need not show that the crime was regularly and sufficiently charged in the demanding state.—Id.

A Governor's warrant in extradition, reciting a demand on him, and setting out a copy of a regular indictment pending in the demanding state, sufficiently shows the demand and the time and place of the commission of the offense.—Id.

Act Cong. Feb. 12, 1793, c. 7, § 1, 1 Stat. 302 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3597) provides that when the Governor of any state demands any person as a fugitive from justice of the Governor of another state, and produces a copy of an indictment charging the person demanded with crime, certified as authentic by the Governor of the demanding state, it shall be the duty of the Governor of the state to which the fugitive has fled to cause him to be arrested. Acts Ind. 1905, p. 588, c. 160, § 26, provides that, upon the demand of the Governor of another state to surrender any fugitive, the Governor of this state shall issue his warrant reciting the fact of demand and the charge upon which it is based, with the time and place of the commission of the offense, directed generally to any sheriff, etc. Held, that such acts do not require that the Governor of this state shall make it appear in his warrant that a crime has been regularly and sufficiently charged against the person demanded by the laws of the demanding state, but requisition papers and warrant issued thereon, which are in strict compliance with the act of Congress and of this state, constitute a prima facie case that the person demanded is properly charged in the demanding state with a crime against its laws.—Id.

§ 37. Arrest and bail.[a] (Sup. 1871)

Fugitives from justice returned to the county wherein the offense was committed under the act of May 27, 1852, may be let to bail until an examination be had.—State v. Elder, 35 Ind. 368.

[b] (Sup. 1886)

The fact that the sheriff in charge of the jail in which the appellant, a fugitive from justice, who had committed felonies in two states, was confined, knew that there was to be no trial of the indictment found against the appellant in his state, but that the appellant was detained there merely until he could be given up to the agents of the other state upon an extradition warrant, would not prejudice the right of the state obtaining the warrant to have the appellant delivered to it.—Hackney v. Welsh, 107 Ind. 253, 8 N. E. 141, 57 Am. Rep. 101.

[a] (Sup. 1889)

The state cannot appeal from the ruling of a judge discharging a prisoner brought before him for examination under Act March 9, 1867, relating to the arrest and surrender of fugitive from justice.—State v. Morgan, 31 Ind. 60.

[b] (Sup. 1909)

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 1890, providing that no resident of the state shall be surrendered under pretense of being a fugitive from justice from any other state where it appears to the judge holding the examination that such resident was in the state at the time of the commission of the offense, a resident of the state arrested under extradition proceedings is entitled to show that his restraint is illegal, and that he was not in the demanding state when the offense was committed, nor in a place or situation to render it possible for him to be the real offender.—O'Malley v. Quigg, 172 Ind. 350, 88 N. E. 611.

§ 41. Rights and liabilities of accused after extradition.[a] (Sup. 1888)

A prisoner returned on a requisition, stating that he was charged with embezzling money, may be tried on an indictment charging embezzlement of money in one count, and of property in another, the same property being involved in each case.—Waterman v. State, 116 Ind. 51, 18 N. E. 63.

[b] (Sup. 1892)

On a prosecution for conspiracy to obtain money by false pretenses from an insurance company, a plea in abatement stating that defendant was indicted "for conspiracy to defraud an underwriter" does not show that he is being tried for an offense different from that for which he was extradited.—Musgrave v. State, 133 Ind. 207, 32 N. E. 885.

[c] (Sup. 1905)

A fugitive from justice, extradited on a charge of a specific crime, may be tried on another and different criminal charge without being afforded an opportunity to return to the state from which he was extradited.—Knox v. State, 73 N. E. 255, 164 Ind. 226, 108 Am. St. Rep. 291.

FACTORS.

Scope-Note.

[INCLUDES the regulation and conduct of the business of receiving and selling goods consigned or otherwise intrusted to factors, commission merchants, etc., for sale; rights, powers, duties, and liabilities of persons engaged in such business and the principals or consignors, as between themselves and as to others, arising from such consignments, etc., and incidental transactions, such as advances, pledges, etc., especially as affected by their possession or control of the goods or of evidences of title.

[EXCLUDES agency in general, and on particular occasions only, not in the course of the agent's ordinary business (see Principal and Agent); and sales of goods through brokers not having possession or control of the property (see Brokers). § 23. — Effect of advances by factor.[a] (Sup. 1873)

Where goods were consigned to a factor for sale, without instructions as to the price for which they were to be sold, and the factor advanced money to the consignor to an amount greater than the value of the goods, and, after such advances, the consignor instructed the factor not to sell for less than a certain price, as he could do better by having the goods returned, and the factor thereupon informed the consignor that the goods had not been sold, and that it was doubtful whether they could be sold at the price fixed, and that he would await further instructions, stating that, if the consignor wished to remove the goods, an account of the advances would be rendered, and the amount could be remitted at the time the goods were ordered to be removed, to which the consignor made no response, held that, after the lapse of a reasonable time, the factor might sell the goods for the best price he could get in the market.—*Mooney v. A person arrested on a justice's warrant for a breach of the peace cannot maintain an action of false imprisonment against the justice or constable in consequence of a mere informality in the warrant, provided the justice have jurisdiction.—Cooper v. Adams, 2 Blackf. 294.

If a judicial officer, whether possessed of a general or special jurisdiction, acts erroneously, or even oppressively, in the exercise of his authority, an individual at whose suit he acts is not answerable as a trespasser for the error or misconduct of the officer.—Taylor v. Moffatt, 2 Blackf. 305.

If a judicial officer whose jurisdiction is special and limited transcend his authority, and act in a case of which he has no cognizance, his proceedings are coram non jure, and no person, much less a suitor, can justify under them.—Id.

[c] (Sup. 1831)

Where, on an affidavit charging the crime of swindling to have been committed in Louisiana, the person accused was arrested in Indiana, the arrest was illegal; and, such charge not importing a crime and not being a punishable offense, the maker of the affidavit was liable for false imprisonment.—Hall v. Rogers, 2 Blackf. 429.

[d] (Sup. 1832)

A person, being imprisoned by virtue of a mittimus issued by a justice of the peace, which did not show the cause of commitment, brought an action of trespass against the justice, the constable who executed the mittimus, and the persons who assisted the constable. Held, that the mittimus was no justification.—Hawkins v. Johnson, 3 Blackf. 46; Hiday v. Gilmore, Id. 48.

[e] (Sup. 1834)

In justification of an imprisonment under a magistrate's warrant the constable must show that the magistrate had jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and that the warrant, on its face, was legal.—Poult v. Slocum, 3 Blackf. 421.

An action of trespass lies against a magistrate for an imprisonment by virtue of a warrant issued by him against the plaintiff, as father of a bastard child, without a complaint authorizing it.—Id.

[f] (Sup. 1837)

In an action against a constable for false imprisonment, his justification of the arrest under a capias need not show that an affidavit was filed before issuing the capias, though necessary if the action had been against the person suing out the writ or the justice himself.—Davis v. Bush, 4 Blackf. 330.

[a] (Sup. 1839)

A magistrate who issues a warrant without a sufficient affidavit is liable to person arrested.—Lair v. Abrams, 5 Blackf. 191.

[b] (Sup. 1840)

Where the governor of one state demands a person of the governor of another state as a fugitive from justice, and the governor of the latter state causes the accused to be arrested and delivered to the person appointed for that purpose by the governor making the demand, such person is not liable for a false imprisonment by reason of any irregularity in the warrant of arrest.—Johnston v. Vanamringe, 5 Blackf. 311.

[c] (Sup. 1845)

A party who causes a magistrate to issue, and the magistrate who issues, legal process, are not responsible for an assault committed by the officer serving it unless they participate therein.—Kreger v. Osborn, 7 Blackf. 74.

[d] (Sup. 1848)

Where one sues out a capias, and delivers it to an officer, with directions to arrest the defendant immediately, the plaintiff not knowing at the time that the defendant is then privileged from arrest, and the officer arrests him while privileged, the defendant in the capias cannot maintain an action on the case therefor against the plaintiff. The direction to the officer must be understood as directing him to arrest as soon as the defendant should be subject to arrest.—Sewell v. Lane, 1 Ind. 293, Smith, 167.

[e] (Sup. 1852)

The marshal who makes an arrest, without process, for an affray, not occurring in his view, and the parties who, under his authority, assist him under such circumstances, are liable in an action of trespass to the party arrested.—Pow v. Beckner, 3 Ind. 475.

[f] (Sup. 1862)

The conviction and sentence of a person to confinement in the penitentiary by a court having no jurisdiction are nullities, and can afford no protection to any person keeping him in confinement.—Patterson v. Prior, 18 Ind. 440, 81 Am. Dec. 367.

[g] (Sup. 1866)

Where a sergeant of volunteers arrested some deserters at night, and while passing through a wood with the deserters in charge was fired upon, and arrested plaintiff on strong probability that he had interfered with the exercise by the sergeant of his military authority, and had fired upon him, an action for false imprisonment will not lie.—Teagarden v. Graham, 31 Ind. 422.

[a] (Sup. 1873)

If an imprisonment is extrajudicial, without legal process, it is false imprisonment.—Boas v. Tate, 43 Ind. 60.

When an arrest is made upon valid process, issued by a court having jurisdiction, trespass for false imprisonment will not lie, though the arrest be maliciously procured by the prosecutor without probable cause.—Id.

[o] (Sup. 1873)

Where a party making an arrest is not a known public officer, but assumes to act by special appointment, persons aiding him are bound to know whether he is authorized to make the arrest; and, if he is a trespasser for want of authority, they are also trespassers, as is likewise a justice of the peace who commits a person thus illegally arrested, for he has acquired no jurisdiction over his person.—Dietrichs v. Schaw, 43 Ind. 175.

[p] (Sup. 1874)

Where an officer makes an arrest under a warrant and mittimus issued by a justice having jurisdiction of the offense, each good on its face, he is not liable in an action for false imprisonment.—Jeffries v. McNamara, 49 Ind. 142.

[q] (Sup. 1878)

Although an affidavit and warrant for the arrest of a person for a trespass be erroneous, if the same be not void a person assisting the constable in making the arrest, and using no unnecessary force, is not liable therefor in an action for damages for false imprisonment.—Goodwine v. Stephens, 63 Ind. 112.

Where a warrant for arrest is merely informal and erroneous, but not void, the officer executing it and the persons assisting him are protected.—Id.

That a warrant may protect a constable against an action for false imprisonment for making an arrest, it is necessary that it should be valid, but it is immaterial that it is informal and erroneous.—Id.

Where the warrant on which the arrest complained of was made was directed to any constable of the county, but was put in the hands of a special constable, who arrested plaintiff, and took him before a justice of the peace, the arrest is, on its face, illegal.—American Exp. Co. v. Patterson, 73 Ind. 430.

[s] (Sup. 1884)

It is a good defense to an action for false imprisonment that defendant, as town marshal, found plaintiff intoxicated in the streets, having just assaulted a person, and arrested and detained him for three hours till a regular charge could be made against him.—Wiltse v. Holt, 95 Ind. 469.

[t] (Sup. 1889)

Where defendant merely directed the attention of a police officer to the acts of plaintiff, constituting, as he supposed, a violation of a city hack ordinance, and committed in the presence of the officer, he was not liable for false imprisonment on the arrest of the plaintiff, although the charge against the plaintiff might not have been well founded.—Veneman v. Jones, 118 Ind. 41, 20 N. E. 644, 10 Am. St. Rep. 100.

[u] (Supp. 1891)

The mayor of a city, who, by Rev. St. § 3062, is given the same criminal jurisdiction as justices of the peace, which includes the offense of selling liquor to a minor, a misdemeanor, punishable by fine only (Rev. St. § 2094), is not liable to a civil action for false imprisonment for "corruptly and maliciously" retaining jurisdiction and imposing a fine, and imprisonment in default of payment, after defendant has moved for a change of venue, which, under Elliott's Supp. § 297, must be granted on proper affidavit by either party.—State v. Wolever, 127 Ind. 306, 26 N. E. 762.

[v] (App. 1908)

Where a felony has been committed, any citizen may, without warrant, arrest a person; but he assumes the hazard of being sued for damages for a wrongful arrest.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. King, 41 Ind. App. 701, 83 N. E. 778.

§ 8. — Illegality of detention after arrest.

[a] (Sup. 1861)

Suit for false imprisonment. Answer that defendant, acting as city marshal, arrested the plaintiff, on view, for intoxication and noise in the streets on Sunday, in violation of the city ordinances, whereof three were set out,—(1) fixing a fine for intoxication; (2) against improper noise; (3) authorizing the marshal to arrest and conduct before the mayor's court persons found guilty of breach of city ordinances. The mayor's court not being in session on Sunday, defendant kept plaintiff in custody five hours, then released him on promise of his appearance in court next day, when he did appear and was fined for drunkenness. Held, that no statute made drunkenness a crime or misdemeanor, and, though the city might recover a forfeiture or penalty in a suit at law, yet this did not authorize the imprisoning of a man for an uncertain time by a ministerial officer of his own volition; the duty of such officer being to take the prisoner forthwith before a tribunal having jurisdiction, and then prefer a complaint against him. The answer was held bad on demurrer.—Low v. Evans, 16 Ind. 486.

Where officers having charge of a person under arrest have no authority to fix the bail and take a recognizance, or to receive in pledge any article of value as security for the appearance of the prisoner, their failure to take bail or receive such pledge is no evidence of malice.—Boaz v. Tate, 43 Ind. 60.

[c] (Sup. 1879)

Where a defendant, fined for violation of a city ordinance, was compelled to work out the fine by laboring on the streets, held, that he could maintain an action for false imprisonment.—Torbert v. Lynch, 67 Ind. 474.

[d] (Sup. 1891)

The act of the mayor in refusing to administer the oath to defendant on his affidavit for change of venue is judicial, under Elliott's Supp. § 297, providing that a change shall be granted "whenever affidavit shall be made before the justice [mayor] by either party," and protects the mayor from an action for false imprisonment.—State ex rel. Egan v. Wolever, 127 Ind. 306, 26 N. E. 762.

So is his decision as to the sufficiency of an affidavit made before a notary instead of himself.—Id.

[e] (App. 1897)

A police officer arresting a person for violation of the liquor law took him first to the mayor's office, then to a justice of the peace, and, finding both absent, started towards the office of another justice, when the prisoner refused to accompany him further, offering such physical resistance as to necessitate the assistance of another officer to force him to proceed. As it was early in the morning, and the justice was probably not in his office, the officer to protect the prisoner from injury caused by his resistance, and to facilitate matters, incarcerated the prisoner in the jail near by for a period of one hour, while he procured a warrant for his arrest. Held, that the temporary incarceration was justifiable.—Weser v. Welty, 47 N. E. 639, 18 Ind. App. 664.

By Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 1771, a sheriff is authorized to arrest without a warrant any person whom he may find violating any of the penal laws; but the section provides that the detention of the person so arrested is to continue only until a legal warrant can be obtained. Held that, if an officer detains a person for a longer period than necessary to obtain a warrant, he is liable for false imprisonment.—Harness v. Steele, 64 N. E. 875, 159 Ind. 286.

An officer who has made an arrest without a warrant should, on becoming satisfied thereafter that the accused is not guilty of the offense, release him; but, if either the arrest was unlawful, or the prisoner has been illegally detained or deprived of his liberty by the officer before such release or discharge, that the officer released the person arrested under such circumstances will not relieve him of an action at the instance of the injured party.—Id.

An officer arresting without a warrant cannot justify his action in holding or detaining the prisoner for an unreasonable time before obtaining a warrant upon the ground that such delay was necessary in order to investigate the case and procure evidence against the accused.—Id.

§ 11. — Exercise of authority or duty.

A deputy provost marshal, directed by his superior officer to arrest and punish persons not connected with the army for retailing liquor at their usual place of business to soldiers, is not protected by such order from liability to the arrested persons for damages on account of such arrest.—Griffin v. Wilcox, 21 Ind. 370.

[b] (Sup. 1875)

Where defendants caused the arrest and imprisonment of plaintiff under an act thereafter found to be unconstitutional, they cannot justify under such enactment in an action for false imprisonment.—Summer v. Beeler, 50 Ind. 341, 19 Am. Rep. 718.

[c] (Sup. 1887)

The detention or keeping in of pupils for a short time after dismissal of the rest of the class as a punishment for some misconduct has none of the elements of false imprisonment about it, however mistaken a teacher may be as to the justice or propriety of imposing such a penalty at the particular time, unless imposed from wanton, willful, or malicious motives.—Fertich v. Michener, 11 N. E. 605, 14 N. E. 68, 111 Ind. 472, 60 Am. Rep. 709.

§ 13. — Probable cause.

An officer is justified in arresting and imprisoning an offender for "probable cause," and, if there is reason to believe that a person is insane, and about to commit mischief, which, if committed by a sane person, would constitute a criminal offense, an officer may detain the offender until it may reasonably be presumed that he has changed his purpose.—Paetz v. Dain, Wils. 148.

§ 15. Persons liable.

Pleading, see post, § 20.

[a] (Sup. 1873)

If a jailer after receiving a prisoner unnecessarily put him in a filthy place, or otherwise exceed his authority, the police officers who made the arrest are not liable for such acts, unless they advise, or in some manner participate in, such oppressive excess of authority.—Boaz v. Tate, 43 Ind. 60.

If police officers make an arrest and bring the prisoner to the jailer, and inform him of the arrest for a criminal offense committed in their view, the jailer, by receiving the prisoner as such, does not become liable for the former wrongful or oppressive acts of the police officers.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1873)

Where a person is illegally under arrest, a justice of the peace is also a trespasser in committing the person so arrested to prison, as he has not acquired jurisdiction over his person.—Dietrichs v. Schaw, 43 Ind. 175.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

An express company which employs agents to pursue, arrest, and prosecute those who are supposed to have stolen the company's property is liable for the acts of its agents who falsely imprison parties suspected, notwithstanding that the company does not expressly authorize or sanction the illegal imprisonment.—American Exp. Co. v. Patterson, 73 Ind. 430.

[d] (Sup. 1885)

Where a railroad company employs a detective to arrest persons unlawfully obstructing its track, and he, acting within the terms of his employment, arrests an innocent person, the railroad company is liable therefor.—Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. McKee, 99 Ind. 519, 60 Am. Rep. 102.

[e] (Sup. 1885)

A principal who selects an agent to detect and arrest offenders is responsible for the acts of the agent committed within the general scope of his employment, although the agent may have done an unlawful act, and have arrested an innocent man.—Pennsylvania Co. v. Weddle, 100 Ind. 138.

[f] (Sup. 1894)

A railroad company is not liable for the action of its local check clerk of freight, in prosecuting one, without probable cause, for the theft of articles from its cars.—Flora v. Russell, 138 Ind. 153, 37 N. E. 593.

[g] (App. 1902)

Where the watchman and floor walker of a department store, whose general duty it was to protect the goods from being stolen, wrongfully accused a customer of stealing, placed her under restraint, and searched her, the proprietors of the store were liable in an action for false imprisonment, though the particular acts of the employes complained of were willful, and not directly authorized.—Efroymsen v. Smith, 63 N. E. 328, 29 Ind. App. 451.

[h] (App. 1908)

The mere fact that a railroad employed a detective does not imply that he had authority to make arrest.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. King, 41 Ind. App. 701, 83 N. E. 778.

A corporation is responsible for the acts of an agent in arresting and imprisoning plaintiff, performed while engaged in the discharge of duties, within the general scope of his agency, although the particular act was willful, and was not directly authorized.—Id.

Conclusions, see PLEADING, § 8.

[a] (Sup. 1834)

Where, in trespass for false imprisonment against a magistrate, he pleaded in justification that the arrest, etc., was by virtue of a warrant issued by him against the plaintiff as the father of a bastard child, on the complaint of the overseers of the poor, and showed that the child was not then born, or omitted to state that the complaint was reduced to writing, or that the mother had failed to prosecute for the child's maintenance or that the warrant was in due form, the plea was insufficient.—Poult v. Slocum, 3 Blackf. 421.

[b] (Sup. 1837)

If an officer justify an arrest under process which he is bound to return, the return day being past, he must allege a return in his plea.—Davis v. Bush, 4 Blackf. 330.

[c] (Sup. 1839)

Where a constable justifies an arrest, etc., under a capias ad satisfaciendum, which under the statute he is bound to return, the plea must aver a return of the execution, or show a sufficient reason why a return had not been made.—May v. Sly, 5 Blackf. 206.

In trespass for an assault and false imprisonment, it appeared that at and shortly before the time of the arrest there was in plaintiff's neighborhood an association of persons engaged in making and passing counterfeit money. Held, that the fact that plaintiff was one of that association, and had been engaged in passing counterfeit money knowingly and with intent to defraud the public, should be specially pleaded.—Wasson v. Canfield, 6 Blackf. 406.

In trespass for an assault and false imprisonment, A. pleaded that he was a justice of the peace, that a felony had been committed, that there was reasonable ground for suspicion that plaintiff was guilty of said felony, and that in consequence thereof he had ordered plaintiff to be arrested. Held, that the plea was insufficient, in that it omitted to set out the grounds upon which the suspicion and belief of plaintiff's guilt were founded.—Id.

In trespass for an assault and imprisonment, B. pleaded that he was a constable, that a felony had been committed, that a reasonable suspicion and belief existed that the plaintiff was guilty of said felony, that one A. and others, informed him (the defendant) that the plaintiff was guilty of said felony, and that for the purpose of carrying the plaintiff before some justice of the peace to be dealt with he had gently arrested him. Held, on general demurrer, that the plea was bad, for not showing that his informant stated the facts by which he knew or believed the plaintiff to be guilty, and for not setting out those facts.—Id.

In trespass for an assault and battery and false imprisonment, the plea was that the defendant made oath before a justice of the peace that he had been threatened by the plaintiff, etc., and prayed surety of the peace; that the justice thereupon issued his warrants, etc. Held, that the plea amounted to the general issue.—Crookshank v. Kellogg, 8 Blackf. 256.

[f] (Sup. 1869)

An answer justifying an arrest made by the defendant as sheriff, by virtue of a ca. ad resp., need not state that an affidavit was filed before the writ issued; but, if the return day be past, such answer must show a return.—Caldwell v. Kenworthy, 31 Ind. 238.

[g] (Sup. 1870)

To sustain an action for having arrested the plaintiff in a civil action, malice and want of probable cause must be averred and proved. A count that defendant caused the plaintiff to be imprisoned, etc., under a false charge, etc., and whereby he was damaged, is defective.—Seeger v. Pfeifer, 35 Ind. 13.

[h] The complaint in an action for false imprisonment need not aver that the same was either wrongful, unlawful, malicious, or without probable cause.—(Sup. 1871) Colter v. Lower, 35 Ind. 235, 9 Am. Rep. 735; (1877) Carey v. Sheets, 60 Ind. 17.

[i] (Sup. 1873)

An answer which attempts to justify the arrest and imprisonment complained of must identify the arrest justified with the arrest complained of, or it will be bad on demurrer.—Gallimore v. Ammerman, 39 Ind. 323.

A complaint for arrest and false imprisonment need not aver that the facts complained of were done illegally, or wrongfully, or without competent authority.—Id.

[j] (Sup. 1873)

Where a complaint for false imprisonment alleges that the plaintiff was imprisoned on more than one charge, an answer justifying the arrest on only one of the charges is bad.—Boas v. Tate, 43 Ind. 60.

Where the gravamen of an action is for arresting and imprisoning the plaintiff without legal process, averments in the complaint relative to the malicious purposes of the defendant are only by way of aggravation.—Id.

In an action for false imprisonment the defense of justification is not available under a general denial.—Id.

[k] (Sup. 1874)

An answer of justification in an action for false imprisonment sufficiently identifies the imprisonment justified if it is stated to be the same imprisonment complained of by the plaintiff.—Scircle v. Neeves, 47 Ind. 280.

[l] (Sup. 1877)

In an action for false imprisonment, it need not be averred in the complaint that the matter complained of was wrongful or unlawful or malicious or without probable cause.—Carey v. Sheets, 60 Ind. 17.

[m] (Sup. 1881)

Where a complaint against a corporation for false imprisonment alleges that injury was done at the instigation and procurement of defendant, and there is no motion for more specific statement of facts, plaintiff may offer any evidence tending to show the truth of the allegation.—American Exp. Co. v. Patterson, 73 Ind. 430.

A complaint against an express company for false imprisonment, which alleges that the acts of the agent who caused plaintiff's arrest and imprisonment were done "at the instigation and procurement of the defendant," sufficiently charges defendant with responsibility for the agent's acts.—Id.

The failure of a complaint against a corporation for false imprisonment to sufficiently allege the means and manner by which it procured the false imprisonment, while subjecting it to a motion to make more specific, does not render it obnoxious to demurrer.—Id.

[n] (Sup. 1884)

Justification for false imprisonment by pleading a warrant must show that the arrest was for the same trespass as charged in the complaint.—Young v. Warder, 94 Ind. 357.

[o] (App. 1897)

In an action for false imprisonment by an officer, an answer in justification, after stating the facts of the arrest, alleging that the officer "was justified in making the arrest and causing the imprisonment of the plaintiff complained of," is sufficient to identify the imprisonment justified as the imprisonment alleged in the complaint.—Weser v. Welty, 47 N. E. 639, 18 Ind. App. 664.

A complaint for false imprisonment is sufficient without alleging that the act complained of was illegal or wrongful, or that the arrest or imprisonment was without competent authority, or malicious, or without probable cause.—Harness v. Steele, 64 N. E. 875, 159 Ind. 286.

[q] (App. 1908)

A complaint in an action against a railroad for false imprisonment by a railway detective, showing that the detective was employed by defendant with authority to arrest all persons who had stolen its property, and that the detective within the scope of his employment, but without warrant of law, and without any criminal offense being committed by plaintiff in his presence, arrested and imprisoned plaintiff, and that said arrest was caused by appellant through its agents, servants, detectives, and employes, while acting in the scope of their employment, is not defective, in that by its allegations the detective's authority and the scope of his employment is measured and defined by the word "detective."—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. King, 41 Ind. App. 701, 83 N. E. 778.

§ 22. — Presumptions and burden of proof.

[a] (App. 1903)

In an action for false imprisonment, proof that plaintiff was imprisoned is sufficient to raise the presumption that such imprisonment was illegal, and the burden of establishing the contrary is on defendant.—Black v. Marsh, 67 N. E. 201, 31 Ind. App. 53.

[b] (App. 1906)

In a suit for false imprisonment, an instruction that the fact that plaintiff was imprisoned was sufficient to raise the presumption that such imprisonment was illegal, and that the burden of establishing the contrary was on defendants, was not erroneous.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. King, 41 Ind. App. 701, 83 N. E. 778.

[a] (Sup. 1878)

In an action for false imprisonment, a note given by one of the defendants to a third person, which had no connection with the case or with plaintiff, was properly excluded from the evidence.—Stewart v. Maddox, 63 Ind. 51.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

In an action for false imprisonment, plaintiff may give evidence of the proceedings upon a writ of habeas corpus by which he was discharged from custody.—American Exp. Co. v. Patterson, 73 Ind. 430.

Where the warrant on which an arrest was made was directed to any constable of the county, but was put in the hands of a special constable, who arrested plaintiff and took him before a justice of the peace, evidence of the proceedings before the justice were admissible in a subsequent action for false imprisonment.—Id.

[c] (App. 1908)

In an action for assault and false imprisonment, it was immaterial who had been with defendant during the day, or whether she had been alone in the house, from which she came about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, when she saw plaintiff, as she alleged, stealing her cherries.—*Golibart v. § 25. — Character and condition of parties.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

In suit for damages for false imprisonment, evidence of plaintiff's good character is not admissible in the first instance; but after defendants, in mitigation of damages, have set up that they acted in good faith, and have introduced evidence tending to cast suspicion on plaintiff's character, then evidence of good character becomes pertinent and is admissible.—American Exp. Co. v. Patterson, 73 Ind. 430.

[a] (App. 1903)

In an action for assault and false imprisonment of a boy by defendant for stealing her cherries, evidence as to the tree having been raided before by boys during the same day, or as to how many times it was so raided, was properly excluded.—Golibart v. Sullivan, 66 N. E. 188, 30 Ind. App. 428.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. False Imp. §§ 103, 104.

§ 30. — Mitigation of damages.

A warrant, illegal on its face, which had been issued by one defendant, A., as justice of the peace, and under which another defendant, B., had made the arrest complained of, and which had been referred to by the plaintiff's witness, was admissible evidence for the defendants in mitigation of damages.—Wasson v. Canfield, 6 Blackf. 406.

In trespass for an assault and false imprisonment, defendants might prove, in mitigation of damages, that at and shortly before the time of the arrest there was in the plaintiff's neighborhood an association of persons engaged in making and passing counterfeit money, and that plaintiff was generally reputed and believed there to have been one of that association.—Id.

§ 31. — Weight and sufficiency.

[a] (App. 1893)

In an action against a justice of the peace for imprisonment under an alleged illegal mittimus, a recital in the mittimus that the justice has found that plaintiff has money on his person, which he fraudulently withholds and conceals, so that execution cannot be levied thereon, with intent to defraud the execution creditor, and that he has refused to turn the same over to the court, warrants a finding by the jury that judgment had been entered and signed by the justice before issuing the mittimus, as required by Rev. St. 1881, § 1480, though the judgment is dated a day later than the mittimus.—Van Vleck v. Thomas, 9 Ind. App. 83, 35 N. E. 913.

§ 34. — Elements of compensation.

In an action for false imprisonment, and compelling plaintiff by assault and menaces to execute and deliver a promissory note, compensatory damages may include delay in business, permanent disability and disfigurement, bodily pain, mental anguish from a sense of humiliation, and any injury to the plaintiff's business, profession, reputation, or social position.—Stewart v. Maddox, 63 Ind. 51.

[b] (Sup. 1902)

Wounded pride, humiliation, and mortification from a public arrest are elements of damage in an action for false imprisonment against an officer and one causing his arrest.—Harness v. Steele, 64 N. E. 875, 159 Ind. 286.

[c] (App. 1903)

In an action for assault and false imprisonment, damages are recoverable for physical and mental pain, including humiliation, if any, caused by the injury.—Golibart v. Sullivan, 66 N. E. 188, 30 Ind. App. 428.

§ 35. — Exemplary.

[a] (Sup. 1873)

In an action for false imprisonment, and meanwhile compelling plaintiff by assault and menaces to execute and deliver a promissory note, compensatory, but not exemplary, damages may be recovered.—Stewart v. Maddox, 63 Ind. 51.

Where the facts alleged in the complaint in an action for false imprisonment amount to a criminal offense, exemplary damages cannot be granted.—Id.

Where, in an action for false imprisonment, the evidence discloses that plaintiff was accused in the presence of others of being a thief, and, when he protested his innocence, called a liar, exemplary damages were proper.—Harness v. Steele, 64 N. E. 875, 159 Ind. 286.

In false imprisonment exemplary damages do not depend alone upon malice on the part of the wrongdoer, but they may be rightfully awarded when the wrongful act is willfully done in a wanton or oppressive manner, or done with reckless disregard of the rights of the complaining party.—Id.

Plaintiff, a woman whose appearance did not in any way invite suspicion or discourtesy, was publicly wrongfully accused of stealing by defendants' watchman and floorwalker, while she was carrying some shoes, which she proposed to purchase, across defendants' store, with the permission of a clerk, in order to show them to some one, and was forcibly restrained of her liberty and searched by the watchman and floor walker, who, though requested by her so to do, refused to ask the clerk anything about the matter. The clerk, however, interposed, and plaintiff was released, but no apologies were made by any one, nor any regret expressed to her. Held, that a verdict of $2,000 was not so excessive as to show partiality, prejudice, or corruption on the part of the jury.—Efroymsen v. Smith, 63 N. E. 323, 29 Ind. App. 451.

In an action for false imprisonment, the evidence showed that plaintiff was arrested for stealing a watch, the officer making the arrest having no warrant, and acting on information; and that plaintiff was detained against his will for some time, without being taken before any magistrate, or any formal charge being made against him. The court charged that it is the duty of a sheriff arresting a person without a warrant, upon information, when he has reasonable or probable cause to believe that such person has committed a felony, without delay to take the person arrested before some magistrate, to be charged with such offense by affidavit. Defendant contended that the court should have charged that a peace officer is not required in all cases to take his prisoner before a magistrate, but may release him. Held, that the instruction was applicable to the evidence.—Harness v. Steele, 64 N. E. 875, 159 Ind. 286.

In an action against two defendants for false imprisonment the court instructed as to the measure of damages if they found for one of defendants, and in another instruction stated the damages if they found against such defendant. Such defendant contended the first instruction was erroneous, as the jury must have understood they would not be justified in finding in his favor, and that the second was erroneous in that it gave the jury to understand they could not find in his favor unless they found in favor of both. Held, that the contention was of no merit, the court having instructed as to form of verdict if they found for both defendants, and that they might find against both, or in favor of one and against the other.—Id.

FALSE PRETENSES.

Scope-Note.

[INCLUDES fraudulently obtaining or attempting to obtain from another personal property, or the making or indorsement by him of a negotiable instrument, or the execution of any instrument in writing, or any benefit or advantage, by false tokens or representations; nature and elements of the crimes of cheating, swindling, obtaining money or goods by false pretenses, larceny by false pretenses, etc.; nature and extent of criminal responsibility therefor, and grounds of defense; and prosecution and punishment of such acts as public offenses.

[EXCLUDES fraud not involving use of false tokens or representations (see Fraud); personation of another (see False Personation); forgery of instruments in writing, and uttering such forged instruments (see Forgery); making, passing, etc., counterfeit coin or other money, securities, etc. (see Counterfeiting); and obtaining board or lodging with intent not to pay therefor (see Innkeepers). [a] (Sup. 1889)

Defendant bargained for carpets, giving a false name (Mrs. K.), and representing that she had a good income, and that she lived at a certain street and number. The contract was executed by defendant as Mrs. K., and provided that title should remain in the seller, and the goods should remain at said street and number till paid for. Defendant arranged with the persons living at that number to allow Mrs. K., who she said owned the goods, to come there and help make the carpets. After they were delivered, she stated that Mrs. K. wanted them shipped to her house, and they were boxed and sent to defendant's home in another state, where defendant received them. Defendant made false statements to others as to how she obtained the goods. Held, that the evidence was sufficient to convict of larceny.—March v. State, 117 Ind. 547, 20 N. E. 444.

2 Rev. St. p. 410, § 27, punishing any person who shall, with intent to defraud, designedly by color of any false token or writing or any false pretense, obtain the signature of any person to any written instrument or obtain from any person any money or thing of value, seems to be broad enough to embrace any and every false representation made by a party by means of which he has fraudulently obtained the property of another. It cannot intend to have a range so wide as its terms would seem to indicate because if it be liberally construed breach of contract and crime will scarcely be divided by an appreciable line and the pretenses must be of some existing fact made for the purpose of inducing the prosecutor to part with his property and to which a person of ordinary caution would give credit.—State v. Magee, 11 Ind. 154.

Rev. St. 1881, § 2204, provides that whoever, with intent to defraud another, designedly, by color of any false token or writing, obtains from any person anything of value, shall be imprisoned, etc., and omits the words, "or any false pretense," contained in Act June 10, 1852, § 27, on the same subject. Held, that the quoted words were repealed by section 2204.—Wagoner v. State, 90 Ind. 504.

§ 5. — Intent.

Allegations in indictment, see post, § 27.

[a] (Sup. 1869)

The statute relative to false pretenses (2 Gav. & H. St. p. 445, § 27) does not require as an element of the offense thereby defined that the false representation should be made for the purpose of accomplishing the particular thing which does result. A false pretense such as would tend to produce the result accomplished, an obtaining thereby, and designedly, a thing of value from another, and an intention by the transaction to defraud that other, are the only elements of the offense.—Todd v. State, 31 Ind. 514.

If a particular result is designed to be accomplished by making the false pretense, which, however, fails, and another thing of value is obtained and accepted with like intent to defraud, the law imputes to the person making the false pretense a design from the beginning to consummate the latter result.—Id.

§ 6. — False token.

Admissibility of evidence, see post, § 43.

Description in indictment, see post, § 29.

[a] (Sup. 1875)

The gravamen of the crime defined by 2 Gav. & H. St. p. 445, § 27, consists in obtaining the signature of any person to any written instrument, or in obtaining from any person any money, transfer, note, bond, or receipt, or thing of value. The offense may be committed either by color of any false token or writing, or by any false pretense. A printed business card purporting to be that of a firm, but which is not the business card of such firm, exhibited by one who claims to act as agent of such firm in making contracts, is a token or writing, within the meaning of the statute.—Jones v. State, 50 Ind. 473.

"Token," as used in a statute punishing false pretenses, signifies "a sign," "a mark," "a symbol"; and a "written token" includes matter printed or lithographed.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1882)

A fraudulent use of an order to sell corn which the holder of the order had already sold is not the use of a false token or writing on which an indictment will lie, under Rev. St. 1881, § 2204 (Rev. St. 1876, p. 436, § 27), although the offense might be indictable as a false representation.—Shaffer v. State, 82 Ind. 221.

[c] (Sup. 1883)

Rev. St. 1881, § 2204, provides that whoever, with intent to defraud another, designedly, by color of any false token or writing, obtains from any person anything of value, shall be imprisoned, etc. Held that, in a prosecution for violation of such statute, it is not essential that the state show that the offense was committed by color of a false token or writing alone, unaided by any verbal representation or pretense, and that the words, "by color of false token or writing," mean by making the false token or writing to appear different from what it is, or by representing such false token or writing to be true and genuine.—Wagoner v. State, 90 Ind. 504.

[d] (Sup. 1906)

A postdated and postpayable check, on the faith of which goods are obtained, cannot be made the basis of a prosecution for false pretenses, either under Acts 1905, p. 751, c. 169, § 677, prescribing the punishment for obtaining anything of value by color of any false token or writing, or under section 678, prescribing the punishment for obtaining property from another by color or aid of a check or order for the payment of money, when the drawer or maker of the check or order is not entitled to draw on the drawee for the sum specified therein.—Brown v. State, 76 N. E. 881, 160 Ind. 85.

§ 7. — Nature of pretense.

[a] A false pretense, under the statute, must relate to a past event or existing fact. Any representation in regard to a future transaction is excluded.—(Sup. 1858) State v. Magee, 11 Ind. 154; (1875) Keller v. State, 51 Ind. 111.

[b] (Sup. 1858)

An indictment alleged that accused, with intent to cheat and defraud B., falsely and fraudulently represented that C. was indebted to accused, and, if B. would lend accused $5, C. would on demand repay the same; that B., believing the representation, loaned accused $5; that in truth the representations were false; that B. demanded of C. the sum loaned, but he refused to repay it. Held, that the indictment did not charge the crime of false pretenses; the allegations being nothing more than a promise by accused that C. on demand would repay the amount loaned.—State v. Magee, 11 Ind. 154.

[c] (Sup. 1868)

Representations, by one applying for the loan of an accommodation note, that his indebtedness was but $2,000, when he knew it to be $12,000, and that his property was unincumbered by debts, when it was under executions and judgments to the amount of $6,000, held representations of material facts, and indictable.—State v. Pryor, 30 Ind. 350.

Indictment charging that "A. and B., on, etc., did, feloniously, designedly, and with intent to defraud C., represent and pretend to said C. that a certain bank check and order for the payment of money [here set out in hæc verba, purporting to be drawn by D., payable to E., and indorsed by the latter in blank] which the said A. then had in his possession, was good and of the value stated on its face, to wit, eight hundred dollars in currency; by means of which false pretense said A. and B. did then and there obtain from said C. [certain money specified], the goods, etc., of said C.; and the said A. and B. then and there delivered said check to said C., to be kept by him as security for the payment of said money by him loaned to said A. and B., which was then and there obtained from said C. as aforesaid by them, with intent to cheat and defraud him; whereas in truth, etc., said check was not good, was not of the value of eight hundred dollars in currency, but was of no value whatever; all of which said A. and B. then and there well knew," etc. Held, that the indictment showed, not merely a false promise, but false pretense as to an existing fact, and was sufficient.—Maley v. State, 31 Ind. 192.

Representing a bogus check as good is an indictable false pretense as to an existing fact, and not a mere promise that the check should be paid.—Id.

[f] (Sup. 1869)

A false representation by one person to another that he owns a check on a bank, where he has neither funds nor credit, is a false pretense, within the statute.—Casily v. State, 32 Ind. 62; Clarke v. Same, Id. 67.

[f] (Sup. 1877)

Such false representations of a defendant's solvency and ability to pay for goods as might deceive a man of common intelligence are representations of alleged existing facts sufficient to support an indictment for obtaining the goods under false pretenses.—Clifford v. State, 56 Ind. 245.

[g] (Sup. 1877)

False representations made by seller, during negotiations for a sale of property to be paid for in a note of a third person, touching the pecuniary responsibility of the maker of the note, are material representations, and were fairly calculated to induce the injured party to part with his property.—State v. Timmons, 58 Ind. 98.

[h] (Sup. 1878)

The foreman of a gang of laborers having been indicted for obtaining money by means of fictitious names placed by him on the report made by him, and from which the pay rolls were prepared, but the indictment containing no allegation that it was the duty of the defendant to employ laborers, and that such duty was known both to the persons to whom he made his report and to those by whom the pay rolls were prepared, it was held that the indictment was fatally defective, since it charged no false pretenses which would or ought to induce a person of ordinary caution and prudence to part with his property, and that where the paymaster had paid to a person drawing the money in the name of such fictitious person, without identification, it amounted to negligence, with which the employer of such paymaster was chargeable.—Bonnell v. State, 64 Ind. 498.

[i] (Sup. 1880)

An indictment for obtaining money under false pretenses is sufficient if it states facts which show that the representations used were such as would deceive a man of common intelligence.—Miller v. State, 73 Ind. 88.

[j] (Sup. 1889)

Representations that defendant was a witch doctor, and could kill and destroy witches; that the person to whom the representations were made was the victim of witches; and that unless he employed defendant to exorcise them they would kill him and his family,—constitute no offense, being mere expressions of opinion, and not calculated to deceive a man of common understanding.—State v. Burnett, 119 Ind. 392, 21 N. E. 972.

[k] (Sup. 1892)

False pretenses may consist of acts, without any verbal assertion.—Musgrave v. State, 32 N. E. 885, 133 Ind. 297.

[l] (Sup. 1899)

Under Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 2352 (Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 2204), declaring guilty of an offense one who with intent to defraud another designedly by a false pretense obtains from any person any money, the false pretense need not be such that a man of ordinary caution and prudence would give it credit, or that it could not be guarded against by ordinary care and prudence.—Lefler v. State, 54 N. E. 439, 153 Ind. 82, 45 L. R. A. 424, 74 Am. St. Rep. 300.

[m] (Sup. 1909)

False pretenses cannot be predicated upon the nonperformance of a future promise, but must be based upon some existing fact.—State v. Ferris, 86 N. E. 993, 171 Ind. 562.

[a] (Sup. 1900)

Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 2352 (Rev. St. 1881, § 2204; Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 2204), provides that a person who, with intent to defraud by false pretenses, obtains the signature of another to a written instrument, or the transfer of any check, shall be imprisoned, etc. An indictment charged that defendant falsely represented to L., whom he had promised to marry and to provide with a home, that he intended to deposit a bank check in her name; that the check he requested her to sign was for $125, and that she, believing his statements, signed and delivered the check to defendant, intending to give him $125; that all such representations and his promise to marry her were false and fraudulent; and that the check signed was in fact for $725. Held, that the indictment sufficiently charged an offense within the statute, though L. intended to sign and deliver a check for a less sum than that named therein.—State v. Styner, 56 N. E. 98, 154 Ind. 131.

A gift of a check induced by false pretense may be the subject of an offense within Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 2352 (Rev. St. 1881, § 2204; Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 2204), authorizing the punishment of a person who, with intent to defraud another, designedly, by false pretenses, obtains his signature to a written instrument, or the transfer of any check, etc.—Id.

[a] (Sup. 1868)

An indictment charging the obtaining, by false pretenses, of a signature to a note payable in bank to defendant's order, for the purpose of raising money thereon for the sole benefit of defendant, without consideration, was sufficient; the offense being completed when the signature was obtained by the false pretenses, though actual loss or injury was not sustained.—State v. Pryor, 30 Ind. 350.

[a] (Sup. 1882)

Defendant, by false pretenses, obtained from a Masonic lodge a small sum of money for traveling expenses, which he promised to repay. It was contended that the amount was given in charity, and that therefore an indictment would not lie. Held, that the indictment would lie.—Strong v. State, 86 Ind. 208, 44 Am. Rep. 202.

[b] (Sup. 1903)

The phrase "any place," as used in Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 2178, defining and prohibiting bunco steering, contemplates some place within the state of Indiana, and cannot be so enlarged as to include places beyond the state.—Cruthers v. State, 67 N. E. 930, 161 Ind. 139.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. False Pret. § 20.

§ 18. Fraudulent presentation of claim to public officer.

Indictment or information, see post. § 37.

[a] (Sup. 1910)

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8696, requires the board of public works of cities to keep the streets in repair, and section 8697 gives it general supervision over streets, and requires it to repair them, the cost to be paid out of the general fund, and makes it the duty of the board, whenever such work is payable out of the general treasury, to have it done either by independent contractors or employees of the board, as it deems best. Section 8690 requires the city comptroller to refuse to approve a warrant presented to him which for any cause, should not be approved. Section 2586 imposes a penalty on one who knowingly makes or presents for payment to the treasurer or other accounting officer of a city any false claim, etc., for the purpose of procuring its allowance out of the city treasury. Held, that the board of public works of the city of Indianapolis was an "accounting officer" within section 2586, for the purpose of allowing claims against the city for repairing streets, though the city comptroller could, in its discretion, refuse to approve warrants issued by it; it being necessary for the claimant to first present his claim to the board for allowance, so that the willful presentation to it of a false claim for work done in repairing streets, for the purpose of procuring its allowance against the city, was an offense within the statute.—Brunaugh v. State, 90 N. E. 1019.

One who knowingly presented, through an innocent person or agent, a false claim against a city for allowance, would be as guilty of the offense of presenting such claim as if he presented it in person.—Id.

§ 19. False personation of officer or another person.

Persons liable, see post. § 23

[a] (Sup. 1875)

Where defendant was indicted under 2 Gav. & H. St. p. 445, § 28, providing that every person who shall personate another, and in such assumed character receive any property intended to be delivered to the party so personated, shall be deemed guilty of larceny, the evidence must show that the money or property obtained by such false personation was intended to be delivered to the party personated.—Williams v. State, 49 Ind. 367.

[b] (Sup. 1879)

Where defendant falsely represented himself to be an officer with authority to arrest a certain person for passing counterfeit money by means of which he extorted money from such person and another for the purpose of settling the pretended offense, defendant was not guilty of larceny, but of obtaining money by means of false pretenses.—Perkins v. State, 63 Ind. 317.

[c] (Sup. 1879)

One who voluntarily represents to another that he is an officer with power to arrest such person for a pretended crime, and thereby obtains from such person money, is guilty of obtaining money by false pretenses, within 2 Rev. St. 1876, § 76.—Perkins v. State, 67 Ind. 270, 33 Am. Rep. 89.

It is essential, to constitute the offense of obtaining money, etc., by false pretenses, under the statute, that the person alleged to have been defrauded should have believed the false pretenses to be true, and that they should have been such that, if true, they would naturally operate upon an honest and ordinarily prudent person, and also that such person, in parting with his property, was not himself guilty of a crime. Therefore, held, on demurrer, that an indictment for obtaining property from a person, upon the false representation that the defendant was a constable and had a warrant against such person, issued by a justice of the peace, for a crime, and that he would settle the same if the person defrauded would give the defendant the property, could not be sustained.—Id.

§ 26. — Requisites and sufficiency in general.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

An indictment charging the obtaining of money under false pretenses must specify the pretenses, aver that defendant knew them to be false, and describe the goods obtained and the owner thereof.—Johnson v. State, 75 Ind. 553.

[b] (Sup. 1883)

Rev. St. 1881, § 2204, provides that whoever, with intent to defraud another, designedly, by color of any false token or writing, obtains from any person anything of value, shall be imprisoned, etc. Held, that an indictment for violating such statute which fails to allege that the token or writing was delivered by defendant and received by the prosecuting witness in exchange or payment of goods or other thing of value is bad.—Wagoner v. State, 90 Ind. 504.

[c] (Sup. 1900)

That facts stated in an indictment for obtaining property under false pretenses showed larceny is no objection thereto, since different offenses may spring from the same act.—State v. Styner, 56 N. E. 98, 154 Ind. 131.

[d] (Sup. 1901)

Where, in a prosecution for obtaining personality under false pretenses by giving Confederate money in exchange therefor and representing it to be valuable, an information alleging that the accused "did, * * * with intent to defraud, * * * buy" from the complaining witness the property described, is not insufficient, as precluding fraud by the use of the word "buy," since the gist of the offense was the false representation of the value of the Confederate money, and not the buying of the property.—Pinney v. State, 59 N. E. 383, 156 Ind. 167.

Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 1645 (Horner's Rev. St. 1901, § 1570), declares that every person who shall, while in Indiana, aid in and abet the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate an offense in another state which by the laws of Indiana is a felony, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction shall be punished as an accessory before the fact to the commission of such felony. Held, that where defendant was charged with aiding and abetting in the commission of the offense of bunco steering in the state of Illinois, but it was not charged that the acts of the principal perpetrated in Illinois constituted a public offense in that state, it was insufficient.—Cruthers v. State, 67 N. E. 930, 161 Ind. 139.

§ 27. — Intent.

[a] (Sup. 1889)

Indictment against T. for obtaining money and a signature as surety by false pretenses charging that the defendant "on, etc., at, etc., feloniously, designedly, and with intent to defraud one G., did falsely pretend to said G. that he, said T., was then and there the owner of a certain house and lot in a town named, in an adjoining state named, of great value, to wit, twenty-six hundred dollars, and a certain harness-shop in another town named, in said adjoining state named, of great value, to wit, six hundred and fifty dollars; by means of which false pretenses, he said G. relying upon and believing the same to be true, said T. did then and there feloniously obtain from said G., on his, said T.'s sole and individual credit, the sum of four hundred dollars, lawful money, as a loan for nine months, and the signature of said G., etc., with intent then and there to defraud said G.; whereas, in truth said T. was not then and there the owner," etc. Held that, though it was not alleged expressly that in making the representations the defendant's intention was to accomplish the particular result which was in fact obtained, though the indictment was not so certain as to exclude the conclusion that the defendant may have designed to accomplish his fraudulent purpose in another mode, yet it sufficiently showed a connection between the false representations made and the result produced.—Todd v. State, 31 Ind. 514.

An indictment charged that defendant and another had conspired to cause it to be generally believed that defendant had been accidentally burned to death, with intent to defraud a certain accident insurance company, in which defendant was insured; that false proofs of the defendant's death, and a claim for $5,000 insurance money, were to be sent to the company by the beneficiary of defendant, and the company, by relying on such false proofs, should pay such sum; that, with such intent, they procured a human skeleton, and placed it in an old house in which defendant was staying, and caused the house to be burned, so that the bones might be found in the ashes; and that defendant, in pursuance of such conspiracy, fled from the state. Held, that the indictment sufficiently charged defendants with conspiring with an unlawful intent to obtain money from the insurance company by false pretenses, and it is not vitiated by surplusage and want of perspicuity, where no substantial right of defendant is affected thereby.—Musgrave v. State, 133 Ind. 297, 32 N. E. 885.

§ 28. — Description of person defrauded.

[a] (Sup. 1885)

In an indictment for obtaining goods from firm by false pretenses the names of the individual members of the firm need not be set out. It is sufficient to charge that the false pretenses were made to the partnership by its firm name.—State v. Williams, 103 Ind. 235, 2 N. E. 585.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. False Pret. § 33; 27 CENT. DIG. Ind. & Inf. § 277.

§ 29. — Description of false token or pretense or other instrument or means of fraud.

[a] (Sup. 1847)

In an indictment for obtaining property under false pretenses, by representing that the bank bills in which defendant made payment were good, while in fact the bank was insolvent and its paper worthless, an allegation that all of the bills on said bank were worthless, and that the bills passed by defendant were on that institution, sufficiently describes the bills.—State v. Layman, 8 Blackf. 330.

[b] (Sup. 1875)

An indictment for false pretenses under 2 Gav. & H. St. p. 445, is not bad for using the word "pretend," instead of the word "represent."—Jones v. State, 50 Ind. 473.

[c] (Sup. 1875)

In an indictment for obtaining property by false pretenses, where it is charged as a part of the false pretenses that certain real estate was falsely represented to be free from prior incumbrances, the prior incumbrances should be set out or described.—Keller v. State, 51 Ind. 111.

[d] (Sup. 1879)

An indictment charging defendant with procuring board and lodging by falsely pretending that he owned a house and lot, and that he had money on interest, states an offense within 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 436, § 27, defining the crime of obtaining money, or other thing of value, by false pretenses.—State v. Snyder, 66 Ind. 203.

[c] (Sup. 1883)

Where it cannot be determined from an indictment under Rev. St. 1881, § 2204, for obtaining money by means of false token or writing, charging that defendant falsely pretended and represented to a certain person that a certain order or token in writing which he then had, purporting to be signed by another, authorized him to sell the interest of the signer in certain property in the county, whether it charges a sale of the property by defendant to such other person or a mere transfer of the order, a motion to quash the indictment should have been sustained.—Shaffer v. State, 82 Ind. 221.

[f] (Sup. 1882)

An indictment for obtaining money under false pretenses alleged that defendant, for the purpose of defrauding a certain lodge, falsely represented that he was a member of another lodge of the same order, located in Ohio, and as evidence that he was a member of that lodge exhibited a false and forged receipt for dues purporting to have been paid by defendant to such lodge, and represented that he was greatly in need of money and promising to repay the amount thereof on his arrival at a particular place, and, by reason of such pretenses, defendant obtained money from such lodge. Held, that though the promise to repay the money was not a representation as to an existing fact, but a mere promise to do something in the future, in determining the sufficiency of the indictment, it must be considered as a mere incident to the allegations respecting the other pretenses made by defendant, and the indictment considered as a whole was sufficient.—Strong v. State, 86 Ind. 208, 44 Am. Rep. 292.

[g] (Sup. 1883)

An indictment for obtaining goods by means of a false token, which fails to allege that a token was delivered by the defendant and received by the prosecuting witness in exchange for payment of goods, is bad.—Wagoner v. State, 90 Ind. 504.

[h] (Sup. 1883)

An indictment under Rev. St. 1881, § 2204, providing that "whoever sells * * * any promissory note * * * knowing the signature of the maker thereof to have been obtained by any false pretense, shall be imprisoned in the state prison," need not charge that the false pretenses were of themselves sufficient to constitute a crime under the statute.—State v. Adams, 92 Ind. 116.

[i] (Sup. 1900)

An indictment charging that defendant falsely represented to prosecutrix that he intended to marry her, provide her a home, and deposit a check in her name for $1,000, and that the check which he induced her to sign and deliver to him was for a greater amount than that stated by him, sufficiently shows the operative cause inducing prosecutrix to sign the check, since proof of any one of such false pretenses would be sufficient to support an indictment.—State v. Styner, 56 N. E. 98, 154 Ind. 131.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. False Pret. §§ 34-36.

See, also, 19 Cyc. pp. 423-425.

§ 30. — Falsity of pretense and knowledge thereof.

[a] (Sup. 1847)

An indictment charged that the defendant falsely pretended to one A. that B., C., and D. were indebted to him (the defendant) in a certain sum, and that they were bound to pay a certain bill of exchange then in the defendant's possession and overdue, drawn by the defendant on said B., C., and D., payable to their order 90 days after date, and accepted by them, and which they indorsed to the defendant, who indorsed it to said A., and that by said false pretenses the defendant obtained from said A. certain goods, with intent to cheat, etc.; whereas, in fact, the said B. and C. were not indebted to the defendant, nor were said B., C., and D. bound to pay said bill. Held, that the first pretense was not sufficiently negatived, and, as to the second, that there should have been an averment that the defendant knew that B., C., and D. were not bound to pay the bill.—State v. Smith, 8 Blackf. 489.

[b] (Sup. 1879)

In an indictment under 2 Rev. St. p. 436, § 27, for obtaining board and lodging by false representations as to one's property, etc., a charge that they were "designedly" made with intent to defraud imputes a knowledge of the falsity of his representations.—State v. Snyder, 66 Ind. 203.

[c] (Sup. 1887)

An information which fails to negative the pretense upon which money was obtained does not charge a public offense.—Pattee v. State, 109 Ind. 545, 10 N. E. 421.

[d] (Sup. 1899)

An indictment for false pretenses, which fails to negative the representations which it charges were made, is defective.—Campbell v. State, 56 N. E. 665, 154 Ind. 309.

[e] (Sup. 1901)

An indictment for obtaining money under false pretenses, which states that defendant sold a piano by representing that it was secondhand, and that he had purchased it for $250, which was less than it was worth, and that defendant was not in fact the owner of the piano, and had never owned it, is not insufficient in failing to specifically deny that the defendant purchased the piano for $250, since the allegation that he was not and had never been the owner was a sufficient denial thereof.—Merrill v. State, 59 N. E. 322, 156 Ind. 99.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. False Pret. § 37.

See, also, 19 Cyc. p. 426.

§ 31. — Reliance on pretense and inducement to act.

[a] (Sup. 1839)

An indictment for false pretenses must aver that the checks falsely pretended to be good were delivered to and accepted by the prosecutor as an inducement or payment, etc.—Johnson v. State, 11 Ind. 481.

[b] An indictment for obtaining money or goods by false pretenses is insufficient if it fails to allege that the injured party was induced to part with the ownership of the money or property acquired by the defendant, by means of the false pretenses, etc., alleged in the indictment.—(Sup. 1859) State v. Orvis, 13 Ind. 569; (1885) Same v. Williams, 103 Ind. 235, 2 N. E. 585.

[c] (Sup. 1875)

An indictment, charging that the defendant procured a signature to a note by false pretenses, used to induce the person whose signature is thus obtained to contract for the purchase of an article of property, is bad, if it does not state that the person whose name was procured relied upon such pretenses as true, and upon the faith thereof purchased the property, and in consideration thereof executed the note set out in the indictment.—Jones v. State, 50 Ind. 473.

[d] (Sup. 1877)

An indictment for obtaining goods by false pretenses charged that the owner of the goods, "relying upon said false representations," surrendered the goods to the defendant and was thereby defrauded. Held a sufficient allegation that the owner believed such representations to be true.—Clifford v. State, 56 Ind. 245.

[e] (Sup. 1877)

An indictment which charges that defendant presented to a certain merchant a false, forged, and counterfeit order, and represented and stated to such merchant that it was a true and genuine order, "and did then and there and thereupon receive from the said" merchant certain described goods, but which does not allege that the goods were obtained by defendant from such merchant by means of such writing and representation, is insufficient.—Abbott v. State, 59 Ind. 70.

[f] (Sup. 1882)

An indictment for obtaining the signature to a deed by false statements as to other land is defective if it fails to show how the false statements alleged induced the signing of the deed.—Cooke v. State, 83 Ind. 402.

[g] (Sup. 1885)

An indictment for obtaining goods from a firm by false pretenses is sufficient, as showing that the firm believed the representation to be true, which charges that they "relied on such false representations."—State v. Williams, 103 Ind. 235, 2 N. E. 585.

An indictment for obtaining goods under false pretenses, which did not make it appear that the goods were delivered in pursuance of the alleged false representations, but which merely averred that for the purpose of obtaining credit certain false representations were made, and that by means of representations defendant obtained "on credit certain goods," did not show the connection between the false pretenses and the obtaining of the goods on credit and was uncertain.—Id.

[h] (Sup. 1837)

An indictment for obtaining goods by false pretenses, which charges the accused with representing that his firm was doing a certain amount of business each year, and that it had a good financial standing, and that a merchant "relying on said representations and pretenses, and believing the same to be true, and being deceived thereby," sold the accused goods on credit, is insufficient; it not being averred that it was by means of such false representations that the merchant was induced to part with his goods.—State v. Connor, 110 Ind. 469, 11 N. E. 454.

[i] (Sup. 1899)

An indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses, alleging that they were made to induce a purchase of property, of which accused was not the owner, to obtain a sum of money, without averring that a sale was made, is insufficient, since no sale being alleged, no connection is shown between the alleged pretenses and the delivery of the money to accused.—State v. Miller, 54 N. E. 808, 153 Ind. 229.

[j] (Sup. 1900)

An indictment averring that defendant feloniously, falsely, etc., in writing, to wit: "The First National Bank: Send me four hundred dollars here by first express. J. H.,"—pretended to said bank, with intent to defraud, that he was J. H., a depositor, and the bank, relying on said representations, sent the money to defendant, was defective for uncertainty; it not appearing who wrote or transmitted the writing, or how the bank was led to send money to defendant by a writing signed with another's name.—Campbell v. State, 56 N. E. 665, 154 Ind. 309.

[k] (Sup. 1904)

An indictment for false pretenses, charging that defendant, in order to defraud the prosecutor, falsely pretended to him that he was the authorized agent of another to sell whisky and receipt for money owing and due from the prosecutor to that other, and that the prosecutor believed the pretenses to be true.

and relied upon them, so that defendant was thereby enabled to unlawfully obtain from the prosecutor a check, on which he received money, was bad, in failing to show that prosecutor was deceived by the false representations, or induced by the deceit to part with his money.—Stifel v. State, 72 N. E. 600, 163 Ind. 628.

An information which alleges that accused, by means of the fraudulent manner in which he threw playing cards, induced the prosecutor to part with a specified sum of money on his ability to correctly describe one of the cards so thrown, states no offense under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2178, punishing one who by fraud induces another to part with anything of value on any game, because it fails to charge that a wager was laid by the prosecutor or that he participated therein.—Clark v. State, 77 N. E. 52, 166 Ind. 288.

[m] (Sup. 1909)

An indictment for obtaining property by false pretenses charged that defendant gave the prosecuting witness his post-dated check for $100, in payment of merchandise, and at the time said that he had $80 or $90 in the bank, and would increase his deposit to $100, when as a matter of fact he had no money in the bank, and that the payee in the check relied on defendant's statements was insufficient, where it did not positively allege that the prosecutor was induced to give defendant time for payment by reason of his believing that the defendant had on deposit $80 or $90.—State v. Ferris, 171 Ind. 562, 86 N. E. 993.

§ 32. — Description, value, and ownership of property obtained.

[a] An indictment for obtaining goods on false pretenses must allege the ownership of such goods.—(Sup. 1847) State v. Smith, 8 Blackf. 489; (1870) Leobold v. State, 33 Ind. 484.

[b] (Sup. 1870)

An indictment for obtaining under false pretenses "$25 in money, the personal goods and chattels of," etc., was insufficient, as not properly describing the property.—Smith v. State, 33 Ind. 159.

[c] (Sup. 1873)

It is essential to the validity of an indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses, under 2 Gav. & H. St. p. 445, § 27, that the indictment should allege whose money was obtained.—Halley v. State, 43 Ind. 509.

[d] (Sup. 1899)

An indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses must state the ownership of the money alleged to have been obtained.—State v. Miller, 54 N. E. 808, 153 Ind. 229.

§ 33. — Description of written instrument or signature obtained.

[a] (Sup. 1871)

An indictment for obtaining a signature, to a note by false pretenses, which charges that the pretenses were made to induce K. to become the surety of the defendant on a $600 note, but shows that, instead of becoming a surety, K. became a principal, and made a note for $600 payable to the defendant, is bad for uncertainty.—State v. Locke, 35 Ind. 419, 422.

[b] (Sup. 1878)

When a person is indicted for obtaining by false pretenses a check for the payment of money, the indictment should set out the substance of such check, at least, or present a substantial reason for a failure to do so.—Bonnell v. State, 64 Ind. 408.

An indictment charging the obtaining of a check under false pretenses, describing the check as that of a certain person "upon the Commercial Bank of Cincinnati for the sum of $34.51, which check was then and there of the value of $34.51," does not describe the check with sufficient accuracy and particularity.—Id.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

In an indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses that defendant's buggy had been injured by a defective bridge, an indictment alleging that defendant by such representations obtained from the county board of commissioners a certain warrant for the payment of money of the value of $5, etc., did not sufficiently describe the warrant.—Johnson v. State, 75 Ind. 553.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. False Pret. § 45.

See, also, 19 Cyc. p. 433.

§ 34. — Obtaining money, property, or written instrument or signature.

[a] (Sup. 1847)

Under Rev. St. 1843, p. 965, § 24, which provides that if any person shall by false pretenses "obtain the signature of any person to any written instrument, or obtain from any person any * * * order for the payment of money, or delivery or transfer of property," he shall be punished, an indictment for obtaining the transfer of real estate by falsely representing that the bank notes in which the consideration was paid were good, while in fact worthless, should be predicated on defendant's obtaining the grantor's signature to the written instrument by which the land was conveyed.—State v. Layman, 8 Blackf. 330.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

§ 37. — Presentation of fraudulent claim.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

An indictment for false pretenses in procuring the payment of a claim against a county is bad, where it does not accurately describe the alleged pretense, nor the warrant or order held by the accused, nor state to whom it was made payable, nor the amount, nor the connection between the pretenses upon which it was allowed by the county board and the act of the county treasurer in paying the amount allowed. —Johnson v. State, 75 Ind. 533.

[b] (Sup. 1901)

Under Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 1820 (Rev. St. 1881, § 1751; Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 1751), providing that in an indictment a description of an instrument by any name or description by which it is usually known, or by the purport thereof, shall be sufficient, an indictment for making, verifying, and presenting to the board of commissioners a false and fraudulent claim against a county is not defective because the claim presented is not set out, since the description of the claim was sufficient. —Wilson v. State, 59 N. E. 380, 60 N. E. 1086, 156 Ind. 631.

Since Burns' Supp. 1897, § 7848a (Acts 1897, p. 188, § 4), provides that no claim shall be allowed by the board of commissioners unless it is duly itemized and verified, filed in the auditor's office, and placed on the claim docket, it is not necessary to allege in the indictment that a claim docket was kept in the office of the county auditor on the ground that there is no law requiring him to keep such a docket. —Id.

In a prosecution under Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 2353 (Rev. St. 1881, § 2205; Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 2205), providing that whoever, knowing the same to be false and fraudulent, presents for payment, or certifies as correct to the board of commissioners, a false or fraudulent claim, to procure its allowance or an order for its payment, shall be imprisoned, etc., an indictment alleging that defendant filed in the auditor's office, and caused to be entered on the claim docket and presented to the commissioners, a fraudulent claim, with an affidavit thereto, to procure an order for the payment thereof out of the county treasury, and with knowledge that it was fraudulent, was sufficient, though the commissioners were only authorized to allow claims against the county, and not to issue orders for their payment. —Id.

Public Offense Act 1905, Acts 1905, p. 750, c. 169, § 675 (Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2353), provides that whoever knowing the same to be false or fraudulent presents for payment, or certifies as correct, a claim to procure its allowance for payment, shall be punished. Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 8087, provides that the compensation for publishing notices shall be for each advertisement, per square of 250 ems each, first insertion $1, for each additional insertion 50 cents, and that where the printing is done for the county the commissioners shall pay for the same according to such rate. Held, that an indictment for presenting a false and fraudulent claim against a county for publishing the county tax rate sheet for three weeks, merely alleging that the amount charged was $54, when according to the legal rate it should have been only $40, but failing to allege the number of squares of printed matter printed in each of the insertions, or facts showing that the claim was excessive other than the pleader's conclusion, was fatally defective under the rule requiring an indictment to state a specific description of the offense. —State v. Metsker, 109 Ind. 555, 83 N. E. 241; Id., 169 Ind. 701, 83 N. E. 1135.

The indictment alleged that a certain company procured a contract for repairing the streets of a city, and that accused superintended such repairs for it, and unlawfully and knowingly, with intent to defraud the city, made out and presented to the board of public works, for the purpose of procuring its allowance, a false claim wherein the amount of the repairs made during April were stated at so many yards, and a certain amount was given as justly due on account thereof, when the number of yards of repairs made and the amount due therefor was much less than the number and sum stated in said claim, and that accused, when he made out such false claim, knew that the number of yards claimed was greatly in excess of the amount of work done, and that the amount due was much less than that claimed. Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 2586, imposes a penalty upon one who knowingly makes or presents for payment to the treasurer or other accounting officer of a city a false claim, for the purpose of procuring its allowance. Held, that the indictment alleged with sufficient particularity the presentation of a false claim within the statute. —Brunaugh v. State, 90 N. E. 1019.

§ 38. — Issues, proof, and variance.

[a] (Sup. 1909)

On a trial for false pretenses consisting in misrepresenting the value of property, the sum named in the indictment as having been alleged by the prisoner as the value of the property is material, and should be proved as laid. —Todd v. State, 31 Ind. 514.

On an indictment for obtaining a loan under false pretenses that defendant owned a house and lot worth $2,650, it was a fatal variance that the proof showed that the property was worth but $2,200 or $2,300. —Id.

[b] (Sup. 1870)

An indictment for obtaining money under a false pretense set out, as the pretense, a bank check without date; and it was averred that a more particular description of the check could not be given because it has been torn and partially destroyed by the defendant. On the trial a check dated "Ja. 18, 1869," was read in evidence, over the defendant's objection. Held, that the admission of this evidence was error.—Smith v. State, 33 Ind. 159.

[c] (Sup. 1885)

Where the indictment charges the defendant with obtaining money by false pretenses, and alleges that he represented his indebtedness to be a specified sum, when, in fact, it was much greater, it is competent to prove an item of indebtedness not specifically stated in the indictment, although some items are therein specified.—State v. Long, 103 Ind. 481, 3 N. E. 169.

§ 39. Presumptions and burden of proof.

[a] (Sup. 1892)

In a prosecution for false pretenses, where it is shown that the defendants conspired to deceive the beneficiary in an insurance policy and procured her to make a false claim for the insurance, which she believed to be due, the presumption is that the beneficiary would enforce the policy and secure a benefit by the payment of the insurance if the scheme of the conspirators had succeeded.—Musgrave v. State, 32 N. E. 885, 133 Ind. 297.

§ 51. — Questions for jury.

[a] The question whether the pretenses and representations stated in an indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses are such as might deceive a man of common intelligence is a question of fact for the jury.—(Sup. 1881) *Miller v. [b] (Sup. 1889)

In a prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses, the question of the sufficiency of false representations to deceive a man of common understanding is one of law for the court.—State v. Burnett, 119 Ind. 392, 21 N. E. 972.

§ 52. — Instructions.

Error in instruction cured by other instructions, see CRIMINAL LAW, § 823.

[a] (Sup. 1910)

In a prosecution for knowingly presenting for allowance a false claim to the board of public works of a city for work done in repairing streets, the evidence showed that accused superintended the work for the contractor, and that the record of the amount of work done was made up by accused from the books of the city's inspectors, and one of the inspectors testified that accused told him he was glad the city placed him on the job, and if he would raise the amount of work done accused would pay him a certain amount, to which witness replied that it was all right and he would treat accused fair. The city's inspectors freely permitted accused, each day, to take possession of their books and keep them for some time, and he made changes in the entries as to the amount of work done by the contractor; the contractor's record being copied from the city inspectors' records as changed by accused. The evidence justified a finding that the contractor's cashier acted innocently in making out and presenting the claim from the false records made by accused. Held, that the evidence authorized instructions on the theory that accused aided a principal in committing the offense, or himself committed it through some innocent person or agent; accused being personally absent when the claim was presented.—Brunaugh v. State, 90 N. E. 1019.

A theory, in a prosecution for knowingly presenting a false claim against a city, that accused aided or abetted a principal in committing the offense, was not theoretically inconsistent with one that accused committed the offense through an innocent person or agent whom he caused to present the false claim, so as to prevent the state from having both theories presented by charges if raised by the evidence.—Id.

In a prosecution for knowingly presenting a false claim against a city for repairing streets, the court instructed that the indictment charged that the fraudulent claim was for a certain number of square yards, while the amount of work actually done was a less number, leaving a certain number of yards in excess of the amount of work actually done, so as to make the claim in excess of the amount actually due, that the state must prove that the claim was for some number of square yards in excess of the number actually done and a sum in excess of the amount actually due, and that accused made changes in the city's books, from which the claim was presented, showing the number of yards of work done, would not make him guilty of presenting a false claim, but the state must show that the claim made was for work in excess of that actually done and for a sum in excess of the amount actually due. Held, that the jury could not have misunderstood from the instruction, as a whole, the meaning of the phrase "for a quantity in excess of that actually done."—Id.

§ 1. Duty to erect and maintain in general.

[a] At common law, the owner of a close was not obliged to fence against the cattle of the occupant of an adjoining close. The statute imposing the duty on adjoining proprietors of land to erect and maintain fences recognized the same principle; for the object and design of fencing is not to keep the cattle of others off the premises, but to keep at home the cattle of the occupant. This principle has equal application to the owners of land adjoining public highways.—(Sup. 1852) Terre Haute & R. R. Co. v. Jones, 8 Ind. 183; (1854) *Williams v. New Albany & S. R. § 6. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1857)

Both parties to a partition fence are equally bound to maintain the same. Either may repair, and enforce contribution from the other, but failure to do so leaves them upon their respective common-law rights and obligations.—Myers v. Dodd, 9 Ind. 290, 68 Am. Dec. 624.

[b] (Sup. 1874)

The provision of 1 Gav. & H. St. p. 343, § 15, that partition fences "shall be maintained throughout the year, equally by both parties," is not limited to repairs simply, but applies as well to the rebuilding of a fence destroyed by fire.—Rhodes v. Mummery, 48 Ind. 216.

[c] (App. 1892)

Rev. St. § 4849, provides for notice by an adjoining landowner for the examination of partition fences by disinterested freeholders, and, if the examiners deem said fence insufficient, they shall assess the amount required to make it sufficient. By section 4850, if the person to whom notice has been given fails to repair, the person giving notice may do so, and recover from the other the amount assessed. Held, that a fence erected on the land of plaintiff to inclose his fields, no part being nearer defendant's land than 5 feet, and the greater part being from 165 feet to 330 feet, and some parts being nearly one-eighth of a mile therefrom, was not a partition fence, the defendant never having agreed that it should be such, or that he would repair it; and defendant was not liable to plaintiff for the expense of repairing it.—Byers v. Davis, 3 Ind. App. 387, 29 N. E. 798.

§ 15. — In general.

That adjoining landowners have agreed that each shall keep up certain specified portions of a partition fence does not prevent a resort to the statutory method for the assessment of damages against the party in default. —Bruner v. Palmer, 108 Ind. 397, 9 N. E. 354.

A written notice to assess damages for failure to "keep up" a partition fence, informing the party in default that, on a day and at an hour named, the plaintiff would call upon two disinterested freeholders "to examine all of the partition fences between my land and your land, in Daviess county, state of Indiana, and assess the amount that may be required to make said fences sufficient and lawful fences, if they are insufficient," is sufficiently definite.—Id.

Acts 1897, p. 184, c. 122 (Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6568), relative to partition fences, and providing for proceedings for the erection of the same, contains a proviso that persons owning land not inclosed by a fence to retain stock shall not be required to make or maintain a partition fence. Held that, inasmuch as such proviso is not contained in the enacting clause of the statute, a complaint in an action to enforce a lien for building a fence was not insufficient because it did not allege that the lands therein described were inclosed by a fence to retain stock.—Tomlinson v. Bainsaka, 70 N. E. 155, 163 Ind. 112.

Where, in an action to foreclose a statutory lien for building a partition fence, defendant's answer was a general denial, it was necessary for plaintiff to prove all the facts necessary to give the township trustee authority to contract for the building of the fence, etc., as provided for by the statute (Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6568).—Id.

[c] (App. 1906)

In an action to enforce a lien for the construction of a partition fence between adjoining landowners, it is proper to admit in evidence the "miscellaneous records" of the county in which is recorded the certificate delivered by the township trustee to the contractor.—Burck v. Davis, 73 N. E. 192, 35 Ind. App. 648.

In an action by a landowner under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6564 et seq., to recover of an adjoining landowner the expense of maintaining a partition fence, it is not necessary for plaintiff to allege that he had performed his obligation to keep his portion of the fence in repair.—Id.

In an action to enforce a lien for the construction of a partition fence, plaintiff is entitled to a reasonable attorney fee under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6566, providing for the foreclosure of such liens "under the same rules that mechanics' liens are foreclosed," and section 7267, providing that in suits for the enforcement of mechanics' liens, "if plaintiff or lienholder shall recover a judgment in any sum, he shall be entitled to reasonable attorneys' fees."—Id.

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6564, providing that all fences now used by adjoining landowners as partition fences, unless otherwise specially agreed on, shall be deemed partition fences, and shall be maintained and paid for as in the statute provided, a complaint to recover from an adjoining landowner the expense of maintaining a fence is sufficient if it shows that the fence was such as must be deemed a partition fence, without showing how it became such, whether by agreement or otherwise.—Id.

A complaint for the foreclosure of a lien for the repair of a partition fence should allege the steps taken under the statute (Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6564; Acts 1897, p. 184, § 1), culminating in a valid lien.—Id.

An action to foreclose a lien for the repair of a partition fence is not one for damages for breach of a contract obligation.—Id.

Where plaintiff, in an action to foreclose a lien for the repair of a partition fence, proceeds definitely on the theory that the parties were the owners of the lands in fee simple, an objection that the complaint does not expressly so allege is not well taken.—Id.

[d] (Sup. 1906)

Burns' Ann. St. 1906, § 7381, providing that persons owning land not inclosed by a fence to retain stock shall not be required to maintain a partition fence, states an exception or defense, and in an action to foreclose a lien for the cost of a partition fence, an affirmative finding of fact is not required that defendant's land was inclosed by a fence to retain stock, but a failure to make any finding is equivalent to a finding that the land was not within the excepted class.—Collins v. Wilber, 89 N. E. 372.

A complaint to foreclose the lien, given by Burns' Ann. St. 1906, § 7379, for the cost of a partition fence need not set out the contract between plaintiff and the township trustee under which the fence was built, since the action is in rem, founded upon the statute, and not upon contract, and defendant was not a party to the contract.—Id.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Fences, §§ 29-35, 40-44.

See, also, 19 Cyc. p. 473.

§ 16. — View and assessment by fence viewers.

[a] (Sup. 1873)

Where a defendant had inclosed his theretofore uninclosed land, and by so doing a fence owned by the plaintiff became a partition fence, and the plaintiff thereafter called upon the defendant and demanded pay for one-half of the value of such partition fence, and the defendant did not object that the value had not been estimated, but denied his liability, and stated that he would pay no amount whatever, such refusal waived an estimate of the value as a prerequisite to the maintenance of an action.—Bartlett v. Adams, 43 Ind. 447.

[b] (Sup. 1886)

In an action to recover the expense incurred by plaintiff in putting up a partition fence, under a statute providing for an assessment by appraisers of the amount required to be expended, the assessment of the appraisers is admissible in evidence, although not signed by them.—Bruner v. Palmer, 108 Ind. 397, 9 N. E. 354.

[c] (Sup. 1904)

Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6565, relative to partition fences and the proceedings for the erection of the same, describes seven kinds of fences, either of which is declared to be a lawful fence, but requires the township trustee to adopt "the plans and materials for such fence as is most commonly used by farmers in the township." Held, that in proceedings for the erection of a fence it was proper for the township trustee to limit the kinds of fence which might be erected to those varieties most commonly used in the township.—Tomlinson v. Bainaka, 70 N. E. 155, 163 Ind. 112.

Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6566, relative to the erection of partition fences and proceedings therefor, requires that the statement which the township trustee gives to the contractor on the completion of the fence shall be recorded in the mechanic's lien record of the county. Held, that such provision is not ineffective for the reason that there is no such record as the mechanic's lien record, but there is a compliance with the statute where the statement is filed in the record in which mechanics' liens are required to be recorded.—Id.

§ 17. Failure to erect or maintain partition fence.

[a] (Sup. 1895)

A complaint against a township trustee for neglecting to repair a partition fence as required by Rev. St. 1894, §§ 6564, 6565, is demurrable unless it alleges that such trustee "examined the fence, and declared it to be insufficient." Till this is done the trustee is under no obligation to repair such fence, under the act. It is not enough to allege that he failed to act in the matter.—State ex rel. Magnet v. Kemp, 141 Ind. 125, 40 N. E. 661.

§ 23. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1887)

Though the erection of a barbed wire fence is not in itself a tort, the manner in which it is constructed and maintained may be such as to make the person erecting and maintaining it guilty of negligence, and a complaint showing that defendant was negligent in constructing and maintaining such a fence is sufficient.—Sisk v. Crump, 14 N. E. 381, 112 Ind. 504, 2 Am. St. Rep. 213.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FENCES, § 48.

§ 24. — Personal injuries.

[a] (App. 1903)

Whether a child who, while playing with other children, ran into a wire fence at the boundary of a third person's land, the existence of which she did not know, was guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery for the injuries sustained, was for the jury.—Cincinnati & H. Spring Co. v. Brown, 69 N. E. 197, 32 Ind. App. 58.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FENCES, § 49.
See, also, 19 Cyc. p. 487.

§ 25. — Domestic animals.

[a] (Sup. 1887)

Plaintiff alleged that, in the city where she and defendant resided, animals were by law allowed to run at large; that defendant had constructed a barbed-wire fence along the highway so negligently that the wires hung loosely from the post and near the ground; and that plaintiff's horse attempting to cross the fence from the highway into defendant's field, in which his horses were grazing, was entangled, thrown down, and killed. Held not demurrable.—Sisk v. Crump, 112 Ind. 504, 14 N. E. 381, 2 Am. St. Rep. 213.

[b] (App. 1892)

Where, after allowing the public to drive across his lot from one street to another for several years, the owner stretched a barbed wire across the track without other notice that the license to use the road was terminated, he is liable for an injury from the wire to a horse driven over such road after dark.—Carskaddon v. Mills, 5 Ind. App. 22, 31 N. E. 559.

[c] (App. 1894)

A complaint alleging that it was defendant's duty to construct and maintain part of a partition fence between his land and adjoining land in which plaintiff's horse was pastured; that this was done negligently, the posts being too far apart to support the wires, and the wires sagging in such a manner as to induce horses to attempt to cross the fence, and become entangled therein, and that plaintiff's horse became entangled in such wires, and was killed by wounds from the barbs thereon, is sufficient on demurrer.—McFarland v. Swihart, 11 Ind. App. 175, 38 N. E. 483, 54 Am. St. Rep. 499.

Where defendant constructed a partition fence of barbed wire, fastened to posts which were insufficient and too far apart to sustain the wires and keep them from sagging, and the space between the wires was from 18 to 24 inches, and plaintiff's horse, depasturing on the adjoining premises, was injured by coming in contact with the wires, such injury was the natural and probable consequence of the negligent construction and maintenance of the fence by defendant which any prudent man should have foreseen in the exercise of ordinary care.—Id.

Where plaintiff's horse was injured by coming in contact with a partition fence so constructed by defendant as to be dangerous to horses depasturing on the adjoining premises, in the face of an averment by plaintiff that he was without fault, he cannot be charged with such notice of defendant's negligence as would as a matter of law charge him with contributory negligence.—Id.

[d] (App. 1895)

One, who, in erecting a division barbed-wire fence, lays the wire on the ground without protection, is liable to an adjoining landowner, whose stock are injured by the wire.—Lowe v. Guard, 11 Ind. App. 472, 39 N. E. 428, 54 Am. St. Rep. 511.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

§ 27. — Civil liability.

[a] (Sup. 1858)

It seems that one desiring to remove a partition fence should, under Rev. St. 1852, pp. 293, 294, ascertain its value, and how much he may remove, by means similar to those ordained for assessing the expense of erection.—Haines v. Kent, 11 Ind. 126.

[b] (Sup. 1878)

1 Rev. St. 1876, p. 497, § 23, provides that a person "shall not take away any part of his fence which forms a partition fence between him and the inclosure of any other person, until he shall have first given six months' notice" of his intention to remove the fence. Held, that the fences, including the partition fence, to constitute an "inclosure" within the meaning of the statute, must surround the adjoining land, or some part of it.—Gundy v. State, 63 Ind. 528.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Fences, §§ 40-44, 52-61.

See, also, 19 Cyc. pp. 480-483.

§ 28. — Criminal responsibility.

[a] (Sup. 1878)

The fact that G., the owner of a partition fence, removed it, without notice to S., an adjoining owner, after allowing S. to connect therewith a fence which S. was erecting to inclose his land, but had not completed, did not render G. guilty of malicious trespass.—Gundy v. State, 63 Ind. 528.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

Where, in an indictment for unlawfully removing fence rails, it was shown that the rails and stakes were in and composed a fence upon the land and were the property of the owner of the land, it was sufficiently shown that they were a part of the realty.—Dorrell v. State, 80 Ind. 546.

In an indictment under Rev. St. 1881, § 1961, for unlawfully removing from the land of another certain rails and stakes composing a fence, it is not necessary to give a particular description of the land.—Id.

In a prosecution for unlawfully removing fence rails and stakes from certain land, in violation of Rev. St. 1881, § 1961, it was not necessary that the information should state the number of rails and stakes, nor their separate values; they being sufficiently described as being in and composing a fence on the land of the prosecuting witness.—Id.

[c] (Sup. 1882)

Upon the trial of a criminal proceeding for unlawfully removing a fence, it may be shown that in a prior civil suit, to determine the boundary between defendant's land and the prosecutor's a judgment was rendered establishing a boundary upon which the fence was placed.—Dorrell v. State, 83 Ind. 357.

I. ESTABLISHMENT AND MAINTENANCE.

§ 5. Establishment by public authorities.

[a] (Sup. 1319)

Even if the designation of a street on the recorded plat of an incorporated town were the exclusive grant to the corporation, and the street on a river, it would not vest in the corporation such a right to the soil as would authorize the establishment of a ferry, under the statute (Laws 1811, p. 8) which contemplates the ownership of land as an absolute prerequisite, as the way is not the land, but merely the privilege of passing over it.—Conner v. Town of New Albany, 1 Blackf. 43.

[b] (Sup. 1851)

The right to establish public ferries resides in the Legislature; and the extent of the ferry right conferred depends upon the terms of the legislative grant.—Bush v. Peru Bridge Co., 3 Ind. 21.

The circumstance that the boards of commissioners of the several counties have authority by law to establish ferries does not affect the right of the Legislature to exercise that power.—Id.

[a] (Sup. 1851)

A grant of the right of a public ferry is not exclusive, but is conferred subject to such further grants to other persons as public convenience may require.—Bush v. Peru Bridge Co., 3 Ind. 21.

[b] (Sup. 1886)

Rev. St. 1894, § 6597 (Rev. St. 1881, § 4877), provides that, when any river shall be the boundary between two counties, any person holding land on either side of the river, who shall desire a public ferry across the same, may apply to the commissioners of the county in which the land lies, who may establish a ferry from the land of the applicant to the opposite side. Held, that a petition to the commissioners of K. county to establish a ferry from land in that county to land in another, which fails to show that the applicant has any interest in the K. county land, is insufficient on demurrer.—Hazleton v. De Priest, 143 Ind. 368, 42 N. E. 751.

§ 12. — Persons who may acquire.

[a] (Sup. 1819)

A town, vested with an exclusive easement in land along a river for a right of way, is not the owner of the land within the laws regulating the granting of ferry privileges, which makes ownership of the land bordering on the stream at the point where the ferry is to touch by the grantee of the privilege an absolute prerequisite to the granting of the privilege.—Conner v. Town of New Albany, 1 Blackf. 43.

[b] (Sup. 1819)

Where an applicant for a ferry neither owned land on that side of the river where the ferry was established, nor the land next adjoining the public common of any town where such common bordered on the river at the place of the ferry asked for, as required by St. 1818, p. 292, commissioners have no authority to grant the application.—Horsley v. Damon, 1 Blackf. 491.

[c] (Sup. 1827)

Under the act of assembly giving to the proprietor of land on the margin of a river or creek the right of having a ferry established, the exhibition of a deed by the petitioner, accompanied by possession, is sufficient proof of ownership to authorize a grant without tracing title back to the government.—Brown v. Harris, 1 Blackf. 543.

[d] (Sup. 1866)

A ferry right, like the right to erect and maintain a wharf, has its foundation in the ownership of the soil, or in the exercise of the right of eminent domain.—City of Jeffersonville v. Louisville & J. Steam Ferry Co., 27 Ind. 100, 89 Am. Dec. 486.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

§ 14. — Proceedings to acquire.

[a] (Sup. 1822)

The record of an order granting a ferry need not show that the rates have been fixed by the court, nor that the applicant has executed a bond according to law.—Conner v. Paxson, 1 Blackf. 189.

[b] (Sup. 1839)

The petitioner for a ferry must produce some other evidence of title to the land on which the ferry is prayed to be established than the mere fact of his being in possession.—Mullis v. Cavins, 5 Blackf. 77.

[c] (Sup. 1846)

From an order of county commissioners allowing a bond to be filed under St. 1844 to secure the privileges across the stream to a ferry previously established, an appeal lies to the circuit court.—Davis v. Huff, 8 Blackf. 276.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FERRIES, §§ 23-33.

§ 15. — Grant or sale or lease by public authority.

[a] The power "to regulate ferries," conferred upon the common council of a city by section 33 of the act for the incorporation of cities, etc. (1 Gav. & H. St. p. 223), does not include the authority to prohibit without a license first obtained therefor. In all instances in the act where it was intended that for the purpose of restraint a license might be imposed, the power is expressly declared, and is not, therefore, to be implied from other provisions.—(Sup. 1865) Duckwall v. City of New Albany, 25 Ind. 283; (1866) Shalleross v. City of Jeffersonville, 26 Ind. 198.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FERRIES, §§ 34-37.

See, also, 19 Cyc. p. 498.

§ 16. — Extent and exclusiveness of franchise.

[a] (Sup. 1827)

Under the act of assembly giving the proprietor of land on the margin of a river the right of having a ferry established, the prior grant of a ferry to objectors to the granting of a petition presents no ground for reversal of the judgment granting the application; it being a matter of discretion with the board of justices and with the circuit court on appeal to grant another ferry where in their opinion the public requires it.—Brown v. Harris, 1 Blackf. 543.

[b] (Sup. 1851)

The Revised Statutes of 1838 do not confer upon the first grantee of a ferry privilege the exclusive right to maintain a ferry at the point where the same may be established, but reserve the right to establish bridges or other ferries at the same point, when the public convenience shall require them.—Bush v. Peru Bridge Co., 3 Ind. 21.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Ferries, §§ 38-40.

§ 19. — Infringement or disturbance.

[a] (Sup. 1822)

In an action on the case for the disturbance of a ferry, the defendant proved that the ferry he occupied had been granted to him by a competent tribunal. Held, that the defendant's grant, though it might be erroneous, was, while unreversed, a bar to the suit.—Conner v. Paxson, 1 Blackf. 168.

[b] (Sup. 1825)

The exclusive privileges of ferries not being known until they were authorized by statute, and the statute authorizing them prescribing a specific penalty for their violation, the owners of ferries must rely for the securities of their rights upon the provisions of the statute.—Lang v. Scott, 1 Blackf. 406, 12 Am. Dec. 257.

[c] (Sup. 1862)

The objection that parties claiming and using a ferry have not paid license regularly may be a sufficient reason for instituting proceedings to declare the right forfeited, but will not be available as a defense to one who should disturb those who possessed the right in the enjoyment thereof, or who should destroy or injure the same.—*New Albany & S. II. REGULATION AND OPERATION.

§ 29. Statutory and municipal regulations.

[a] (Sup. 1889)

Rev. St. 1881, § 3103, gives city councils power to establish and regulate ferries across any stream passing through or bordering on the city limits. A later enactment authorizes the county commissioners to regulate the hours during which ferryboats shall run on streams bordering on the state. Held that, as to interstate ferries, the city council can make only such regulations as are conformable to the regulations of the commissioners, and a complaint for violating, on Sunday, an ordinance of a city on a border stream, requiring ferryboats plying to and from points within the state to stop at the landing every 40 minutes, and not remain longer than 15 minutes at one time, will be dismissed, as it may reasonably be inferred that the regulations of the county commissioners did not require this on Sundays.—City of Madison v. Abbott, 118 Ind. 337, 21 N. E. 28.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Ferries, § 76.

See, also, 19 Cyc. pp. 506, 507.

§ 30. Licenses and taxes.

[a] (Sup. 1865)

A ferryboat is not a vehicle, within 1 Gav. & H. St. p. 223, § 42, giving cities a right to levy a specific tax on vehicles.—Duckwall v. City of New Albany, 25 Ind. 283.

[b] (Sup. 1889)

It is settled that a state may either directly, or through a grant of power delegated to a municipal corporation, exact reasonable license fees from the keepers of ferries living within the state, although their boats ply between landings lying in two different states, this being but the ordinary exercise of the police powers vested in the state or delegated by it to the municipal corporation.—City of Madison v. Abbott, 21 N. E. 28, 118 Ind. 337.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Ferries, § 77.

See, also, 19 Cyc. p. 507.

§ 32. Injuries incident to operation.

[a] (Sup. 1884)

A ferryman, receiving horses in charge of a driver for transportation, is not liable for an accident to them, in the absence of negligence on his part. The fact that between the apron of planks attached to the boat and thrown out at the landing, and the boat, there was a crack in which a frightened horse caught his leg and broke it, held not to show negligence.—Yerkes v. Sabin, 97 Ind. 141, 49 Am. Rep. 434.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Ferries, §§ 79-87.

See, also, 19 Cyc. pp. 509-513.

§ 33. Actions for injuries.

[a] (Sup. 1884)

Where, in an action for an injury to a horse while he was being transported on a ferry boat under the control of plaintiff, the plaintiff charged that the injury occurred through defendant's negligence in keeping and maintaining his boat in an unsafe and dangerous condition, and without any fault or negligence of plaintiff, the question of the defendant's negligence was in issue, and the burden of showing it was on the plaintiff.—Yerkes v. Sabin, 97 Ind. 141, 49 Am. Rep. 434.

[b] (Sup. 1893)

Plaintiff, while a passenger on defendant's ferryboat, was hurt by the falling of a stanchion, which was knocked down by the stage plank which had been run out to land the passengers, and which, by the falling away of the boat, was brought in contact with the stanchion. There was evidence that the stanchion had been shoved in to temporarily support the upper deck, which was heavily loaded, and that it was not perpendicular, nor fastened to the floor, and there was also evidence that the crew placed the stage plank so that it came in contact with the stanchion. There was, on the other hand, evidence that the stanchion was secure enough to resist any ordinary blow or strain, and that other passengers placed the stage plank so that it struck the stanchion. Held that, the burden of proof being on defendant, a verdict for plaintiff was justified by the evidence.—Louisville & J. Ferry Co. v. Nolan, 135 Ind. 60, 34 N. E. 710.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

See, also, 19 Cyc. pp. 511, 512.

§ 35. Offenses incident to operation.

[a] (Sup. 1856)

An information charging accused with hiring a boat to be used for ferrying persons over a stream is bad which fails to allege that any public ferries were established on said stream. The existence of ferries, as they are established by county commissioners, and not by direct public enactment of the legislature, being a fact to be proved, cannot be judicially noticed.—State v. Wise, 7 Ind. 645.

[a] (App. 1894)

Defendant found in a chest which he bought of the estate of W. interest coupons of United States bonds, which W.'s wife stated did not belong to her or W.'s estate, and which defendant then had redeemed. There was evidence that, years before, plaintiff's intestate, who was of a disordered mind, lived with W., and had several United States bonds, which he kept in the chest, and that before he went to another state he detached the coupons from his bonds. Held, that there was evidence to support a verdict for plaintiff.—*Rittenhouse v. [a] (Sup. 1878)

An employé in a paper manufactory found in a bale of old papers, bought by the proprietor, which she was assorting, two lost genuine $50 bank bills, inclosed in an unmarked and undirected envelope. In order to ascertain if they were genuine, she delivered them to the proprietor on his promise to return them to her, but he retained them, notwithstanding her demand for them. Held that, as against him, she was entitled to recover their value.—Bowen v. Sullivan, 62 Ind. 281, 30 Am. Rep. 172.

Act April 15, 1881, providing for the collection of judgments for fines and forfeitures by execution, and the imprisonment of defendant on the expiration of the stay secured to him by the entry of a replevin bill, so far as it relates to judgments replevied before that day is unconstitutional.—*Dinckerlocker v. 2 Rev. St. 1852, p. 378, § 128, providing that when defendant in a criminal case is adjudged to pay any fine and costs, he may be committed until the same are paid or replevied, is unconstitutional, so far as it authorizes commitment for costs, being in violation of Const. art. 1, § 22, which provides that there shall be no imprisonment for debt, except in case of fraud.—Thompson v. State, 16 Ind. 516.

Neither the fine nor costs adjudged against the defendant because of his criminal act are within the meaning of Const. art. 1, § 22, providing that there shall be no imprisonment for debt except in cases of fraud.—McCool v. State, 23 Ind. 127.

[c] (Sup. 1864)

A sentence is not objectionable because providing for imprisonment until the fine and costs are paid or replevied.—Smith v. State, 23 Ind. 132.

[d] (Sup. 1889)

Where defendant was sentenced to imprisonment for 90 days, and until a fine of $1 and costs was paid, when an imprisonment for 90 days had been completed, that portion only of the sentence was discharged, and defendant was not entitled to a credit of 50 cents per day on the fine and costs from the day when his imprisonment commenced.—Ex parte Tongate, 31 Ind. 370.

[e] (Sup. 1891)

Though it is the duty of a justice, if a defendant in a criminal cause does not immediately pay or replevy a fine adjudged against him, to commit him to jail, yet, if he extends indulgence to him by giving him time without bail in which to pay it, the validity of the judgment is not thereby affected, and a mittimus subsequently issued thereon is not void.—*McLaughlin v. § 13. — Discharge of prisoner.

A person who had been committed to prison for failing to pay a judgment and costs rendered against him for violation of a city ordinance, and had been put at hard labor on the streets, under the statutes of the state, made his escape, and after the expiration of 30 days from the date of the judgment returned to the city, and was arrested by the marshal of said city without warrant or other authority. Held, that the 30 days mentioned in the statute must run continuously from the date of the judgment, and that the marshal had no right to arrest or detain such person in custody.—Flora v. Sachs, 64 Ind. 155.

[a] (Sup. 1857)

Under the constitution, providing that the governor shall have power to remit fines and forfeitures under such regulations as may be prescribed by law, the power of the governor to remit fines is not absolute, but can only be exercised pursuant to legislative direction.—State v. Dunning, 9 Ind. 20.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Fines, § 19; 37 CENT. DIG. Pardon, § 5.

[a] (Sup. 1849)

An action of debt to recover a penalty for selling spirituous liquors without a license, under the charter of Indianapolis (Loc. Laws 1838, p. 32, § 30), is a civil proceeding, and not within article 9, § 3, of the constitution, appropriating fines assessed for breach of penal laws to county seminaries.—Town of Indianapolis v. Fairchild, 1 Ind. 315, Smith, 122.

[b] (Sup. 1878)

All fines imposed by the court for contempt belong to the common school fund of the state.—Swift v. State ex rel. Clark, 63 Ind. 81.

[c] (Sup. 1892)

Act March 9, 1889, § 2, imposing a penalty for failure by a railroad to post notices as to whether trains are on time, and providing that one half shall go to the county prosecuting attorney, and the remainder to the county to form a part of the common school fund, is not in conflict with Const. art. 8, § 2, which provides that the common school fund of the state shall consist of, and be derived from, "the fines assessed for breaches of the penal law of the state, and from all forfeitures which may accrue," since the constitution has reference to fines assessed in criminal prosecutions.—State v. Indiana & I. S. R. Co., 32 N. E. 817, 133 Ind. 69, 18 L. R. A. 502; Same v. Pennsylvania Co., 32 N. E. 822, 133 Ind. 700.

Status of buildings and machinery as affected by judgment of foreclosure. MORTGAGES, § 497.

This Digest is compiled on the Key-Number System. For explanation, see page iii.

§ 1. Nature and requisites of conversion into realty in general.

[a] (Sup. 1889)

The nature of the articles, and the manner in which they are affixed, and the intention of the party making the annexation, together with the policy of the law, are controlling factors in determining whether an article which may or may not be a fixture becomes a part of the realty by being annexed to the freehold.—Binkley v. Forkner, 19 N. E. 753, 117 Ind. 176, 3 L. R. A. 33.

[b] (App. 1901)

There is no general rule or test for determining whether or not an article personal in nature has acquired the character of realty by being attached thereto. In each particular case regard is to be had to the chattel itself, the injury that would result from its removal, and the intention in placing it upon the premises with reference to use or ornament.—McFarlane v. Foley, 60 N. E. 357, 27 Ind. App. 484, 87 Am. St. Rep. 264.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FIXT. §§ 1, 6.

See, also, 19 Cyc. pp. 1035, 1036.

§ 4. Intent in making annexation.

[a] (Sup. 1876)

A stationary mill belonging to two partners jointly, placed under a temporary shed on the real estate for manufacturing purposes and fixed in the soil by means of posts, does not constitute a part of the realty, if treated by such owners as personalty.—Young v. Baxter, 55 Ind. 188.

[b] (Sup. 1882)

Sawmills and gristmills are not necessarily real estate. Whether they are, or not, depends on circumstances and on the intentions of the parties.—Price v. Malott, 85 Ind. 266.

§ 7. — Actual.

[a] (Sup. 1832)

A carding machine situated in a building erected for the purpose of carrying on carding, ready to be put in operation, and standing on the floor in its usual place of operation, but not fastened to the building, is personal property, and subject to an execution issued by a justice of the peace.—Taffe v. Warnick, 3 Blackf. 111, 23 Am. Dec. 383.

[b] (Sup. 1866)

A house, standing partly upon a street, will be considered personal property, notwithstanding the claim that it was permanently affixed to an adjoining house, which was part of the realty.—Foy v. Reddick, 31 Ind. 414.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

A line shaft, connecting a stove machine erected under an adjoining shed with a grist-mill, so that it can be run by the engine in the mill, and hung from a joist in the mill is not a fixture.—Balliett v. Humphreys, 78 Ind. 388.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

§ 14. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1830)

The wife of a tenant, after the expiration of his tenancy, sued the owner of the land for an alleged conversion of a house situated thereon. At the trial she showed that she had purchased the house from a former tenant, after his tenancy had expired. Held insufficient to establish her title as against the owner of the land, who had no knowledge of such purchase; there being no privity of contract between her and such owner.—Griffin v. Ransdell, 71 Ind. 440.

As between landlord and tenant, a dwelling house upon land is part of the realty; and a person claiming it to be personalty must show some fact changing its character to personal property.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1883)

A tenant may remove fixtures and improvements erected for his own use at any time during the tenancy, and afterwards by agreement, and, where such right to remove exists, they are treated as personal property.—Price v. Malott, 85 Ind. 266.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FIXT. §§ 22, 25.

See, also, 19 Cyc. p. 1065.

§ 15. — Trade fixtures.

Removal, see post, § 32.

[a] (Sup. 1864)

On failure of a parol contract to purchase the undivided one-half of land upon which the prospective purchaser had erected a mill, the relation of landlord and tenant is created, giving the tenant the right to remove fixtures erected by him for the purposes of manufacture, even in the absence of a special contract.—Yater v. Mullen, 23 Ind. 562.

[b] (App. 1809)

Machinery and fixtures placed on realty leased for gas and oil purposes did not become permanent fixtures nor parts of the freehold by reason of such annexation as was necessary to develop the premises according to the terms of the lease, and the title to such machinery and fixtures did not vest in the lessor on forfeiture of the lease.—Perry v. Acme Oil Co., 88 N. E. 859.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FIXT. §§ 23-29.

See, also, 19 Cyc. p. 1065.

§ 16. — Agricultural fixtures.

[a] (Sup. 1855)

A pump, placed in a well by a tenant, may be removed by him at the expiration of his term.—McCracken v. Hall, 7 Ind. 30.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FIXT. § 30.

See, also, 19 Cyc. p. 1065.

§ 18. Between mortgagor and mortgagee of land and their privies.

[a] (Sup. 1845)

A steam engine, erected in a permanent manner in a tanyard, to facilitate the process of tanning, and used there for such purpose for two or three years, but which could be removed without injury to the building with which it was connected by braces, was held to be a fixture, and to pass by a mortgage of the land on which it was erected to the mortgagee.—Sparks v. State Bank, 7 Blackf. 469.

[b] (Sup. 1861)

A mortgage of a building used for manufacturing purposes carries the fixtures used therein.—Millikin v. Armstrong, 17 Ind. 456.

[c] (Sup. 1871)

Machinery put in a mill after the execution of a mortgage, to supply the place of old and worn-out articles, becomes a part of the realty, and is subject to the lien of the mortgage.—Bowen v. Wood, 35 Ind. 268.

[d] (Sup. 1878)

That a mill was personal property, and not subject to a mortgage on the lands, is sufficiently shown by an averment that when the mortgage was executed the mortgaged lands had upon them a portable steam sawmill, boiler, engine, and other attachments, which were personal property, and were always so treated, and had been from time to time moved, and were attached to the lands only so far as necessary to steady the machinery of the mill, and could be removed without injury to the realty, and that such mill and fixtures were not included in the mortgage.—Taylor v. Watkins, 62 Ind. 511.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FIXT. §§ 32-46.

See, also, 19 Cyc. pp. 1061-1064; note, 13 Am. St. Rep. 153.

§ 19. — Mortgagee of land and mortgagee of chattels.

[a] (Sup. 1889)

Where one purchasing machinery gives a chattel mortgage for its price, and orally agrees that it shall be treated as personalty until paid for, and the realty to which it is afterwards attached by him would not be injured by its removal, the machinery will be considered as personal property, as against a prior mortgagee of the realty.—Binkley v. Forkner, 117 Ind. 176, 19 N. E. 753, 3 L. R. A. 33.

Where a vendee of machinery gives a chattel mortgage for its price, and orally agrees that it shall be treated as personalty, it will be so considered, as against a subsequent mortgagee of the realty, whose mortgage, after describing the land, provides that the mortgagor also mortgages and warrants all machinery, particularly enumerating it, and that none of the same shall be removed until the mortgage is paid.—Id.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FIXT. §§ 42, 43.

§ 20. — Mortgagee of land and vendor or vendee of chattels.

[a] (Sup. 1865)

Where a mill is built upon land of another under an express contract, by which it was to be the sole property of the builder until a judgment which was a lien upon the land should be paid by the owner, the builder has a right to remove the mill after a sale of the land on an execution issued upon such judgment.—Yater v. Mullen, 24 Ind. 277.

After mortgaging certain mill property, A. placed machinery therein, secured simply by cleats, under agreement with the owner of the machinery to use it for 60 days, and, if satisfactory, to pay for it then. At the expiration of the time he refused to pay therefor; and, upon a suit by the mortgagee to foreclose, held that, as against the owner thereof, the machinery was a fixture.—Hamilton v. Huntley, 78 Ind. 521, 41 Am. Rep. 593.

A party in possession, but not the owner, of a flouring mill, was permitted by manufacturers of machinery to put in and annex to it in a temporary manner, as to admit of removal without injury to the mill, certain machinery, which, if found satisfactory after 60 days' trial, was to become his property upon giving notes for the price, and in event of his acceptance of the machinery. Held that, as between the manufacturers and the prior mortgagees of the mill, the machinery was a fixture and part of the real estate subject to the mortgages.—Id.

If the owner of mortgaged land on which is a mill buys machinery for the mill, and so attaches it that it becomes a part of the realty, it becomes subject to the mortgage, notwithstanding an agreement between the mortgagor and the seller of the machinery that title to it shall not pass until it is paid for.—Bass Foundry & Machine Works v. Gallentine, 90 Ind. 525.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FIXT. §§ 44-46.

§ 21. Between vendor and purchaser of land and their privies.

[a] (Sup. 1871)

Between grantor and grantee, the rule allowing removal of fixtures is less liberal than as towards tenants. Where land is sold and conveyed, having situate upon and attached and affixed to it a steam sawmill and machinery, if there is no reservation of the mill and machinery, they will be regarded as a part of the realty, and will pass to the grantee by the conveyance.—Pea v. Pea, 35 Ind. 387.

[b] (Sup. 1878)

A. sold to B., without reservation, a tract of land on which he had placed a cane mill, which was fixed to the ground, and afterwards sold the mill to C., who gave his note to A. for the purchase money. B., on taking possession of the property, refused to allow C. to remove the mill. Held, that the mill passed with the land to B.—Kennard v. Brough, 64 Ind. 23.

[c] (App. 1904)

Where a person puts machinery in a paper mill on his land, which machinery is essential to the use he makes of the land, with the intention that it shall remain there, the machinery is a fixture and passes with the land under an ordinary conveyance thereof.—White v. Cincinnati, R. & M. R. R., 34 Ind. App. 287, 71 N. E. 276.

[d] (App. 1905)

As a general rule, a structure erected by a purchaser of land who was in possession but has not obtained title cannot be removed without the consent of the vendor.—Union Inv. Co. v. McKinney, 74 N. E. 1001, 35 Ind. App. 594.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FIXT. §§ 47-56.

See, also, 19 Cyc. pp. 1050-1061.

§ 25. Between owner of land and trespasser.

[a] (App. 1896)

Where a house is erected on the land of an adjoining owner as a permanent fixture to be used for a residence, it becomes a fixture to the property of the adjoining owner, notwithstanding the house is merely set on blocks.—Dutton v. Ensley, 51 N. E. 380, 21 Ind. App. 46, 60 Am. St. Rep. 340.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FIXT. § 6.

See, also, 19 Cyc. p. 1065.

§ 27. Agreements.

[a] (Sup. 1860)

An agreement, made contemporaneously with the execution of a mortgage upon a machine shop and the real estate upon which the same was situated, together with the "appurtenances," that the patterns, tools, and movable fixtures of said shop should not be regarded as real estate and embraced in said mortgage, but should remain unincumbered personal property, is valid, may control the character of movable fixtures as to being realty or personalty, and subsequent purchasers or mortgagees may be subject to and have the benefit of such agreement.—Frederick v. Devol, 15 Ind. 357.

[b] (Sup. 1865)

A. erected a mill on land owned by another, under a parol contract that if the owner should pay off a certain judgment which was a lien on the land, and should then convey to A. an undivided half of the land, he, the owner, should have one-half of the mill. Until the judgment was paid, the mill was to remain the individual property of A. The owner of the land failed to pay the judgment, and it was sold under an execution. Held, that A. had acquired no interest in the land as a purchaser, and his right to remove the mill did not depend on the law in relation to fixtures erected by him as tenant, but, on the contract, by virtue of which he acted.—Yater v. Mullen, 24 Ind. 277.

[c] (Sup. 1876)

Under 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 354, authorizing a defendant in execution to claim his exemption in either real or personal property, where a stationary mill belonging to two persons had been affixed to the real estate of one of them for manufacturing purposes, under a temporary shed, under an agreement with the judgment creditor having a lien on the land that it should be treated as personalty, where an execution against the owner of such real estate is levied, he may demand that such realty may be set off to him as exempt by an appraisalment, without regard to any interest he may have in such mill, where the value does not exceed the sum of $300, which sum under the law is exempt.—Young v. Baxter, 55 Ind. 188.

[d] (Sup. 1893)

Under an agreement to furnish water to a mill on condition that, if the water rent be not paid, the water company may enter on the premises, shut off the water, and take and hold possession of the machinery and fixtures until it is paid, from the nature of the contract, the machinery and fixtures must remain personal property as between the parties to the contract.—St. Joseph Hydraulic Co. v. Wilson, 33 N. E. 113, 133 Ind. 465.

[e] (App. 1902)

Where one erects a flour mill on leased premises, and fits it with machinery, etc., and the same may be removed without permanently injuring the freehold, he having the right of removal, the mill, etc., is personalty, and subject to mortgage as such.—Gordon v. Miller, 63 N. E. 774, 28 Ind. App. 612.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FIXT. §§ 5, 22, 25, 44, 45, 54.

See, also, 19 Cyc. pp. 1048-1054; note, 19 C. C. A. 441.

§ 28. Rights and remedies of creditors and purchasers at execution sales.

Levy of execution, see EXECUTION, § 25.

[a] (Sup. 1876)

The fact that mill machinery belonging to two persons was attached to realty belonging to one of them, without the agreement of a judgment creditor having a judgment lien upon such land that it should be treated as personalty, will not give to the latter the right to treat it as a part of the realty, where the owners of such machinery treated it as personalty, and it can be removed without injury to the realty.—Young v. Baxter, 55 Ind. 188.

[b] (Sup. 1889)

Where the detachment of articles annexed to realty will occasion no damage to the realty, a lien on them may be enforced by court of equity in the same degree as if they had remained chattels according to the agreement, but, if the detachment would occasion diminution in the value as it would have stood had the detachment not been made, then the depreciation must be made whole and the rights of the parties adjusted by the chancellor according to the equity of the case.—Binkley v. Forkner, 19 N. E. 753, 117 Ind. 176, 3 L. R. A. 33.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FIXT. §§ 58, 59; 30 CENT. DIG. JUDGM. § 1338.

See, also, 19 Cyc. pp. 1072-1076.

§ 30. Removal.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FIXT. §§ 62-66.

See, also, 19 Cyc. pp. 1069-1071.

§ 31. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1905)

Where a house on certain land conveyed to defendant belonged to plaintiff, a stranger to the title to the land, a reservation thereof in the deed conveying the land to defendant was unnecessary to enable plaintiff to remove it.—Adams v. Tully, 73 N. E. 595, 164 Ind. 292.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FIXT. § 62.

See, also, 19 Cyc. p. 1069.

§ 32. — Time and manner of making.

[a] (Sup. 1873)

The right of a tenant to remove trade fixtures put by him into the leased building must be exercised during the term of the lease, or during such further period as the tenant may lawfully and rightfully remain in possession. He can remove them after a voluntary surrender of the premises, or lawful eviction therefrom, only with the assent of the landlord.—Allen v. Kennedy, 40 Ind. 142.

[b] (Sup. 1905)

Plaintiff erected a house on real estate belonging to defendant's grantor under an agreement that it should be personalty, and that plaintiff should be entitled to remove it. Defendant, on purchasing the property, had notice that the house was personalty, and that it was in the possession of and owned by plaintiff, and agreed that plaintiff might remove it within six months if defendant did not purchase it. Held, that plaintiff was not bound to remove the house before expiration of his tenancy, but was entitled to remove it within the six months specified, or, in the absence of such agreement, within a reasonable time after the conveyance of the land to defendant.—Adams v. Tully, 73 N. E. 595, 164 Ind. 292.

[c] (App. 1909)

Where an oil and gas lease authorized the lessor to remove its fixtures "at any time," such right was not unlimited as to time, but the lessee was only entitled to remove within a reasonable time after the expiration of the lease.—Perry v. Acme Oil Co., 88 N. E. 859.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FIXT. §§ 63, 65.

See, also, 19 Cyc. p. 1071.

§ 33. — Waiver or loss of right.

[a] (Sup. 1872)

The general rule is that the tenant must remove fixtures put up by him before he quits the possession on the expiration of his lease. If not removed during the term, they become the property of the landlord.—Cromie v. Hoover, 40 Ind. 49.

[b] (Sup. 1880)

Since a tenant's right to remove a dwelling constructed by him on leased land is restricted to the duration of his tenancy, if he fails to remove it before the expiration of the tenancy the dwelling becomes a part of the freehold, and vests absolutely in the owner thereof.—Griffin v. Ransdell, 71 Ind. 440.

[c] (Sup. 1885)

A lessee, who erects on the demised premises a building which he has a right to remove, renounces that right by surrendering his leasehold interest to the lessor without reservation; and the right is not revived by his subsequently taking another lease of the same premises from the same lessor.—Hedderich v. Smith, 103 Ind. 208, 2 N. E. 315, 53 Am. Rep. 509.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FIXT. §§ 64, 65.

§ 34. — Wrongful removal.

[a] (Sup. 1876)

Fence rails and stakes, unlawfully taken and retained by a wrongdoer, when used by him in the construction of a fence upon his real estate, thereby become part of the realty.—Ricketts v. Dorrel, 55 Ind. 470.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FIXT. § 66.

See, also, 19 Cyc. p. 1070.

§ 35. Actions relating to fixtures.

Grounds for demurrer to pleading, see PLEADING, § 194.

Oral agreement affecting agreement relating to, see EVIDENCE, § 441.

[a] (Sup. 1855)

Fixtures left by the tenant at the expiration of his term will be presumed to have been abandoned; but that presumption may be rebutted by proof of an oral agreement by which he was to have the right of removal at a subsequent day.—McCracken v. Hall, 7 Ind. 80.

[b] (Sup. 1880)

A builder, who had erected a house, finding that a mistake had been made in the lots upon which it was to be erected, and which were to be taken in payment, sold the house and removed it to a lot of the purchaser, placing it upon a permanent brick foundation. Held, that an action for the recovery of the house would not lie, since it has been made a fixture by annexing it to the land of the purchaser.—Reese v. Jared, 15 Ind. 142, 77 Am. Dec. 88.

A. employed B. to build a house, and, after it was erected and finished, B., without the knowledge or consent of A., sold it to C. and moved it upon his (C.'s) land, where it was set upon a permanent brick foundation. Suit by A. to recover possession of the house. Held, that the recovery should have been for the value of the house, and not for the house itself.—Id.

Replevin will lie for the recovery of a house removed from land without the consent of the owner thereof, since it was a fixture appurtenant to the land, of which the owner may be considered still to retain constructive possession.—Foy v. Reddick, 31 Ind. 414.

In the absence of a conveyance in terms sufficient to cover a house as appurtenant to the lot conveyed, it may be presumed that it was treated as personalty by the parties.—Id.

[d] (Sup. 1871)

Since one who erects fixtures on the land of another without a license or right cannot remove the same, where a railroad company, without the consent of the owner and without color of title, entered on land and occupied the same, building a depot and hotel thereon, it is liable for the value of the land at the time of appropriation, with the value of the fixtures erected thereon.—Graham v. Connersville & N. C. Junction R. Co., 36 Ind. 463, 10 Am. Rep. 58.

[e] (Sup. 1876)

Fence materials, wrongfully taken and used in the construction of a fence upon real estate belonging to the wrongdoer, cannot be replevied by the owner as personal property, since they have become fixtures.—Ricketts v. Dorrel, 55 Ind. 470.

An article severed from the realty by a wrongdoer may be replevied by the owner as long as its separate identity can be ascertained, since it is thereby made personal property.—Id.

[f] (Sup. 1881)

An instruction that if a line shaft used for running a machine in an adjoining shed from the mill, where the engine was located, was bolted and fastened securely to the joists of the mill, it was a part of the real estate upon which the mill was situate, was incorrect, since the purposes for, and the circumstances under, which the line shaft was fastened to the mill were proper subjects of inquiry for the jury.—Ballict v. Humphreys, 78 Ind. 388.

[g] (Sup. 1882)

Where saw and grist mills are erected by the owner thereof on the land of another, the presumption is in favor of their being personalty; but, where only the fact of one's owning of such mills without knowing who owns the land on which they are situated appears, the facts must be resorted to in order to determine their character.—Price v. Malott, 85 Ind. 266.

[h] (Sup. 1893)

When a building is erected, it is prima facie a part of the land on which it stands, and, in order to rebut the presumption of law, a state of facts must be shown to take it out of the operation of the general rule.—Indianapolis, D. & W. R. Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 33 N. E. 679, 134 Ind. 127.

[i] (App. 1900)

Where plaintiff furnished materials from which fence rails were made, which were used to erect a line fence under an agreement between plaintiff and defendant's grantors for the maintenance of certain portions of a fence as authorized by Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 6564, and defendant tore down the fence, and threw the rails on his ground, without any intention to rebuild it, plaintiff was entitled to maintain replevin for the rails, since by such severance they lost their character as realty.—Moore v. Combs, 56 N. E. 35, 24 Ind. App. 484.

[U] (Sup. 1905)

Where it was the intention of the parties that a building on certain land should be regarded as personal property, replevin will lie to recover it.—Adams v. Tully, 73 N. E. 595, 164 Ind. 292.

Where a complaint in replevin to recover a building alleged that it was personal property, it was sufficient to overcome the presumption that it was real estate, under Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 379, requiring that, for the purpose of determining the effect of a pleading, its allegations shall be liberally construed, with a view to substantial justice.—Id.

Subjects and titles of acts, see STATUTES, § 107.

[a] (Sup. 1901)

Acts 1899, p. 180, provides that no one shall, within the state, manufacture for sale, offer for sale, or sell any drug or article of food which is adulterated within the meaning of the act; and that whoever shall knowingly have in his possession, with intent to sell, any substance injurious to health, shall be fined. Held, that a contention that, having possession of adulterated food with intent to sell not being enumerated in the prohibitory section, the affixing of a penalty to such act in a subsequent section did not render such conduct unlawful, was without merit.—Isenhour v. State, 62 N. E. 40, 157 Ind. 517, 87 Am. St. Rep. 228.

[b] (Sup. 1908)

Crimes act (Laws 1905, p. 713, c. 168) § 547, declaring punishment for selling unwholesome milk, is repealed by pure food law (Laws 1907, p. 154, c. 104) § 3, which covers the same subject, is different and more comprehensive in its terms, adds new offenses, and prescribes new penalties for those enumerated in the prior act.—State v. Squibb, 170 Ind. 488, 84 N. E. 960.

§ 14. — Illegal sale or use.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 2070, providing a penalty for the sale of diseased animals, to constitute an offense the meat must be sold for food.—Schmidt v. State, 78 Ind. 41.

This Digest is compiled on the Key-Number System. For explanation, see page iii.

[5 Ind. Dig.—Page 87]

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 2070, providing a penalty for the sale of diseased animals, to constitute a violation of the act, the meat must be sold with knowledge on the part of the seller that it is bad.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1908)

Under pure food law (Laws 1907, p. 154, c. 104) § 3, declaring that "no person either by his servant or agent, or as the servant or agent of another," shall sell adulterated milk, it is no offense for one to sell as principal.—State v. Squibb, 170 Ind. 488, 84 N. E. 969.

[c] (Sup. 1908)

Acts 1907, p. 153, c. 104, § 2, makes it unlawful for any person to offer for sale or sell any adulterated or misbranded article of food. Held, that guilty knowledge or intent was not an element of such offense.—Groff v. State, 171 Ind. 547, 85 N. E. 769.

In a prosecution for violating Acts 1907, p. 153, c. 104, § 2, prohibiting the sale of adulterated food, by an alleged sale of oleomargarine for dairy butter, it was no defense that defendant's clerk made the sale in defendant's absence and in violation of his instructions.—Id.

§ 19. — Preliminary proceedings.

[a] (Sup. 1901)

Pure food law (Acts 1899, p. 189), affixing a penalty for the sale or having for sale of adulterated foods, provides that it shall be the duty of the state board of health to enforce the law of the state governing food and drug adulterations. Held, that such provision did not exclude individuals from making complaint against one for the violation of the statute.—Isenhour v. State, 62 N. E. 40, 157 Ind. 517, 87 Am. St. Rep. 228.

§ 20. — Indictment or information.

An information under Rev. St. 1881, § 2070, making it a misdemeanor to kill for the purpose of sale any sick, diseased or injured animal, or to sell or have in one's possession, with intent to sell, the meat of any such animal, must allege that the meat was intended for use as food, and that the diseased and deleterious character thereof was known to the defendant, though such elements are not expressly stated in the statute, and are read into the statute by judicial construction.—Schmidt v. State, 78 Ind. 41.

The use of the word "unlawfully" in an information under Rev. St. 1881, § 2070, making it a misdemeanor to kill for the purpose of sale any sick, diseased or injured animal, or to sell or have in one's possession, with intent to sell, the meat of any such animal, does not excuse the necessity for an averment that the defendant had knowledge of the diseased and deleterious character of the meat, since defendant might have unlawfully killed or possessed himself of the meat without possessing knowledge as to its character.—Id.

[b] (App. 1886)

An information under Rev. St. 1894, § 2164 (Rev. St. 1881, § 2070), making it a penal offense for any one to have in his possession, with intent to sell, the meat of any diseased animal, which alleges that defendant unlawfully and knowingly had such meat in his possession, with intent to sell, sufficiently charges defendant with knowledge that the meat was diseased.—Brown v. State, 14 Ind. App. 24, 42 N. E. 244.

[c] (App. 1896)

Rev. St. 1894, § 2164 (Rev. St. 1881, § 2070), provides that whoever kills, for the purpose of sale, a sick, diseased, or injured animal, or who sells, or has in his possession with intent to sell, the meat of any such animal, shall be fined, etc. Held, that an information for killing diseased animals for the purpose of selling for food need not state that the meat was to be sold within the state.—Moeschke v. State, 14 Ind. App. 393, 42 N. E. 1029.

An information under such statute which alleges that defendant did unlawfully, "knowingly," and wrongfully kill, for the purpose of selling for food, certain sick, diseased, and injured animals, etc., sufficiently shows that defendant knew the animals were sick, diseased, or injured at the time they were killed, and that his purpose was to sell them for food.—Id.

An affidavit charging defendant with the violation of the pure food law (Acts 1899, p. 189), which affixes a penalty for having possession of adulterated food with intent to sell the same, was not insufficient because, while alleging possession of adulterated milk with intent to sell it, it did not contain an averment that the milk was adulterated by defendant.—Isenhour v. State, 62 N. E. 40, 157 Ind. 517, 87 Am. St. Rep. 228.

Where an affidavit charged defendant with the violation of the pure food law (Acts 1899, p. 189), and recited that he had in his possession, with intent to sell, one pint of milk, adulterated with a certain substance injurious to health, to wit, formaldehyde, the affidavit was not bad for want of an allegation that formaldehyde is either poisonous or injurious to health.—Id.

Pure food law (Acts 1899, p. 189) makes it an offense for one to have for sale any food adulterated with a substance injurious to health, and empowers the state board of health to make regulations as to the minimum standards of foods and drugs. Held, that an affidavit charging one with having for sale adulterated milk was not insufficient because it did not charge that the milk in defendant's possession violated a standard of purity established by the board of health.—Id.

It was not necessary that the affidavit should set out the proviso of section 1 of the statute, which provides that it shall not apply to mixtures or compounds recognized as articles of food, and not injurious to health.—Id.

§ 21. — Evidence.

[a] (Sup. 1901)

Defendant testified that he had never used any formaldehyde, and the milk contained none to his knowledge, but that in the morning in question he had put into the milk a substance known as "Palmer's Preserver," and that the maker had told him the preserver had no formaldehyde in it. He was then asked what representations had been made to him as to the preservative, but was not allowed to answer, and there was excluded a circular offered in evidence, which accompanied the preservative, and which stated that it was harmless, and guaranteed to contain no acid or injurious ingredient. Held, that the exclusion of the answer and the circular was reversible error.—Isenhour v. State, 62 N. E. 40, 157 Ind. 517, 87 Am. St. Rep. 228.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

§ 22. — Trial and review.

[a] (Sup. 1901)

On a prosecution for the violation of the pure food law (Acts 1899, p. 189), making it an offense to have in one's possession for sale any article of food adulterated with a substance injurious to health, where it appeared that about 10 o'clock a. m., in the month of July, defendant was found with his milk wagon in the street, and on the demand of the milk inspector for a sample protested against giving up the same because it was the last milk he had, and that he would be required to purchase other milk to serve a customer, and the milk so surrendered was found to contain formaldehyde, it was proper to refuse to instruct that there should be a verdict for defendant on the ground that no knowledge had been shown in the defendant of the presence of the formaldehyde in the milk.—Isenhour v. State, 62 N. E. 40, 157 Ind. 517, 87 Am. St. Rep. 228.

§ 4. Nature and elements of forcible entry.

[a] (Sup. 1828)

A. removed from a house and lot, leaving a few articles in the house and on the lot, and fastening the door. In the night of the second day afterwards, the door being proved to have been still fast on the evening of that day, B. entered into the house and put a tenant in possession, directing him to prevent every person, and A. particularly, from taking possession, and threatening to beat and prosecute any one who should enter on the premises. There was no direct proof, however, that B. broke open the door. On the complaint of A. against B. for a forcible entry and detainer, held that the evidence would justify a finding against the defendant as to the forcible entry.—Evill v. Conwell, 2 Blackf. 133, 18 Am. Dec. 138.

[b] (Sup. 1855)

Where plaintiff went into possession under color of title, and held possession for more than 20 years, evidence that defendants, knowing the land belonged to plaintiff, and that it was in charge of his agent, and part of it in possession of his tenants, entered into a portion of the cultivated part, commenced fencing, working night and day, surrounded by a force, some of it armed, and by threats repelled plaintiff's agents from their attempts to remove the fence, is sufficient to sustain a verdict of forcible entry and detainer.—Bell v. Longworth, 6 Ind. 273.

[c] (Sup. 1878)

Under 2 Rev. St. p. 462, § 12, the plaintiff to maintain an action of forcible entry or detainer, must prove that he was in possession prior to the entry or detainer, and that the defendant's possession was taken or kept by such a show of force as reasonably to intimidate the plaintiff.—Archey v. Knight, 61 Ind. 311.

Evidence that defendants, in order to regain possession of premises from which they had been removed, acted under color of legal process, and caused the plaintiff to be arrested and carried from the premises after which defendants entered, showed a forcible entry.—Tibbetts v. O'Connell, 66 Ind. 171.

The wife of O.'s outgoing tenant delivered the key of the house to T., the next neighbor, to be delivered to O., but T. took possession of the house without O.'s permission. O., finding T. absent, broke into the house, and removed T.'s furniture into the street, and afterwards, at T.'s instance, put it upon another lot, having refused T.'s request to put it back into the house. O. then went to buy a lock, leaving the house in possession of an agent. T. caused O. and the agent to be arrested and taken to a justice's office by a constable, who soon after released them. Meanwhile T. took possession of the house without O.'s leave. Held, that O. could maintain against T. an action of forcible entry and detainer.—Id.

§ 5. Nature and elements of forcible or other unlawful detainer.

As a public offense, see post, § 52.

[a] (Sup. 1828)

Plaintiff removed from a house and lot, leaving a few articles in the house and on the lot, and fastening the door. During the night of the second day afterwards, defendant entered the house and put a tenant in possession, directing him to prevent every person, and plaintiff particularly, from taking possession, and threatening to beat and prosecute any one who should enter on the premises. Held, that the evidence was sufficient to show a forcible detainer as well as forcible entry.—Evill v. Conwell, 2 Blackf. 133, 18 Am. Dec. 138.

[b] (Sup. 1842)

To sustain a case of forcible detainer, there must be proof that the premises are unlawfully detained by force and violence.—Barton v. Osborn, 6 Blackf. 145.

Proceedings in a case of forcible detainer may be supported, under the statute, without proof that the entry was unlawful.—Id.

The complaint showed that the plaintiff had bought the land of the defendant, and that the latter, by agreement with the plaintiff, continued in possession until a certain day, and held over after that day by force and strong hand. Held, that the complaint was sufficient.—Id.

[c] (Sup. 1883)

A lessee of land may maintain an action for damages against a prior lessee who, after the expiration of his term, has unlawfully kept the plaintiff out of possession.—Boyce v. Graham, 91 Ind. 420.

[d] (Sup. 1889)

Where, in an action under Rev. St. § 5237, providing for the recovery of the possession of land lawfully obtained but unlawfully and forcibly withheld, the evidence shows that plaintiffs voluntarily gave defendant possession of the building, and that when possession was demanded he refused to surrender the premises, and peaceably retained possession, a verdict for defendant may be directed, as the essential element of force in retaining the possession is wholly wanting.—Gipe v. Cummins, 116 Ind. 511, 19 N. E. 466.

[e] (App. 1892)

Defendant was tenant from year to year of certain lands. Plaintiff, without the consent of defendant, entered on part of said lands under a subsequent lease from the landlord, and put in a crop of wheat. On his return to harvest the same, defendant resisted his entry. Held, that the resistance was justified, defendant being in possession under a prior right.—

§ 6. Nature and form of remedy.

[a] (Sup. 1878)

As the action of forcible entry and detainer is not intended to try the title to lands, plaintiff must prove that he was in possession of the lands before the forcible entry or forcible detainer.—Archev v. Knight, 61 Ind. 311.

[b] (Sup. 1903)

The action of forcible entry or detainer cannot be employed in either its civil or criminal form to try the right or title to property.—Peelle v. State, 68 N. E. 682, 161 Ind. 378.

§ 8. Title to support action.

[a] (Sup. 1863)

Citizen*, 101 Ind. 18.

§ 24. — Complaint or petition.

[a] (Sup. 1822)

The complaint filed with the justices, in cases of forcible entry and detainer, cannot be objected to for mere matter of form.—Moore v. Read, 1 Blackf. 177.

[b] (Sup. 1827)

The complainant, in an action of forcible entry and detainer, stated that the defendant, with force and arms, unlawfully and forcibly entered upon the plaintiff's land, and him (the plaintiff), with force and arms, did expel and unlawfully put out of possession. Held, that this complaint could not be objected to, after verdict, for not showing more particularly that the plaintiff had peaceable possession of the premises before the injury complained of.—Test v. Devers, 2 Blackf. 80.

[c] (Sup. 1834)

Though a person who has had quiet possession of an estate for three years, and whose interest remains undetermined, is protected by the statute from the action of forcible entry and detainer, yet the declaration in this action need not deny the existence of such a possession, or the continuance of the estate.—Ward v. Crane, 3 Blackf. 393.

[d] (Sup. 1837)

The complaint must show that the land is within the county, and that the detainer is unlawful.—Boxley v. Collins, 4 Blackf. 320.

[e] (Super. 1873)

If a complaint is good under the act of May 13, 1852, concerning the unlawful detention of lands and the recovery thereof, it is unimportant whether it is sufficient under section 595 of the Code.—Jackson v. Adams, Wils. 396.

[f] (Sup. 1882)

"Three and one-half acres off of" a certain tract is not a good description in an action for forcible entry and detainer.—Klingensmith v. Faulkner, 84 Ind. 331.

[g] (Sup. 1882)

2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 665, § 12, providing that "any person who shall make unlawful or forcible entry into lands, and shall either peaceably or forcibly retain the same against any person having right to possession thereof, or any person having peaceably obtained the possession of lands who shall unlawfully and forcibly keep the same against any person having right to the possession thereof, may be ousted from such premises" in the same manner as is provided in the case of tenants holding over, confers jurisdiction on justices of the peace in cases where possession has been unlawfully "and" forcibly taken, and where possession has been peaceably taken, but is unlawfully and forcibly kept from the person entitled thereto, and a complaint which avers a peaceable taking of possession, but which does not allege that the possession was unlawful and forcibly kept from the plaintiff, did not show a cause of action within the scope of the statute.—Burgett v. Bothwell, 86 Ind. 149.

2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 665, § 12, confers on justices of the peace jurisdiction of actions to recover possession of land which possession has been peaceably obtained and "unlawfully and forcibly" kept, and a complaint which alleges a peaceable entry and that defendant "unlawfully" keeps plaintiff out of possession is insufficient, since the retention of possession must not only be unlawful, but forcible.—Id.

[h] (Sup. 1883)

A complaint describing the premises as "about one-fourth of an acre, situated in the northwest corner of section 25, township 12, range 1 west, being the same now occupied by defendant for toll house and garden," giving county and state, is bad on motion in arrest of judgment.—College Corner & R. Gravel Road Co. v. Moss, 92 Ind. 119.

A complaint must describe the lands with certainty, and the degree of certainty sufficient in a deed will not always be sufficient in a pleading.—Id.

Where description in complaint is not sufficient to ascertain the property to be delivered, the complaint is insufficient on demurrer.—Id.

[i] (App. 1894)

In forcible detainer, the county in which the land is situated is sufficiently described where the caption of the complaint is, "State of Indiana, Perry County," and in the body of the complaint the property is described as being in "said county."—Hughes v. Windpfennig, 10 Ind. App. 122, 37 N. E. 432.

[b] (Sup. 1865)

Where plaintiff sued before a justice to recover possession of real estate, and the complaint, as it stood, was in ejectment, and upon its face was without the jurisdiction of the justice, on appeal by plaintiff from a judgment for defendant an application by plaintiff to make the complaint one in forcible detainer was properly denied, as, the justice not having jurisdiction in ejectment, the entire proceedings were void.—Kiphart v. Brennemen, 25 Ind. 152.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

See, also, 19 Cyc. pp. 1176–1180.

II. CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY.

§ 51. Nature and elements of forcible entry.

[a] No question of title is involved in a prosecution for forcible detainer.—(Sup. 1856) Higgins v. State, 7 Ind. 549; (1884) Vess v. State, 93 Ind. 211.

[b] (Sup. 1886)

Where a charge is for both forcible entry and forcible detainer, under the criminal laws, the accused may be found guilty of one and acquitted of the other.—Strong v. State, 105 Ind. 1, 4 N. E. 293.

Conviction of the crime of forcible entry and detainer may be had under Rev. St. 1881, § 1972, by proof of menaces and show of force sufficient to overawe the injured party.—Id.

[c] (App. 1894)

To warrant a conviction for forcible entry under Rev. St. 1894, § 2055 (Rev. St. 1881, § 1972), the taking of possession must have been either by force or with menaces, and without authority of law.—Brazee v. State, 9 Ind. App. 618, 37 N. E. 279.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Forc. E. & D. §§ 192, 193.

See, also, 19 Cyc. pp. 1114–1117.

§ 52. Nature and elements of forcible or other unlawful detainer.

[a] (Sup. 1884)

A prosecution, under Rev. St. 1881, § 1972, for forcible detainer, cannot be maintained against one who forcibly holds possession of lands under a writ regular on its face, based on a judgment of a court having jurisdiction, although such writ was unlawfully issued.—Vess v. State, 93 Ind. 211.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Forc. E. & D. §§ 14, 194.

See, also, 19 Cyc. pp. 1114–1117.

§ 53. Defenses.

[a] (Sup. 1884)

On a prosecution for forcible entry and detainer, defendant can neither go into the evidence to disprove the title of the complainant nor to establish his own, as the question is not one of civil right, but of public concern, affecting the public peace.—Vess v. State, 93 Ind. 211.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Forc. E. & D. § 195.

§ 55. Persons who may prosecute.

[a] (Sup. 1903)

In a prosecution under Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 2055, for forcible entry, it is not incumbent on the state to prove that the tenant dispossessed was in "rightful" possession of the premises, it being sufficient to show a "peaceable" possession.—Peelle v. State, 68 N. E. 682, 161 Ind. 378.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Forc. E. & D. § 197.

§ 56. Inquisition or other summary proceeding.

[a] (Sup. 1886)

An affidavit charging defendant with having, on a designated day, violently and forcibly entered into certain premises, to wit, a certain storeroom situate on Main street, in the town of A., in a certain county, and forcibly expelled the person then in possession, sufficiently describes the premises, in a prosecution for unlawful detainer, where restitution is not demanded nor contemplated.—Strong v. State, 4 N. E. 293, 105 Ind. 1.

[b] (Sup. 1903)

In a prosecution under Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 2055, for forcible entry on certain premises, an affidavit charging that accused unlawfully took possession of a certain dwelling house and land in a certain county, in the possession of a named owner, is sufficiently certain in the description of the premises.—Peelle v. State, 68 N. E. 682, 161 Ind. 378.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Forc. E. & D. § 198.

See, also, 19 Cyc. p. 1118.

§ 57. Prosecution by indictment or information.

[a] (Sup. 1856)

Under an indictment for forcible entry and detainer, evidence is admissible that the defendant in forcibly entering, etc., assaulted and beat the party in possession.—Higgins v. State, 7 Ind. 549.

[b] (Sup. 1866)

In a prosecution by information for a forcible entry and detainer, any variance between the description of the premises as laid in the information and the evidence will be fatal.—Ball v. State, 26 Ind. 155.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

The words "dwelling house," in an information for forcible detainer, are equivalent to the word "land," as used in 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 462, § 12, defining the offense.—Endsley v. State, 76 Ind. 467.

Where an affidavit filed August 20, 1906, charged forgery in January, 1905, it based the prosecution on section 2354, Burns' Ann. St. 1901, because the public offense statute of 1905, defining and punishing forgery, but providing against interference with prosecution of acts committed, was passed after January of that year.—*State v. [a] (Sup. 1907)

Forgery is the false making or materially altering of any writing which, if genuine, is of legal efficacy, or is the foundation of a legal liability, and, if the writing is manifestly void, it is not the subject of forgery.—State v. Floyd, 169 Ind. 186, 81 N. E. 1153.

[a] (Sup. 1886)

An instrument reading thus: "La Grange, June 19, 1881. Mr. Allen: Please let A. Garmire have team to go to Mongo, and charge same to me. T. Hudson,"—is a writing obligatory promising to pay money, within the meaning of the Indiana statute defining the crime of forgery.—Garmire v. State, 104 Ind. 444, 4 N. E. 54.

[b] (Sup. 1888)

Forgery may be predicated on an order reading: "Halls and Davisons: Please let this boy have a suit of cloth. [Signed] Mrs. Wilson. And let him have a cap too."—Stewart v. State, 113 Ind. 505, 16 N. E. 180.

[c] (Sup. 1902)

Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 2016, makes it an offense to alter any record made by law pertaining to any court of record or any paper or writing, etc., filed in such court. By Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 980, an attorney at law, acting under employment, may enter satisfaction of a judgment; and by section 590 every indorsement of payment on the record of any judgment, signed by plaintiff's attorney, operates as satisfaction. Held, that an indorsement of payment and satisfaction on the record of a judgment by one authorized to make it is a record, within the meaning of section 2016.—State v. Henning, 63 N. E. 207, 158 Ind. 196.

Where a subscription paper is headed with merely the title, character, authorship, and price of a book, followed by the word "subscribers," a name written under "subscribers" clearly imports a promise to take a copy of the book and pay the price indicated, and constitutes a "writing obligatory" or "instrument in writing" within the meaning of Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2354, defining forgery.—State v. Hazard, 168 Ind. 163, 80 N. E. 149.

Forgery may be based on any writing which, if genuine, would operate as a foundation of a person's liability or the evidence of his right.—Id.

[a] (Sup. 1907)

A school teacher's receipt, purporting to be executed by a teacher actually employed in the township, for salary received, is a subject of forgery.—State v. Floyd, 169 Ind. 136, 81 N. E. 1153.

§ 10. — Alteration of instrument.

Allegations in indictment, see post, § 30.

[a] (Sup. 1877)

An indictment cannot be predicated upon the uttering of an instrument altered in an immaterial part.—Bittings v. State, 56 Ind. 101.

[b] (Sup. 1879)

On a trial for forgery of a promissory note, the payee's penciling in its margin, after its delivery, the words, "May pay Oct. 20th, '78," is immaterial.—Robinson v. State, 66 Ind. 331.

[c] (Sup. 1901)

Defendant sold wheat to P., by whose direction he delivered it at a railroad grain warehouse, and took a receipt stating the name of the seller and buyer, and the quantity of wheat delivered, on the back of which was written, "No. 3 red," for the purpose of informing the buyer of the warehouseman's judgment as to the grade of the wheat, and enabling him thereby to fix the price. Defendant altered this memorandum on the back of the receipt by changing the figure "3" to "2." Held not sufficient to support an indictment for forgery, under Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 2354 (Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 2206), declaring that whoever falsely alters any "receipt" for money with intent to defraud shall be guilty of forgery, since the change in the memorandum on the back in no way varied the legal effect of the receipt.—State v. Hendry, 59 N. E. 1041, 156 Ind. 392, 54 L. R. A. 794.

[a] (Sup. 1877)

Uttering, as an order of Ezra Loutzenbeiser, an order signed, "Elirere Lowtrheiser," held not to be a forgery.—Abbott v. State, 59 Ind. 70.

[b] (Sup. 1886)

A charge of forgery may be based upon an instrument which bears such a resemblance to the genuine instrument it is intended to represent as is calculated to deceive, and the person forging an instrument cannot escape punishment, where there is such a resemblance, upon the ground that the forgery was such as would have deceived only stupid and careless persons.—Garmire v. State, 104 Ind. 444, 4 N. E. 54.

[c] (Sup. 1887)

The defendant wrote, in a promissory note, the signature, "Bill Stevens," and offered the instrument for sale as the promissory note of William R. Stephens, falsely representing that the latter had executed it. Held, that the note as signed, "Bill Stevens," did not indicate on its face that it was not intended as the note of William R. Stephens; and that defendant was guilty of forgery.—Rudicel v. State, 111 Ind. 595, 13 N. E. 114.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Forg. § 27.

§ 12. — Apparent legal efficacy or operation of instrument.

[a] (Sup. 1850)

As a note payable to bearer may be transferred by indorsement as well as by mere delivery, and as such an indorsement operates to charge the indorser, the writing of an indorsement on the back of such a note without authority, and with intent to defraud, constitutes forgery.—State v. Crawford, 2 Ind. 23.

[b] (Sup. 1867)

An indictment for forging a certificate which purported to be signed by a mustering officer of the United States, and certified that a certain person had been mustered into the military service of the United States and credited to Allen county, and that said soldier was entitled to a bounty which had been voted by the county board, was held to be bad, because, at the time of the alleged forgery, the appropriation of money for bounties was illegal and void.—Reed v. State, 28 Ind. 396.

[c] (Sup. 1876)

An indictment for forgery of a promissory note may be sustained, notwithstanding the instrument did not contain the name of a payee.—Harding v. State, 54 Ind. 359.

[d] (Sup. 1882)

An indictment can be maintained for the forgery of a written order to pay money, though the order contain the name of no drawee; the omission being filled in by proof.—Powers v. State, 87 Ind. 97.

[c] (Sup. 1884)

A note signed "John ^{per} Jones," though the ^{mark} place for the mark was blank, will support an indictment for forgery.—Lemasters v. State, 95 Ind. 367.

[f] (Sup. 1885)

An indictment charging the forgery of an order for goods and chattels is not bad because of the misspelling of the word "groceries," where the order as set out is for "$3.00 of groceries."—Myers v. State, 101 Ind. 379.

[g] (Sup. 1886)

The instrument upon which the charge of forgery is based must be one having some legal effect, but it is not necessary that it should be a perfect instrument.—Garmire v. State, 104 Ind. 444, 4 N. E. 54.

[h] (Sup. 1907)

Where a written instrument appears on its face to be void as a matter of law, a charge of forgery thereof cannot be maintained.—State v. Hazzard, 168 Ind. 163, 80 N. E. 149.

The unauthorized signing of another's name to a writing which shows on its face that it has some apparent legal effect, though it does not appear to be perfect, constitutes forgery.—Id.

[i] (Sup. 1907)

A written instrument imperfect on its face, but which by the aid of extrinsic facts may be used to defraud another, is a proper subject of forgery.—State v. Floyd, 169 Ind. 136, 81 N. E. 1153.

A written instrument which is manifestly void is not the subject of forgery.—Id.

§ 15. False entries or records, and alteration of entries or records.

Allegations in indictment, see post, § 31.

[a] (Sup. 1838)

Under Rev. Laws 1831, § 9, providing that "every person who shall falsely make, forge, etc., any deed, record, certificate of a justice of the peace, or other public officer, or any other instrument in writing whatever, with intent to defraud any person or persons, shall be guilty of forgery," a deposition taken to be used as evidence in an action is not a subject of forgery.—Atkinson v. Reding, 5 Blackf. 39.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Forg. § 50.

See, also, 19 Cyc. p. 1375; note, 75 Am. Dec. 571.

§ 20. Defenses.

[a] (Sup. 1886)

Where, in a prosecution for forgery, the forged instrument bears a date which would indicate that a prosecution for forgery was barred by limitation, but the indictment explicitly charges that it was forged and uttered upon another date which is within the limitation of the statute, defendant cannot escape punishment because of the error in the date.—Garmire v. State, 4 N. E. 54, 104 Ind. 444.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Forg. § 56.

Disjunctive or alternative allegations, see INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION, § 72.

Repugnancy, see INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION, § 73.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Forg. §§ 61-102.

See, also, 19 Cyc. pp. 1392-1411.

§ 26. — Requisites and sufficiency in general.

[a] (Sup. 1847)

A statute enacted "that every person who shall falsely make, deface, destroy, etc., any record, etc., shall be deemed guilty of forgery." Held, that an indictment on that statute, charging that the defendant did unlawfully and feloniously destroy, etc., was not objectionable for omitting the word "falsely."—State v. Dark, 8 Blackf. 526.

[b] (Sup. 1876)

An indictment for forgery charged that the defendant, at a certain time and place, "did unlawfully, feloniously, and falsely forge and counterfeit a certain promissory note for the payment of money," the note being set out in full, "with intent to defraud" the bank at which it was made payable. Held, that the indictment was good.—Sharley v. State, 54 Ind. 168.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Forg. § 61.

See, also, 19 Cyc. p. 1392.

§ 27. — Intent.

[a] (Sup. 1877)

Whether an indictment for forgery is for committing the original forgery, or for uttering the forged paper as true, the intent may be laid to be to defraud the person whose name has been forged.—Shinn v. State, 57 Ind. 144.

[b] (Sup. 1894)

An indictment alleging that defendant knowingly uttered a forged note is sufficient to charge defendant with uttering a note knowing it to be forged.—State v. Williams, 139 Ind. 43, 38 N. E. 330, 47 Am. St. Rep. 253.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FORG. § 62.

See, also, 19 Cyc. p. 1395.

§ 28. — Description of or setting forth instrument.

[a] (Sup. 1869)

Under 2 Gav. & H. St. p. 446, § 30, providing that every person who shall falsely make or alter any promissory note for the payment of money or property shall be guilty of forgery, an indictment for altering a promissory note should set it forth in substance and effect, and allege that it was given for either money or property, though it is alleged in the indictment that the note was destroyed by the defendant.—Birdg v. State, 31 Ind. 88.

[b] (Sup. 1876)

An indictment for forging or for knowingly uttering a counterfeited instrument of writing must set forth an exact copy of the instrument.—State v. Cook, 52 Ind. 574.

[c] Where the instrument alleged to have been forged is set out in the indictment, the mere misnomer of the instrument is not ground for quashing the indictment.—(Sup. 1876) Harding v. State, 54 Ind. 359; (1882) Powers v. Same, 87 Ind. 97; (1886) Garmire v. Same, 104 Ind. 444, 4 N. E. 54.

[d] (Sup. 1877)

An indictment for forgery charged that defendant did utter and publish as true a certain forged note, which was set out, payable to defendant, and purporting to be executed by one "S. B. S. Kiner," with intent to defraud one "Solomon B. S. Kinner," etc. Held, that the indictment was fatally defective.—Shinn v. State, 57 Ind. 144.

[e] (Sup. 1878)

An indictment predicated upon the forging and uttering of a certificate of acknowledgment of the execution of a deed of land, with intent to defraud the owner or his heirs, assumes the validity of the conveyance itself as between the grantor and grantee, and is sufficient.—State v. Dufour, 63 Ind. 567.

[f] (Sup. 1878)

An indictment charged the defendant with the forgery of a promissory note, "with intent to defraud one Emily J. Schweitzer," while such note appeared, by copies thereof and of the indorsement thereon set out in the indictment, to have been payable to, and indorsed by, one "E. J. Schweitzer." Held, that the indictment was insufficient.—Yount v. State, 64 Ind. 443.

[g] (Sup. 1881)

A description in the indictment of a note alleged to have been forged, and which is lost, that it was signed by "one Henry Wintode or Henry R. Wintode," is not uncertain or equivocal.—Hess v. State, 73 Ind. 537.

[h] (Sup. 1881)

In an indictment for forgery, where the forged paper has been partly burned and blotted while in defendants' possession, the substance only thereof need be stated in the indictment, although parol evidence could supply the missing part.—Munson v. State, 79 Ind. 541.

[i] (Sup. 1885)

In an indictment for forgery of "a certain order purporting to have been made and executed by one Vincent T. West," followed by the instrument set out ipsisimis verbis, showing that it was signed "Dr. West," held, that the purporting clause would be rejected as surplusage.—Myers v. State, 101 Ind. 379.

[j] (Sup. 1890)

An indictment for forgery, which states that the note alleged to be forged "has been destroyed, or is in the possession of one to the grand jury unknown," is sufficient when the note is described, and its substance set out.—State v. Callahan, 124 Ind. 364, 24 N. E. 732.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FORG. §§ 60-76.

See, also, 19 Cyc. pp. 1397-1403.

§ 29. — Facts extrinsic to instrument in general.

[a] (Sup. 1861)

In a prosecution for forgery, the indictment alleged that on, etc., at, etc., the defendant did unlawfully, etc., give, barter, sell, utter, publish, and put away to one B. 16 false, forged, and counterfeit bank notes the genuine of which bank notes were current at the time in the state of Indiana, and which purported to be the genuine, and were for, etc., each, and issued by the Winstead Bank of Connecticut, payable to "E. Seymour, or bearer." Held, that it was not necessary to the full description of the offense charged to allege that the genuine notes were current, and that such an averment was mere surplusage.—Porter v. State, 17 Ind. 415.

[b] An indictment for forgery must show that the instrument of which the forgery is predicated is such, on its face, as is naturally calculated to have some effect; or, if it be not sufficient for that purpose, extrinsic matter must be averred, so that the court may judicially see its fraudulent tendency.—(Sup. 1867) Reed v. State, 28 Ind. 396; (1876) State v. Cook, 52 Ind. 574; (1887) Shannon v. State, 109 Ind. 407, 10 N. E. 87.

[c] (Sup. 1886)

The estate of a decedent is a person in legal contemplation so that an information for forgery with intent to defraud "the estate of" M. sufficiently charges an intent to defraud a "person."—Billings v. State, 6 N. E. 914, 7 N. E. 763, 107 Ind. 54, 57 Am. Rep. 77.

[d] (Sup. 1895)

An indictment for forging a deed purporting to have been executed by one Hannah McCormick—the copy of such deed set out in the indictment being signed "Hannah McCormick,"—is insufficient without an express allegation that the forged signature was intended for "Hannah McCormick."—State v. McCormick, 141 Ind. 685, 40 N. E. 1089.

[e] (Sup. 1897)

An affidavit and information for forgery of a note which aver that the forged name was signed in German characters, and added a like statement after the signature itself, is sufficient, though the name is not set forth exactly as it appears on the note.—Beyerline v. State, 45 N. E. 772, 147 Ind. 125.

[f] (Sup. 1907)

The indictment for forgery of an apparently void instrument must allege such intrinsic facts as will show the writing to have a legal effect.—State v. Hazard, 168 Ind. 163, 80 N. E. 149.

[g] (Sup. 1907)

Where a forged paper is such that without the existence of extrinsic facts no apparent legal liability is created thereby, the indictment must aver such facts as will disclose its capacity to defraud.—State v. Floyd, 169 Ind. 136, 81 N. E. 1153.

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, §§ 5989a, 5989b, requiring contracts between teachers and school corporations to be kept in a public record, and section 8085h, requiring every township trustee to present to the advisory board receipts and expenditures, etc., a township advisory board knows who the teachers of its township were during the year, and an indictment on a forged receipt for the expenditure of tuition funds, signed in the name of one as teacher, must allege that a person of the name signed was under contract to teach before the commission of the alleged forgery.—Id.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Forg. §§ 77-81.
See, also, 19 Cyc. pp. 1405-1408.

§ 30. — Making or alteration of instrument.

[a] (Sup. 1876)

An allegation in an indictment that the defendant forged a certain instrument is inconsistent with a subsequent allegation that he then and there knew said instrument was then and there, false, forged, etc.—State v. Cook, 52 Ind. 574.

[b] (Sup. 1877)

An indictment for uttering an "altered" instrument must clearly set out the alteration alleged, with the proper averments showing an alteration of a material part thereof.—Bittings v. State, 56 Ind. 101; Kahn v. Same, 58 Ind. 168.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Forg. §§ 82-84.
See, also, 19 Cyc. pp. 1394, 1395.

§ 31. — Falsification of entries or records.

[a] (Sup. 1902)

On a prosecution under section 2016, Burns' Ann. St. 1901, the indictment alleged an alteration of an indorsement of payment on the record of a judgment, against a township, which indorsement recited: "Received payment in full on the within from the clerk. H. & H., Attorneys for Plaintiff. Received of L., trustee, $140. J. H., Clerk." Held, that the indictment was insufficient, inasmuch as it did not show that the entry of payment was made by the attorneys, or that they acted as attorneys for plaintiff, and the affixing of the word "clerk" to the name J. H. did not show him to be clerk of court, or to have authority to execute the writing appearing above his name.—State v. Henning, 63 N. E. 207, 158 Ind. 196.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Forg. § 63.
See, also, 19 Cyc. p. 1395.

§ 32. — Uttering or publishing forged instrument.

Allegations as to intent, see ante, § 7.

[a] (Sup. 1877)

The offense of uttering an altered instrument may be charged in the indictment as the uttering of either a "forged" or an "altered" instrument.—Bittings v. State, 56 Ind. 101.

An indictment which charges the defendant with having uttered "as true a certain false, forged, altered, and counterfeit" written instrument, "knowing the same to be false," etc., "with intent to defraud," etc., is one which charges the uttering of a once genuine, but altered, instrument.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

An indictment for uttering a forged note, alleging that the note cannot be particularly described for the reason that it is lost "and the state, by her officers and agents duly authorized in that behalf, after diligent search therefor cannot find the same," alleged sufficient diligence on the part of the state in connection with the loss of the forged note without further alleging a search for the note by the persons to whom it was uttered.—Hess v. State, 73 Ind. 537.

[c] (Sup. 1882)

An information for uttering a forged instrument is insufficient where it fails to allege that the accused uttered the instrument knowing it to be false, forged, and counterfeit.—Powers v. State, 87 Ind. 97.

[d] (Sup. 1904)

An information for uttering a forged instrument, which alleges that defendant passed it to M., is sufficient without showing how it was passed.—Selby v. State, 69 N. E. 463, 161 Ind. 667.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,
SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Forg. § 64.
See, also, 19 Cyc. p. 1409.

§ 34. — Issues, proof, and variance.

[a] (Sup. 1856)

Where an indictment for forgery alleged the passing to A. B. Robinson of a forged bank note with intent to defraud said A. B. Robinson, while the proof showed that Robinson's name was "Alexander B. Robinson," but that he was often called "A. B. Robinson," the indictment was bad on motion in arrest.—Zellers v. State, 7 Ind. 659.

An indictment for forgery purported to set out the instrument forged in hæc verba. The name of the president of the bank on which the note was alleged to be forged was stated to be "Sedbetter." On proof at the trial that the name was "Ledbetter," the variance was held fatal.—Id.

In an indictment for forgery the forged note was alleged to have been passed to "A. B. R." Proof at the trial that R.'s name was "Alexander B. R.," but that he was often called "A. B. R." Held, there being no allegation that R.'s Christian name was unknown, that the variance was fatal.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1858)

An indictment for uttering with intent to defraud A. is not made out by showing an uttering to A. as security for a pre-existing debt, and with no intent of procuring credit for a further amount. Aliter, perhaps, if it had charged an intent to defraud generally.—Colvin v. State, 11 Ind. 361.

[c] (Sup. 1860)

In an indictment for forgery in uttering and putting away counterfeit bank notes, the notes were described as payable to "E. lymour or bearer," while those offered in evidence were payable to "E. Seymour, or bearer." Held, that the variance was fatal.—Porter v. State, 15 Ind. 433.

[d] (Sup. 1876)

An indictment for forgery set out a copy of the instrument alleged to have been forged, as follows: "Trueblood & Allen, Salem, Ind.: Please let Jim Cook [the defendant] have two dollars worth on my credit. Fred L. Prow, Salem." Held, that this instrument, with the allegation that the drawees were in the grocery trade, did not support an averment in the indictment that it was "for the payment of money and delivery of grocery goods."—State v. Cook, 52 Ind. 574.

[e] (Sup. 1876)

The note offered in evidence on trial of an indictment for forgery contained a clause that the indorsers severally "waive presentment, protest, and notice of protest and nonpayment;" but the copy given in the indictment omitted the words here italicized. Held, that the variance was fatal.—Sharley v. State, 54 Ind. 168.

[f] (Sup. 1878)

Where, in a prosecution for forging an indorsement to a note, the note is set out in the indictment, it thereby becomes matter of description, and must be proved as alleged.—Rooker v. State, 65 Ind. 86.

At the trial of an indictment for the forgery of an indorsement to a note the original was found to be exactly like the copy set out in the indictment, except that the date had been erased, and one of a day earlier than that named in the indictment written in instead. Held, that this was a fatal variance.—Id.

[g] (Sup. 1881)

In a prosecution for forging a national bank note, the copy thereof set out in the indictment contained the name "L. W. Chittenden, Register of the Treasury," while the note presented in evidence showed that the name was "L. E. Chittenden," etc. Held, that the variance was material and fatal, and the note inadmissible.—State v. Pease, 74 Ind. 263.

[h] (Sup. 1881)

In a prosecution for a forgery, charging the alteration of a note, it was clearly shown that at the time of its execution and delivery to defendant it did not contain the figures "65/100," and it was also well established that at the time it was presented and paid it did contain these figures. Held, that the note was therefore admissible under a count in the indictment charging simply a felonious alteration after its delivery to defendant.—Munson v. State, 79 Ind. 541.

[i] (Sup. 1908)

In a prosecution for uttering a forged note, the fact that defendant forged the instrument need not be established, but the charge is sustained by proof of an uttering.—State v. Fisk, 170 Ind. 166, 83 N. E. 905.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Forg. §§ 85-102.

§ 35. Presumptions and burden of proof.

[a] (Sup. 1874)

In a prosecution for forgery the intent to defraud may be inferred from the facts and circumstances proved in the cause, and need not be established by direct proof.—Fletcher v. State, 49 Ind. 124, 19 Am. Rep. 673.

[b] (Sup. 1875)

Proof that a defendant had in his possession, and uttered and published as true, a commercial instrument with the forged indorsement of the name of the payee thereon, does not raise the presumption that the defendant made the forged indorsement.—Miller v. State, 51 Ind. 405.

FORNICATION.

Scope-Note.

[INCLUDES sexual intercourse by unmarried persons, not constituting or not regarded as an element in any other distinct offense; nature and extent of criminal responsibility therefor, and grounds of defense; and prosecution and punishment of such acts as public offenses.

[EXCLUDES offenses in which fornication is an element merely (see Adultery; Lewdness; Seduction; and other specific heads). For complete list of matters excluded, see cross-references, post.]

[a] (Sup. 1830)

Intercourse between persons, only one of whom is unmarried, is adultery and not fornication in the person unmarried.—State v. Pearce, 2 Blackf. 318.

[b] (Sup. 1849)

Living in open and notorious fornication or adultery is an indictable offense; but the mere act of fornication or adultery is not indictable.—Lumpkins v. Justice, 1 Ind. 557, Smith, 322.

[c] (Sup. 1855)

Any single act of sexual intercourse between a married female and a male person not her husband, or between an unmarried female and a male person, is whoredom.—Rodebaugh v. Hollingsworth, 6 Ind. 339.

[d] (Sup. 1877)

Fornication includes sexual intercourse between a man, married or unmarried, and an unmarried woman. Only when the woman is married is the term "adultery" applicable.—Hood v. State, 56 Ind. 263, 26 Am. Rep. 21.

[e] (Sup. 1909)

"Fornication" at common law was unlawful sexual intercourse between a man, either married or single, and an unmarried woman, and was not punishable unless accompanied by such circumstances as per se constituted a misdemeanor.—Richey v. State, 172 Ind. 134, 87 N. E. 1032.

The criminal statutes have adopted substantially the common-law doctrine, which regarded clandestine acts of adultery and fornication as a gross violation of personal rights, for which redress might be had in a civil action by the injured person, and make such acts public offenses only when they tend to affect public morals.—Id.

Information charged that defendant lived in fornication from September 20, 1858, to October 25, 1859. The affidavit charged the offense only from October 20, 1858, to September 25, 1859. Further, the information covered time that had not expired when the court sat and proceedings were had. Held that the information was nevertheless good.—State v. Record, 16 Ind. 111.

I. DECEPTION CONSTITUTING FRAUD, AND LIABILITY THEREFOR.

Fraud as affecting estoppel of tenant to deny title of landlord, see LANDLORD AND TENANT, § 62.

§ 1. Nature of fraud.

[a] (Sup. 1875)

Fraud must not be induced by the person who complains of it, nor must he suffer himself to become an indolent victim.—Stedman v. Boone, 49 Ind. 469.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Fraud, §§ 1-7.

§ 2. Elements of actual fraud.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Fraud, §§ 1, 2.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 8, 12-43.

§ 3. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1855)

Where a party designedly produces a false impression in order to mislead, entrap, or obtain undue advantage over another, in every such case there is fraud,—an evil act, with an evil intent.—Peter v. Wright, 6 Ind. 183.

[b] (Sup. 1884)

One who, assuming to know the laws of another state, induces another to act on his representations in regard thereto, and misleads such party, is guilty of fraud, though he did not know that his statements in regard to the law were false.—Bethell v. Bethell, 92 Ind. 318.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Fraud, § 1.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 8, 12, 15.

§ 4. — Intent.

Fraud procuring execution of deed, see DEEDS, § 70.

Pleading, see post, § 42.

[a] (Sup. 1885)

A complaint for fraud, alleging mere false representations, is insufficient, since, in the absence of either recklessness or carelessness, there can be no fraud which does not involve moral turpitude.—Furnas v. Friday, 1 N. E. 206, 102 Ind. 129.

[b] (App. 1891)

Fraud cannot be predicated upon acts which the party charged has a right by law to do nor upon the nonperformance of acts which by law he is not bound to do, whatever may be his motive, design, or purpose either in doing or not doing the acts complained of.—Reiter v. Cumback, 27 N. E. 443, 1 Ind. App. 41.

[c] (App. 1907)

An action for deceit is founded on defendant's moral delinquency and requires proof of evil intent and knowledge of the falsity of representations made plaintiff.—Hartford Life Ins. Co. v. Hope, 40 Ind. App. 354, 81 N. E. 505, 1088.

§ 7. — Fiduciary or confidential relations.

[a] (Sup. 1896)

False representations made by an attorney to an inexperienced client, as a basis for an extravagant overcharge for services in securing certain property for the client, that the other claimant to such property had employed all the attorneys in the place, will support a suit for fraud.—Manley v. Felty, 146 Ind. 194, 45 N. E. 74.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 60.

§ 8. Fraudulent representations.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Fraud, §§ 3-5, 8, 11-14.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 14-22; note, 15 L. R. A. 795.

§ 9. — Nature in general.

[a] To sustain an action for deceit, it must be established that the representations complained of were false; that they were relative to matters material to the transaction, and not solely to promises as to matters in futuro; that the defendant, in making the representations, knew them to be false; and that the plaintiff, exercising ordinary prudence, relied on them as true, to his injury.—(Sup. 1851) State Bank v. Hamilton, 2 Ind. 437; (1875) Jagers v. Jagers, 49 Ind. 428.

[b] (Sup. 1880)

In a suit on a note, defendant answered that it was given for the right to sell a patented machine, which the original payee falsely represented would clean wheat rapidly and effectually. Held, that the words "rapidly" and "effectually" were merely descriptive, and not actionable as fraudulent representations.—Neidefer v. Chastain, 71 Ind. 363, 36 Am. Rep. 198.

[c] (Sup. 1883)

Fraudulent representations as to the condition of a mine, its drainage, quantity of coal near the shaft, amount worked, etc., whereby plaintiff, who could not examine it, was induced to take a lease thereof, are actionable.—Arbuckle v. Biederman, 94 Ind. 168.

[d] (App. 1901)

One who denies that which he has previously affirmed may be held to have committed a fraud in law.—Pritchett v. Ahrens, 59 N. E. 42, 26 Ind. App. 56, 84 Am. St. Rep. 274.

[e] (App. 1908)

Defendants sold plaintiff a tract of land by a deed representing the tract to contain 35.70 acres. The evidence showed that both of defendants represented it to contain about 36 acres; that defendants, who were occupying and farming the whole tract within the indicated lines, pointed out fences as line fences which were not such; and that, by a subsequent survey, the acreage thus indicated was reduced nearly one-fifth. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to recover damages resulting from the shortage.—Petrie v. Ludwig, 41 Ind. App. 310, 83 N. E. 770.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Fraud, § 8.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 14.

§ 10. — Matters of fact or of law.

[a] False representations as to matters of law are not actionable.—(Sup. 1846) Russell v. Branham, 8 Blackf. 277; (1879) Burt v. Bowles, 69 Ind. 1; (1880) Clodfelter v. Hullett, 72 Ind. 137.

[b] (Sup. 1885)

Where defendant, a skilled attorney, induced plaintiff to pay him money to remove alleged liens on property conveyed by plaintiff to defendant, held that, though the mistake was one of law, plaintiff could recover.—Kinney v. Dodge, 101 Ind. 573.

[c] (App. 1908)

The rule that a party who has been induced to execute an agreement by the fraudulent representations of the other party may set up such representations in bar of an action on the agreement does not apply where the representations, though false, relate to the legal effect of the instrument.—Gipe v. Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. R. Co., 41 Ind. App. 156, 82 N. E. 471.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Fraud, § 11.

§ 11. — Matters of fact or of opinion.

[a] Representations of value, however false they may be, are not actionable.—(Sup. 1881) Cagney v. Cuson, 77 Ind. 494; (1881) Hartman v. Flaherty, 80 Ind. 472; (1883) Shale v. Creviston, 93 Ind. 591.

[b] (Sup. 1886)

A representation that promissory notes are good and made by solvent parties is not a mere commendation of quality, but is the statement of a fact.—Olvey v. Jackson, 4 N. E. 149, 106 Ind. 286.

[c] (Sup. 1889)

Representations of the sellers of machinery as to what the machinery would do in the future are mere expressions of opinion, unless facts are averred which give them a different effect.—Conant v. National State Bank of Terre Haute, 22 N. E. 250, 121 Ind. 323.

[d] (App. 1894)

A complaint in an action for fraud in the exchange of real estate that alleges that plaintiff, relying on the integrity of defendant, was induced to accept in trade a farm a thousand miles distant, which he had never seen, that was represented by defendant as within a mile of a flourishing town of 500 people, and well-improved, arable land, worth $25 per acre, —the price at which plaintiff accepted it,—when in fact it was unimproved land situated 4 miles from the town, which only had 150 inhabitants, and was worth only $5 per acre, is not demurrable.—Bolds v. Woods, 9 Ind. App. 657, 36 N. E. 933.

[e] (App. 1899)

Where defendant, when selling certain land incumbered by a mortgage held by a building association, falsely represented to plaintiff that the association had informed him at the time of making the loan that it would be fully paid in 72 monthly installments, of which only 36 still remain to be paid, while as a matter of fact the association had informed defendant that it would require 84 monthly installments to pay the loan, and more than 36 remained to be paid, such false statement was not an opinion, but the statement of a fact on which plaintiff had a right to rely.—Loucks v. Taylor, 55 N. E. 238, 23 Ind. App. 245.

[f] (Sup. 1903)

Fraudulent representations by defendant that patent rights which were valueless were of great value; that they were worth $25,000 but could be secured for $12,500; that, in his judgment as a business man, stock in a corporation proposed to be organized to purchase such rights would be more valuable than bank stock; and that dividends therefrom would soon pay for the stock—were not statements of opinion, but of facts.—Coulter v. Clark, 66 N. E. 739, 160 Ind. 311.

[g] (Sup. 1905)

The proposition that no man is liable for the expression of his opinion or judgment is true only when the opinion stands by itself and is intended to be taken only as an opinion.—Culley v. Jones, 164 Ind. 168, 73 N. E. 94.

Mere representations as to value are not sufficient to support a charge of fraud ordinarily, the representations of value may be, under such circumstances, averments of fact.—Id.

[h] (App. 1910)

As a rule, on the question of fraud representations as to value are not held to be statements of facts but are considered expressions of opinion.—Boltz v. O'Conner, 90 N. E. 496.

"Rich" as applied to land is defined as fertile, fruitful, producing or yielding abundantly; of great price or money value; abounding in desirable or effective qualities or elements; of superior quality; opposed to poor—and representations that the soil of land is rich, fertile, and very productive is a statement of a fact, unless qualified in some manner that would indicate that only an opinion or estimate was intended.—Id.

§ 12. — Existing facts or expectations or promises.

A citizen of a certain town made an unconditional subscription to the stock of a railroad company, the company promising that the branch of the road should be made to the town in which the subscriber resided. Held, that such subscriber could not recover the money paid on the ground of fraud in failing to build the road to the town, the promise being no more than expression of an existing intent to make such branch.—McAllister v. Indianapolis & C. R. Co., 15 Ind. 11.

[b] (Sup. 1870)

A promise is not in itself a false and deceitful representation.—Fouty v. Fouty, 34 Ind. 433.

[c] (Sup. 1870)

A false representation upon which fraud may be predicated must be of an existing fact, or a fact alleged to exist at the time, and cannot consist of a promise to be performed in the future or of a false statement as to the legal construction or effect of a written contract executed by the person to whom the representation is made at the time of the making of the representation.—Hartsville University v. Hamilton, 34 Ind. 506.

[d] (Sup. 1875)

A representation by the lessor, at the time a lease was executed, that he had contracted for improvements on the leased premises, is not sufficient basis for an action of fraud, since it is in the nature of a promise.—Welsh-billing v. Dienhart, 65 Ind. 94.

Representations by a lessor to the lessee, who has never seen the land, that it was not subject to overflow, and never had been overflowed, related to existing facts, which, if untrue, were fraudulent.—Jones v. Hathaway, 77 Ind. 14.

[f] Representations which were promissory in character, and related merely to what should be in the future, are not actionable, though shown to have failed of verification.—(Sup. 1884) Vogel v. Demorest, 97 Ind. 440; (1889) Bennett v. McIntire, 23 N. E. 78, 121 Ind. 231, 6 L. R. A. 736; (App. 1891) Kain v. Rinker, 27 N. E. 328, 1 Ind. App. 86; (Sup. 1894) Robinson v. Reinhart, 137 Ind. 674, 36 N. E. 519; (1897) Smith v. Parker, 148 Ind. 127, 45 N. E. 770; (App. 1899) State ex rel. Creighton v. Carlisle, 21 Ind. App. 438, 52 N. E. 711.

[a] A false representation is not actionable, unless it is made with knowledge of its falsity.—(Sup. 1847) Humphreys v. Comline, 8 Blackf. 516; (1848) Hopper v. Sisk, 1 Ind. 176, Smith, 102; (1851) State Bank v. Hamilton, 2 Ind. 457; (1857) Gatling v. Newell, 9 Ind. 572.

[b] (Sup. 1884)

Representations recklessly made as of one's own knowledge, without in fact knowing whether they are true or not, are actionable as fraudulent.—West v. Wright, 98 Ind. 335.

[c] (Sup. 1889)

Where one, for the fraudulent purpose of inducing another to part with money or property, makes a statement of fact which is untrue, and thereby obtains money which he had no right to receive, and which it would be unconscionable for him to retain, he is guilty of fraud even though he may not have known at the time that the statement was false.—Journals v. Miller, 22 N. E. 995, 121 Ind. 188.

[d] (App. 1897)

Where plaintiff relied upon defendant's positive statement in a letter of credit that a person was worth $3,000 above his liabilities, defendant is liable if the statement is false, though he believed it was true when he made it.—Mendenhall v. Stewart, 47 N. E. 943, 18 Ind. App. 262.

[e] (App. 1907)

In an action for damages for deceit, there must be proof of false representations made knowingly or without belief in their truth or recklessly.—Hartford Life Ins. Co. v. Hope, 40 Ind. App. 354.

§ 16. — Nature in general.

[a] (Sup. 1889)

An heir conveyed to another heir by quitclaim deed without warranty a one-third interest in land. The grantor fraudulently concealed from the grantee the fact that the grantor had been advanced by the ancestor a sum equal to his share in the ancestor's estate, and he represented that he and a third person were entitled to one full third of the estate. Held such a fraud on the grantee as gave him a right of action.—Craig v. Hamilton, 21 N. E. 315, 118 Ind. 565.

[b] (App. 1899)

Where plaintiff, at the time of purchasing of defendant certain real estate incumbered by a mortgage, could not read, by reason of defective eyesight, was inexperienced in business, and had confidence in defendant, and defendant, on reading the deed to him, failed to read a clause therein whereby plaintiff assumed the payment of the balance of the mortgage, which was an obligation greater than it was his purpose, as known to defendant, to assume, such failure was a fraud on plaintiff.—Loucks v. Taylor, 55 N. E. 238, 23 Ind. App. 245.

§ 17. — Duty to disclose facts.

[a] (App. 1891)

Plaintiff, desiring to purchase chattels, and mistakenly understanding the vendor's name to be "Warner," instead of "Werner," examined the records in the recorder's office, where he found a mortgage executed by a man by the name of "Werner," and the vendor remained silent when the prospective purchaser stated that such mortgage could not have been given by the vendor, and afterwards on the same day the vendor positively stated that he had nothing to do with the mortgage. Held, that the purchaser who was compelled to pay the mortgage on the property sold was entitled to recover damages from the vendor.—Firestone v. Werner, 27 N. E. 623, 1 Ind. App. 293.

§ 18. Materiality of matter represented or concealed.

[a] (Sup. 1861)

In the sale of a newspaper, representations as to the number of subscribers and the amount of business and profits are material facts.—Harvey v. Smith, 17 Ind. 272.

[b] (Sup. 1850)

Representations, by the seller of the right to sell a patented machine, that such machines could be bought at a certain place for $5, which statement was false, are not actionable, where no allegation of damage was based on that fact, since it had evidently been treated as an immaterial fact.—Neidefer v. Chastain, 71 Ind. 363, 36 Am. Rep. 198.

[c] (Sup. 1851)

The representation, by the vendor of a patent for certain improvements in fence posts, consisting of a hollow iron point and bolts, to the vendee, that the vendor had a contract with R. by which he, or any one to whom he might sell, was entitled to purchase in any quantity such points and bolts at 1¼ cents per pound, is of a material fact.—*Pettley v. § 20. — In general.

[a] Recovery cannot be had for fraud unless plaintiff relied on the fraudulent inducements or representations of defendant.—(Sup. 1855) Port v. Williams, 6 Ind. 219; (1869) Hagee v. Grossman, 31 Ind. 223; (1872) Bowman v. Carithers, 40 Ind. 90; (1880) Craig v. Hamilton, 118 Ind. 565, 21 N. E. 315.

[b] (Sup. 1866)

Where a seller has made false representations as to the quality of the goods, but the buyer, in making the purchase, relies on a test of their quality made by his own agent, who is not prevented by any act, or word of the seller from testing the goods, the seller is not liable for deceit.—Hagee v. Grossman, 31 Ind. 223.

[c] False representations are actionable only when relied and acted on.—(Sup. 1872) Bowman v. Carithers, 40 Ind. 90; (App. 1891) Kain v. Rinker, 27 N. E. 328, 1 Ind. App. 86.

[d] (Sup. 1872)

Where a party believes that a claim upon which an action has been commenced has already been paid, but because he is afraid he cannot prove the payment, and, to avoid trouble and litigation, he pays a part of it, he cannot recover back the amount so paid on the ground of fraud based upon statements of the claimant that the debt had not been paid.—Bowman v. Carithers, 40 Ind. 90.

[e] (App. 1897)

Where a school warrant is void on its face, the trustee issuing it is not personally liable to a purchaser of it, who buys on the representation of the trustee that it "is all right"; the trustee knowing that it is void.—First Nat. Bank of Elkhart v. Osborne, 48 N. E. 256, 18 Ind. App. 442.

[f] (App. 1898)

Testimony of plaintiffs that they traded for a horse that they understood to be "11," an American bred coach stallion; that, at the time of the purchase, defendants gave them a warranted pedigree of him as such; and that they took him home, and advertised him as such horse, and with the pedigree as warranted,—shows that they relied and acted on defendant's representations as to his being such horse, with such pedigree.—Crouch v. Chambers, 51 N. E. 941, 21 Ind. App. 492.

[g] (App. 1899)

A father, without misrepresenting any facts, induced a daughter to believe that lands of her maternal grandfather had descended to him instead of to her, because her mother had died before the grandfather. The father assumed control of the lands, and several years thereafter prepared a quitclaim deed for her to execute, which she did, without reading or having its contents explained; the father, however, not misstating the contents, or preventing the daughter from reading it. Afterwards he paid her a certain sum, stating it was all she was entitled to as a consideration, but not making any representation as to what consideration was received. The deed was thereafter sent to a distant place for record, but it did not appear to whom, or that it was without the daughter's consent. Subsequently, by an investigation of the records,—just what kind not being shown,—the daughter discovered that her father had received a much larger amount than he gave her, but it did not appear that such amount was different from that expressed in the deed. Held, that the daughter was chargeable with notice of the consideration expressed in the deed, and had no cause of action for fraud.—Pence v. Young, 53 N. E. 1060, 22 Ind. App. 427.

[b] (Sup. 1905)

A contracting party may rely on the express statement of an existing fact, the truth of which is unknown to him, but which is asserted by the other contracting party as a basis for an agreement.—Culley v. Jones, 104 Ind. 168, 73 N. E. 94.

§ 21. — Persons who may rely on representations.

[a] (Sup. 1884)

A principal may, without inquiry, rely on the statements of his agent or confidential advisor as to the contents of a written instrument presented for signature by a third person to whom the agent or confidential adviser should, if faithful to his trust, occupy an adverse relation, and, in case of fraud, the principal may obtain relief.—Robinson v. Glass, 94 Ind. 211.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Fraud, §§ 9, 10, 23.

§ 22. — Duty to investigate.

[a] (Sup. 1872)

The purchaser of a patent right has a right to rely on the representations of the seller as to what is covered by the patent.—Rose v. Hurley, 39 Ind. 77.

[b] (Sup. 1879)

A grantee has a right to rely on representations made by the grantor as to the location of the land conveyed, and, therefore, in an action for fraudulent representations by the grantor, in falsely pointing out to the grantee, as the land conveyed, other and more valuable lands, it was proper to refuse to submit to the jury an interrogatory as to whether plaintiff did not have ample opportunity to ascertain the true location of the land.—Campbell v. Frankem, 65 Ind. 501.

[c] (Sup. 1880)

To excuse a want of care, and diligence to guard against fraud and imposition, on the ground of the existence of a known trust and confidence, the facts must show not only that there was such trust and confidence, but that its existence was justified by the relationship of the parties.—Clodfelter v. Hulett, 72 Ind. 137.

[d] (Sup. 1881)

One taking a lease of a farm has the right to rely, without further inquiry, on representations of the lessor that the farm has never been overflowed.—Jones v. Hathaway, 77 Ind. 14.

[e] (Sup. 1881)

Where a plaintiff purchased property which he had an opportunity to examine, but was prevented from doing so by defendant's statement that he did not want to sell, and subsequent false representations that the land embraced 130 acres and was worth $30 per acre, an action for deceit will not lie, since plaintiff should have examined the property.—Cagney v. Cuson, 77 Ind. 494.

A purchaser who has an opportunity to examine the property has no right to rely on representations of the vendor as to its quality.—Id.

[f] (Sup. 1884)

One is guilty of fraud who knowingly procures an agent to falsely represent the contents of a writing to his principal, and thus prevent its being read by the principal. The fraud not only excuses the reading of the instrument by the principal, but condemns the whole transaction as fraudulent, enabling the principal to obtain relief.—Robinson v. Glass, 94 Ind. 211.

[g] (Sup. 1889)

In an action for false and fraudulent representations regarding the quantity of land in a certain tract, the plaintiff's right of recovery cannot be defeated on the ground that he might have ascertained the truth by measuring the tract himself.—Ledbetter v. Davis, 121 Ind. 119, 22 N. E. 744.

[h] (Sup. 1892)

A false and fraudulent representation may be relied on by a person having no actual knowledge, although the fact in question is a matter of public record.—Backer v. Pyne, 130 Ind. 288, 30 N. E. 21, 30 Am. St. Rep. 231.

[i] (Sup. 1894)

Where a party by false representations procures another to convey real estate, he cannot defeat a recovery by urging that the owners were at fault for not better informing themselves before executing the deed. The law does not allow a shrewd and designing person to thus hide his evil-mindedness behind the ignorance of his victim.—Robinson v. Reinhart, 36 N. E. 519, 137 Ind. 674.

[j] (App. 1894)

Where defendant falsely represented that certain land was well adapted to farming purposes, and was good, productive, fertile soil, with 50 acres thereof in the highest state of cultivation, and that the whole was securely fenced and timbered, with valuable timber, and that such land was worth $30 per acre, he is liable in fraud, since plaintiff was not bound to investigate and verify the statements.—Armstrong v. White, 9 Ind. App. 588, 37 N. E. 28.

[k] (App. 1896)

Where the plaintiff in an action for false representations had opportunity to determine for himself whether or not a machine bought by him was new as represented to be, such representations are not sufficient to sustain a charge of fraud.—Anderson Foundry & Ma- chine Works v. Myers, 44 N. E. 193, 15 Ind. App. 385.

In an action which proceeded to trial on the theory of fraudulent representations, the complaint alleged the purchase of a brick-making machine; that defendant warranted it to have a certain capacity; that it was agreed that the machine should be tested on plaintiff's grounds, and after successful operation plaintiff was to pay one-half the purchase money, cash; that the machine was shipped to plaintiff, and was tested by defendant's agent in the absence of plaintiff; that on his return plaintiff was assured by the agent that the machine worked perfectly; that plaintiff did not make payment at the time, but afterwards wrote defendant that he had not yet operated the machine, and asked for a further warranty; that defendant assured him that everything would be made satisfactory, and the payment was thereupon made, and a note delivered; that the machine, when put in operation, failed to satisfy the warranty; that defendant knew of the imperfections of the machine, and fraudulently concealed them from plaintiff, with intent to cheat and defraud him. Held, that the complaint was insufficient on the issue of fraud, plaintiff having had full opportunity to make the test before parting with his money.—Id.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 32-34, 49-62.

§ 23. — Relations and means of knowledge of parties.

[a] (Sup. 1838)

Misrepresentations by one contracting party to the other as to the value or quantity of a commodity in market, where correct information on the subject is equally within the power of both parties, with equal diligence, do not, in contemplation of law, constitute fraud.—Foley v. Cowgill, 5 Blackf. 18, 32 Am. Dec. 49.

[b] (Sup. 1844)

At law an action may be maintained for false representations, made by a vendor to a purchaser, of matters within the peculiar knowledge of the vendor, whereby the purchaser is injured.—Shaeffer v. Sleade, 7 Blackf. 178.

[c] (Sup. 1855)

The vendee of land cannot maintain an action against the vendor for a misrepresentation of the quantity of cleared ground on the premises, where he has himself had opportunity to judge, and ample means within his reach to form a correct estimate, and appears to have relied on his own judgment.—Port v. Williams, 6 Ind. 219.

[d] (Sup. 1861)

In the sale of a newspaper, the number of subscribers and the amount of business and profits are facts so peculiarly within the knowledge of the vendor that the vendee has a right to rely on his representations concerning them.—Harvey v. Smith, 17 Ind. 272.

[e] (Sup. 1877)

Where a party to a contract relies upon his own judgment, with means of knowing the facts equal to those of the other party and he does not make use of them, he cannot complain.—Hess v. Young, 59 Ind. 379.

[f] (Sup. 1887)

In an action to recover damages for false representations, by means of which the defendant induced the plaintiffs to transfer to him certain property, and to accept in part payment certain worthless notes of a third person, the evidence showed that one of the plaintiffs, an inexperienced married woman, owning part of the property conveyed, made such transfer, relying upon the statement of the defendant that the notes were well secured, and "good as government bonds," which was not true. Held that, as to her, the evidence failed to support a verdict for the defendant, and the motion for a new trial should have been granted.—Bish v. Beatty, 111 Ind. 403, 12 N. E. 523.

[g] (App. 1892)

Where an heir, who has undertaken to settle up the estate, induces a co-heir to sell to him her interest in the real estate at less than its value by falsely representing that there is a claim against the estate, to pay which the real estate must be sold, and that it cannot be sold for more than a certain amount, such co-heir may recover against him for deceit and false representations, having a right to rely on the representations, owing to the confidential relations of the parties.—Hulett v. Kennedy, 4 Ind. App. 33, 30 N. E. 310.

[h] (App. 1894)

A complaint alleging that defendant's intestate, to defraud plaintiff, falsely represented that his mill was worth as much as certain land of plaintiff's; that the mill had valuable machinery, in good repair, and was valuable on account of its extensive trade; and that such trade was worth more than five dollars per day in excess of expenses,—and that plaintiff, relying thereon, exchanged his land for the mill, sufficiently shows that such representations were of matters peculiarly within intestate's knowledge, so that plaintiff had a right to rely on them.—Bloomer v. Gray, 10 Ind. App. 326, 37 N. E. 819.

[i] (Sup. 1908)

A purchaser of territorial rights under patents may rely on the representations of his vendor as to their value, and is not obliged to prosecute an inquiry, demanding peculiar skill and knowledge, into their character.—Coulter v. Clark, 66 N. E. 739, 160 Ind. 311.

§ 25. Injury from fraud.[a] (Sup. 1881)

In suit against the executor, after the final settlement, to recover money advanced to enable him to settle the estate without delay, the complaint alleged that the executor charged himself with the sum so obtained, and applied it in settling the estate. Held, that an additional allegation that he procured the money from plaintiff by false representations was insufficient to show actionable fraud on defendant's part; the application to the use of the estate being equivalent to an application to plaintiff's use, she being the sole legatee.—Peacocke v. Leffler, 74 Ind. 327.

[b] (Sup. 1898)

Injury or damage to plaintiff as a result of fraudulent representations is a necessary prerequisite of recovery in an action for deceit.—Strader v. Strader, 51 N. E. 479, 151 Ind. 539.

[c] (Sup. 1905)

To constitute actionable fraud, it must appear that the complaining party has been damaged or prejudiced in some way.—Board of Commissioners of Howard County v. Garrigus, 164 Ind. 589, 73 N. E. 82, 74 N. E. 249.

[d] (App. 1905)

The fact that the agreement of the purchaser of the tax liens with plaintiff was within the statute of frauds was immaterial, in an action against defendant for the fraud, in which it was not sought to enforce such agreement.—Lindley v. Kemp, 76 N. E. 798, 38 Ind. App. 355.

False representations by an attorney to an inexperienced client, as to the value of certain land which the attorney undertakes to recover for his client, whereby the latter is induced to execute a note for an exorbitant fee for the attorney's services, constitute positive fraud.—Manley v. Felty, 45 N. E. 74, 146 Ind. 194.

Fraud may be shown by reason of false representations made by a seller to induce a purchaser to buy shares of stock.—Smock v. Henderson, Wils. 241.

[b] (App. 1905)

Plaintiff was an aged, infirm, and ignorant woman. Defendant was plaintiff's brother, a successful business man and a minister, in whom she reposed confidence and to whom she looked for advice in her business. Defendant, in conspiracy with others, consumed plaintiff's property by appropriating the crops and proceeds of her lands, so that she was unable to pay the taxes and lost the property under tax liens. The purchaser of the property at sheriff's sale orally agreed to convey the same to plaintiff, if she and certain of her children would execute a mortgage for the amount of the tax liens and enough more to compensate him for his trouble and expense. Defendant and his co-conspirators intercepted the mortgage which the purchaser sent to plaintiff to sign, and, fraudulently representing to the purchaser that he would take care of plaintiff, defendant induced the purchaser, who had no knowledge of the interception of the mortgage and of its concealment from plaintiff, to convey the land to defendant for a grossly inadequate consideration. Defendant subsequently conveyed the lands to his co-conspirators, who committed repeated acts of trespass thereon, to plaintiff's great damage. Held, that defendant's conduct constituted an actionable fraud against plaintiff.—Lindley v. Kemp, 76 N. E. 798, 38 Ind. App. 355.

[c] (Sup. 1907)

Creditors defrauded by misrepresentations as to a corporation's capital stock may recover damages in tort against persons making the representations.—Marion Trust Co. v. Bennett, 169 Ind. 346, 82 N. E. 782, 124 Am. St. Rep. 228.

Right of action by husband or wife, or both, see HUSBAND AND WIFE, §§ 209, 210.

§ 31. Nature and form of remedy.

Action sounding in contract or tort, see ACTION, § 27.

Joinder of causes of action, see ACTION, § 50.

[a] (Sup. 1890)

A party may retain property received in exchange for other property and sue for damages caused by fraudulent representations in obtaining the exchange.—Nysewander v. Lowman, 24 N. E. 355, 124 Ind. 584.

[b] (Sup. 1892)

A company fraudulently induced to lend money on land in excess of its value may retain and enforce its security against the land, and at the same time maintain an action against the borrower to recover damages for the fraudulent representations.—Union Cent. Life Ins. Co. v. Schidler, 130 Ind. 214, 20 N. E. 1071, 15 L. R. A. 89.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Fraud, § 27.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 86.

§ 32. Effect of existence of remedy by action on contract.

[a] (Sup. 1862)

Where A. and B. agree to exchange lands, and the contract is fully executed by A., but B. by reason of his own acts done in fraud of the rights of A. is in such situation that it is impossible for him to execute the contract, or for A. to rescind it, and be placed in statu quo, A. may disregard his right to have specific performance and sue for the damages he sustained by B.'s nonperformance.—Lingerman v. Todd, 18 Ind. 488.

[b] (App. 1910)

One may either sue for damages caused by fraudulent representations inducing him to execute a contract, or rescind the contract, but cannot do both.—Church v. Baumgardner, 92 N. E. 7.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Fraud, § 28.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 87.

§ 34. Conditions precedent.

[a] (Sup. 1890)

In an action for deceit in the sale of property, it is not necessary for plaintiff to prove an offer to return the property.—Nysewander v. Lowman, 124 Ind. 584, 24 N. E. 355.

[b] (App. 1893)

An action for fraudulent representations by an insurance company, inducing a settlement for a death claim, may be maintained without returning the sum received on such settlement, since the defrauded party has the right to affirm the settlement, and recover the damages sustained by the fraud.—Wabash Valley Protective Union v. James, 8 Ind. App. 449, 35 N. E. 919.

[c] (App. 1904)

A vendee need not rescind the contract in order to recover damages sustained by fraudulent representations as to the number of acres conveyed.—Ludwig v. Petrie, 70 N. E. 280, 32 Ind. App. 550.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Fraud, § 29.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 90, 91.

§ 35. Waiver of right of action.

[a] In order to constitute a waiver by an express affirmance of a right to damages for loss resulting from false and fraudulent representations, it is essential that the party should possess full knowledge of the fraud and intend to confirm the contract.—(Sup. 1882) St. John v. Hendrickson, 81 Ind. 350; (1888) Johnson v. Culver, 19 N. E. 129, 116 Ind. 278.

[b] (Sup. 1882)

There may by an express affirmance be a waiver of a right to recover damages for loss resulting from false and fraudulent representations.—St. John v. Hendrickson, 81 Ind. 350.

Where plaintiff was induced by fraudulent representations to invest money in a partnership and to become a member, and thereafter, with full knowledge of the fraud, declined to repudiate the transaction, but expressly ratified it, he could not subsequently recover damages.—Id.

[c] (Sup. 1905)

Where plaintiff, relying on the business judgment and representations of defendant, purchased worthless patent rights, giving his notes therefor, and paid the notes before discovering that defendant's representations were fraudulent and were made pursuant to a conspiracy with the vendors of the patent rights, whereby defendant was to induce others to purchase them by pretending to enter into the purchase with them, and receive from the vendors $1,000 for his services, such payment was not a ratification of the fraudulent transaction.—Coulter v. Clark, 66 N. E. 739, 100 Ind. 311.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Fraud, § 30.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 92-94.

§ 36. Defenses.

Pleading matters of defense, see post, § 48.

[a] (Sup. 1883)

Where a vendor fraudulently procures a confederate to point out better land than that proposed to be conveyed and thereby induces the vendees to take the proposed land under the belief that it is the land pointed out, the vendees are entitled to damages, though by delay they had lost their right to rescission.—Hunt v. Blanton, 80 Ind. 38.

[b] (App. 1894)

The doctrine of public policy is to be invoked to prevent, and not to perpetuate fraud.—Kingan & Co. v. Silvers, 37 N. E. 413, 13 Ind. App. 80.

§ 38. Time to sue and limitations.

Concealment of cause of action as affecting limitations, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, § 104. Limitation of actions for equitable relief on ground of fraud, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, § 37.

Pleading limitation of actions, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, § 180.

[a] (Sup. 1858)

Upon a sale on fraudulent representations, and a note given, the vendee may affirm the contract, and sue for his damages for the fraud before the note is due.—Gray v. Rich, 10 Ind. 430.

§ 41. — Allegations of fraud in general.

[a] (Sup. 1864)

A complaint is good on demurrer which alleges that the plaintiff purchased of the defendant 27 head of hogs for a price equal to the full value of sound hogs; that the defendant represented them to be sound and healthy; that the plaintiff relied upon said representations having no opportunity by reasonable diligence to discover that the same were not true; that in fact they were diseased and unhealthy, being then affected with hog cholera, and known to be so by the defendant; and that afterwards 25 of them died of that disease, etc.—Baker v. McGinniss, 22 Ind. 257.

[b] (Sup. 1870)

A complaint by A. against B. alleged that on, etc., there was a litigation anticipated between the plaintiff and one C., arising out of an alleged case of bastardy, and the defendant, having knowledge of said fact, reported to the plaintiff that for $250 he could and would compromise and settle it, and procure a release; that afterwards the defendant informed the plaintiff that he had compromised it for $200, and had taken a bond in the sum of $1,000 from C., D., and E. not to institute suit against the plaintiff for said bastardy; that thereupon plaintiff executed to defendant two notes, one for $100, and the other for $150, the first of which was paid at maturity, but the other remained unpaid, and was still in the possession of defendant; that after the payment of the said first note plaintiff was arrested on account of said alleged bastardy, and then first learned, and it was true, that he had been deceived and imposed on by defendant, who had never compromised the anticipated litigation, or attempted to do so; that said notes were executed in consideration of the false and fraudulent pretense and representation aforesaid, and for no other consideration; that in consequence of said false and fraudulent representation and pretense, by which his signature to the notes was obtained, "and the failure of defendant to comply with his said agreement," the plaintiff had been damaged in, etc. Held, that this was a complaint for deceit, and not on contract.—Watts v. McAllister, 33 Ind. 204.

[c] (Sup. 1872)

A paragraph of a complaint, alleging the sale by defendant to plaintiff of certain cattle, which the defendant represented as sound and merchantable, whereby plaintiff was induced to purchase them, and alleging that one of the cattle was diseased and unfit for market, which fact was known by defendant and fraudulently concealed by him from plaintiff, to the latter's damage, etc., states a good cause of action for the tort.—Hardwick v. Wilson, 40 Ind. 321.

[d] (Sup. 1882)

Fraud is never presumed, and a party relying upon fraud as a cause of action or ground of defense must charge it in his pleadings.—Wolford v. Powers, 85 Ind. 294, 44 Am. Rep. 10.

[e] (Sup. 1884)

Though it is not sufficient, in an action against an executor for fraudulent representations in the sale of the decedent's land simply to characterize the transaction as fraudulent, it is sufficient to use the word "fraudulently" as an adverb to characterize defendant's action in making the alleged representation as mala fide.—West v. Wright, 98 Ind. 335.

[f] (Sup. 1885)

Although a complaint seeking a recovery for injuries arising from misrepresentation need not allege that the defendant knew that his representations were false, it is necessary that it should state facts showing that they were fraudulent.—Furnas v. Friday, 102 Ind. 120, 1 N. E. 206.

[g] (Sup. 1888)

A petition in an action for false representation which alleges that plaintiff and defendant arranged to rent certain premises, defendant to ascertain the lowest cash rent for the premises; that defendant reported they could be secured for $100 per month; that plaintiff, relying on such statement, agreed with defendant to rent the premises, each to pay half the rent; that they occupied said premises, plaintiff paying as she supposed one-half the rent; that defendant, with intent to defraud, took from her said sum, when in fact the whole rent, as paid by defendant, was but $65 per month; that plaintiff, relying on defendant's representations, paid more than her just due, which she refuses to refund to plaintiff,—is sufficient; the objection being raised for the first time in the appellate court.—Du Souchet v. Dutcher, 113 Ind. 249, 15 N. E. 450.

[h] (App. 1891)

A complaint for false representations by defendants' agent alleged that M., "as agent of said defendants, * * * and acting for and on behalf of said defendants, proposed * * *, and, to induce said plaintiff to make said trade, the said M., as the agent and representative of said defendants, * * * represented to her * * *; and relying on the false and fraudulent representations of said defendants, as made by their agent, said M., and believing them to be true, she made" said trade; and that "by reason of * * * the false and fraudulent representations of said defendants, through their agent, said M., she has sustained damages. * * *" Held, that the allegations of fraudulent representations by defendants, through their agent, were sufficiently distinct.—Beem v. Lockhart, 1 Ind. App. 202, 27 N. E. 239.

[i] (Sup. 1892)

In an action for fraudulent representations, made in pursuance of a conspiracy to procure a loan on land in excess of its value, the complaint alleged that the land on which the mortgage was executed was of little value, but did not state the exact value. Held, in the absence of a motion to make the complaint more specific, that the same was sufficient.—Union Cent. Life Ins. Co. v. Schidler, 130 Ind. 214, 29 N. E. 1071, 15 L. R. A. 89.

[j] (App. 1892)

A complaint alleged that defendant extorted money from plaintiff by falsely representing to him that he had employed the county attorney to bring a civil and a criminal suit against him for taking manure from the land of defendant, and threatening, if plaintiff did not pay $100 for the manure and $25 for fees which he had paid to the attorney, to send plaintiff to the state prison for larceny, but promising, if plaintiff would pay the money, to have both suits dismissed. The complaint did not allege that plaintiff did not take the manure without right. Held, that it did not state a cause of action on the ground of false representations.—Darling v. Hines, 5 Ind. App. 319, 32 N. E. 109.

An allegation, in an action for deceit, that defendant, in exchange for a stock or goods, conveyed to plaintiff certain lots which were not the lots bargained for, does not show that the lots bargained for were not conveyed to plaintiff.—Smith v. Roseboom, 41 N. E. 552, 13 Ind. App. 284.

In an action for fraudulently conveying lots other than those agreed to be conveyed in exchange for other property, an allegation that "plaintiff relied entirely on the representation which was made by defendant, that the lots described in the deed were the lots pointed out," is not a sufficient showing of fraud; nor was it aided by an averment that defendant, "for the purpose of inducing plaintiff to make the exchange," caused the lots to be shown to plaintiff, and represented that they were the property of defendant.—Id.

A complaint alleging that defendants, two of whom owned certain patent rights, conspired to cheat plaintiff; that they sold to him the patent rights, which were worthless, on the false representation that other parties, whom one of the defendants pretended to represent, were willing to take the same at an agreed price, if he purchased the same; and that defendants knew that plaintiff was purchasing for the sole purpose of so reselling,—is not demurrable.—Hay v. Landis, 17 Ind. App. 91, 44 N. E. 1013, 46 N. E. 154.

[m] (App. 1903)

A complaint alleging that defendant, without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff, induced plaintiff's husband to execute to him a paper, which "he represents was a bill of sale," and which conveyed to defendant all the husband's personal property, representing to the husband that defendant was surety for him on certain obligations, and promising to apply the proceeds of the property to the payment of the debts; that her husband was unfit, by reason of illness, to transact any business at the time; that he died a few days later; that thereupon defendant demanded of plaintiff the possession of the property; that she, ignorant of her rights, and in a mentally distressed condition, delivered possession on condition that defendant should pay her husband's debts; and that defendant has not paid the debts, but has wrongfully converted the property to his own use—contains no sufficient allegation of fraud.

—Warner v. Warner, 66 N. E. 760, 30 Ind. App. 578.

While it is well settled that a party who seeks to predicate a cause of action or of defense on fraud must allege the facts constituting the fraud, it is not necessary that the pleading should minutely state all the facts and circumstances tending to establish the charge of fraud, and a general allegation that a party defrauded relied on the fraudulent representations or acts alleged is generally sufficient.—Ray v. Baker, 165 Ind. 74, 74 N. E. 619.

[c] (App. 1906)

Where fraud is the basis of an action, or a ground of defense, it must be shown by special plea containing facts directly averred, constituting fraud, before evidence will be admitted tending to prove the ultimate facts.—McAfee v. Bending, 36 Ind. App. 628, 76 N. E. 412.

[d] (App. 1906)

Fraud, either actual or constructive, is sufficiently pleaded by an averment of facts showing it, without any direct averment of fraud.—Holliday v. Perry, 38 Ind. App. 588, 78 N. E. 877.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Fraud, §§ 36, 37.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 95-97.

§ 42. — Intent.

[a] (Sup. 1875)

When it is intended to found a pleading upon fraud perpetrated by means of false representations made by a vendor to his vendee concerning the thing sold, the pleading must allege that the representations were fraudulently made.—Langsdale v. Girton, 51 Ind. 90.

[b] (Sup. 1897)

A complaint for damages by reason of fraud in failing to furnish money to carry on a business according to promise is defective where it fails either to allege that when defendant made the promises he did not intend to fulfill them, or to state facts from which such intention can be inferred.—Smith v. Parker, 148 Ind. 127, 45 N. E. 770.

[c] (App. 1907)

An action for damages for fraud is based on a fraudulent intent, and the intent with which the fraudulent acts were performed must be averred and proved.—Hartford Life Ins. Co. v. Hope, 40 Ind. App. 354, 81 N. E. 595, 1088.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Fraud, § 39.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 100.

§ 43. — Statements, acts or conduct constituting fraud.

[a] (App. 1906)

A complaint for damages for misrepresentations of matters of law and fact is good if it contains enough misrepresentations of fact to constitute a cause of action.—Lindley v. Kemp, 38 Ind. App. 353, 76 N. E. 798.

[b] (App. 1907)

A complaint in an action for fraud in procuring an application and a note for the first year's premium for a life policy, which alleges that agents of the insurer represented that it was issuing a certain policy to many persons, and would issue the same to plaintiff for a specified consideration; that the policy would insure plaintiff's life for $1,000, and would provide that, if he lived to pay premiums for 20 years, it would mature, and the insurer would pay him the amount of the face of the policy, and a part of the surplus earnings, which would be a specified sum or thereabouts; that the representations were false and known to be false when made, etc.—shows that the representations were made with regard to existing facts and states a cause of action as against a demurrer.—Hartford Life Ins. Co. v. Hope, 40 Ind. App. 354, 81 N. E. 595, 1088.

In an action against an insurance company and its agents for deceit, the complaint, alleging that the agents represented to plaintiff that said insurance company was issuing a certain policy to many persons and would issue the same to plaintiff for a stated consideration, which was the premium on a policy for one year, and that said policy would insure plaintiff's life and mature at the end of a specified time, sufficiently charges that the representations were of existing facts.—Id.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Fraud, § 37.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 98, 99.

§ 44. — Contract, transaction, or circumstances connected with fraud.

[a] (App. 1896)

An allegation, in an action for deceit, that plaintiff agreed to exchange a stock of goods for certain lots shown to him by defendant, does not show that defendant was bound by the transaction.—Smith v. Roseboom, 13 Ind. App. 284, 41 N. E. 552.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Fraud, § 38.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 103.

§ 45. — Falsity of representations and knowledge thereof.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

A pleading setting up fraud as a defense in an action cannot be good without averring that the representations stated as the ground of defense are false.—White v. Butler University, 78 Ind. 585.

[b] (Sup. 1884)

A complaint for false representations sufficiently alleges defendant's knowledge of their falsity, where it states that they were made by him knowingly, falsely, and fraudulently.

—West v. Wright, 98 Ind. 335.

[c] (App. 1907)

An allegation that defendant falsely and fraudulently made certain representations in order to procure a conveyance of real estate to him was not sufficient to charge fraud, where it was not averred that any of the representations were untrue.—Bonham v. Doyle, 77 N. E. 859, 79 N. E. 458, 39 Ind. App. 438.

An allegation that defendant falsely and fraudulently made certain representations in order to procure a conveyance of real estate to him was not sufficient to charge fraud, where it was not averred that any of the representations were untrue.—Id.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRAUD, § 40.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 99.

§ 46. — Reliance and inducement and action thereon.

[a] (Sup. 1870)

A complaint for damages for false representations by the vendor in the sale of land should contain an averment that the plaintiff relied upon such representations. The want of such averment cannot be supplied by a recital of evidence which might justify a presumption that the representations were relied upon, unless such evidence be conclusive of that fact.—Goings v. White, 33 Ind. 125.

[b] (Sup. 1870)

Where the buyer of an article seeks to recover damages of the seller for fraudulent representations made by him concerning the article, he must allege that he relied on such representations in making the purchase.—Hoffa v. Hoffman, 33 Ind. 172.

[c] (Sup. 1884)

A complaint for deceit in an exchange of lands, simply alleging that defendant knew of the falseness of his representations, and that "by the fraudulent means aforesaid defendant had perpetrated a great fraud upon" plaintiff, is defective in not showing plaintiff's ignorance, or that he acted upon the representations to his damage.—Bish v. Van Cannon, 94 Ind. 203.

[d] (Sup. 1884)

In an action by husband and wife for fraudulent representations, whereby the wife was induced to sell her property at less than its value, it was not necessary to allege that the husband was deceived.—Roller v. Blair, 96 Ind. 203.

[e] (App. 1894)

A complaint for fraudulent representations made in the course of a sale, with intent to deceive, is insufficient, where it does not allege that plaintiff was ignorant of the falsity thereof, whereby he was misled.—Lincoln v. Hagsdale, 9 Ind. App. 555, 37 N. E. 25.

[f] (App. 1896)

A complaint based upon fraudulent representations must aver that plaintiff relied on the representations.—Burden v. Burden, 141 Ind. 471, 40 N. E. 1067.

[g] (App. 1902)

The complaint in an action for damages for false representations in a settlement must allege that plaintiff relied on the representations and believed them to be true, and that defendant intended to deceive.—Oliver v. Hubbard, 64 N. E. 927, 29 Ind. App. 639.

[h] (App. 1906)

A complaint, in an action for deceit, which does not show that defendant practiced any deceit on plaintiff, but shows that the deceit charged was practiced on another, does not state a cause of action.—Whitesell v. Study, 37 Ind. App. 429, 76 N. E. 1010.

§ 46. — Matters of defense.

[a] (Sup. 1853)

A count in case charged that A. in an exchange of horses with B. falsely represented his, A.'s, horse to be sound, when in truth he was not sound, but, at the time of the exchange, was and still is unsound, having a disease called glanders, which A. then knew, and that A., though requested, refused to deliver to B. the horse received of him. Plea that B. never delivered or tendered to A. the horse received in exchange, though A. tendered back the horse which he got of B.; but he refused to receive the horse. Held, that the plea was properly rejected on motion.—Hull v. Kirkpatrick, 4 Ind. 637.

[b] (Sup. 1871)

A complaint alleged that defendant, as agent of S., sold plaintiff certain real estate, on one acre of which stood a school house; that at the time of the sale the defendant fraudulently and falsely represented that the school house and the land on which it stood had been abandoned and vacated by the school trustees, and that the trustees had erected another school house in the district, which was used for school purposes; that these representations were false, and were known by the defendant to be false; that the plaintiff relied upon them, etc. The defendant answered that the plaintiff was on the land at the time of the purchase; that he fully examined the same, and was fully apprised of the condition of the land and the said school house, and knew that the principals held the land, including the school house, by a general warranty deed duly recorded. Held, that the answer was bad.—Porter v. Wilson, 35 Ind. 348.

Evidence of fraud can be introduced only under a sufficient charge of fraud in the pleadings.—Fankboner v. Fankboner, 20 Ind. 62.

[b] (Sup. 1877)

In an action for deceit and misrepresentations as to the value of land, evidence must be given as to the value of the land conveyed by plaintiff as consideration for the conveyance by defendant.—Newhouse v. Clark, 60 Ind. 172.

[c] (Sup. 1883)

§ 50. Presumptions and burden of proof.

[a] (Sup. 1871)

To make a good charge of fraud, it must be shown in what the fraud consisted.—Kerr v. State ex rel. Wray, 35 Ind. 288.

[b] Fraud is never presumed, but must be proved.—(Sup. 1881) Morris v. Stern, 80 Ind. 227; (1888) Phelps v. Smith, 17 N. E. 602, 19 N. E. 156, 116 Ind. 387; (1888) Neisler v. Harris, 18 N. [c] (App. 1891)

Fraud is a question of fact, and will not be presumed, but must be proved; but it is not necessary that there be direct or positive evidence, but it is sufficient if facts and circumstances be proved from which it can be fairly inferred.—Levi v. Kraminer, 2 Ind. App. 594, 28 N. E. 1028.

[d] (App. 1896)

Fraud or mistake need not be established beyond any doubt, but the party having the burden is required to prove the issues devolving upon him by a preponderance of the evidence.—Baltimore, O. & C. R. Co. v. Scholes, 43 N. E. 156, 14 Ind. App. 524, 56 Am. St. Rep. 307.

[a] (Sup. 1876)

Where the issue in a cause was as to the fraudulency of representations made by the defendant to the plaintiff as to the solvency of a certain corporation on the sale by the former to the latter of certain shares of the capital stock of such corporation, there was no error in striking out evidence of a statement of the defendant that he "had no confidence in the concern," where it appears from the other evidence in the cause that such statements only referred to a want of confidence, not in the solvency, but in the board of directors, of such corporation.—*Cones v. § 56. — Reliance on representations and inducement to act.

[a] (App. 1894)

In an action for damages, against the administratrix of one who fraudulently induced plaintiff to exchange land for certain other property, evidence that, at the time of the exchange, plaintiff was of weak mind, is competent, in order to show a susceptibility to intestate's representations.—Bloomer v. Gray, 10 Ind. App. 326, 37 N. E. 819.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Fraud, § 53.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 117.

§ 57. — Damages.

[a] (App. 1894)

In an action for fraudulent representations inducing plaintiff to exchange land for a mill property, it is proper to permit the plaintiff to prove the value of the property conveyed by him.—Bloomer v. Gray, 37 N. E. 819, 10 Ind. App. 326.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Fraud, § 54.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 118.

§ 58. Weight and sufficiency.

[a] (Sup. 1855)

Fraud may be deduced, not only from deceptive or false representations, but from facts, incidents, and circumstances which may be trivial in themselves, but decisive in the given case of a fraudulent design.—Peter v. Wright, 6 Ind. 183.

[b] (Sup. 1871)

Fraud is not presumed, but may be proved by circumstantial evidence.—Rhodes v. Green, 36 Ind. 7.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

Inadequacy of consideration alone is no ground for inferring fraud, unless the inadequacy is so great as to impress every person with its grossness.—Cagney v. Cuson, 77 Ind. 404.

[d] (Sup. 1883)

A finding that defendant by the acts of himself and his agent employed as a guide induced the plaintiffs to believe that the land exhibited was the land to be sold is not sustained by proof that the defendant paid a stranger 50 cents, and followed him to the land he pointed out.—Hunt v. Blanton, 89 Ind. 38.

[e] (App. 1892)

Where the owner of a horse represents him to be perfectly sound, that a tumor which had been removed from him was due solely to the bursting of a blood vessel, and that he has since entirely recovered, whereas, in fact, the tumor was the result of a constitutional disease, which rendered him practically worthless, and the owner knew this, and expressed himself as satisfied to have gotten rid of a horse which had begun to fail, the purchaser is entitled to recover as for deceit.—Timmis v. Wade, 5 Ind. App. 139, 31 N. E. 827.

[f] (Sup. 1898)

In this state fraud is a question of fact, and, when essential to a cause of action or defense thereto, must be found as a fact, and not left to be inferred as a matter of law.—Hawkins v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 49 N. E. 957, 150 Ind. 117.

[g] (App. 1906)

Fraud is a question of fact to be proven by direct or circumstantial evidence, and the determination of which is within the province of the court or jury trying the case.—Tyler v. Davis, 37 Ind. App. 557, 75 N. E. 3.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Fraud, §§ 55-59.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 120-122; note, 65 Am. Dec. 157.

(D) DAMAGES.

Evidence, see ante, § 57.

§ 59. Measure in general.

Contingent consequences of fraudulent representations, see DAMAGES, § 24.

Proximate or remote consequences of fraudulent representation, see DAMAGES, § 18.

[a] (Sup. 1858)

The measure of damages for misrepresenting the location of a mill and privileges and land described in a deed, the vendee electing to keep what did pass, is what it would cost to obtain under a writ ad quod damnum, or by some equally cheap and expeditious way, the land falsely represented to be covered by the deed.—Reynolds v. Cox, 11 Ind. 262.

[b] In an action for deceit in the transfer of property, the measure of damage is the difference between the actual and represented value.—(Sup. 1859) Gatling v. Newell, 12 Ind. 118; (1892) Williamson v. Brandenburg, 133 Ind. 594, 32 N. E. 834.

[c] (Sup. 1870)

In a sale of an undivided one-half of a tract of land, the vendor falsely and fraudulently represented to the purchaser that there was then on the land a house of a particular size and description. Held, that the measure of damages for the lack of such house, in a suit by the purchaser against the vendor for such fraudulent representation, was one-half the amount of the increase there would have been in the value of the land if there had been such a house on it at the time of the sale, and not merely one-half the amount of money it would then have taken to put such a house on the land.—Sangster v. Prather, 34 Ind. 504.

[d] (Sup. 1882)

A verdict giving plaintiff damages in the amount paid by him for property which he was induced to purchase by false representations, and also leaving the property his is clearly erroneous, and should be set aside.—Greenewald v. Rathfon, 81 Ind. 547.

[e] (Sup. 1883)

A. sold to B. a stock of goods and other tangible property, representing that sales had been made each year to a certain amount, when in fact they had been made to only one-half of that amount. Held, that the measure of B.'s damages was not the profit on the difference, but the difference between the rent of a store required for the sale of the amount actually sold and the rent of a store required for sales to the amount represented by A. to have been sold.—Rawson v. Pratt, 91 Ind. 9.

[f] (Sup. 1888)

The measure of damages in an action for deceit is the difference between the value of the property and the price paid.—Johnson v. Culver, 116 Ind. 278, 19 N. E. 129.

[g] (Sup. 1890)

In an action for fraudulent representations as to the value of corporate stock, whereby plaintiff was induced to exchange land for the stock, the measure of damages is the difference between the actual value of the stock and its value had the facts been as represented by defendant, and not the value of the land conveyed.—Nysewander v. Lowman, 124 Ind. 584, 24 N. E. 355.

[h] (App. 1907)

The measure of damages for fraud in procuring an application and a note for the first year's premium for a life policy is the amount plaintiff was compelled to pay on account of the giving of the note, together with such other damages as proximately resulted from the fraud.—Hartford Life Ins. Co. v. Hope, 40 Ind. App. 354, 81 N. E. 595, 1088.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Fraud, §§ 60-62, 64.
See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 130-137.

§ 61. Exemplary.

[a] (Sup. 1861)

In a suit for damages by a vendee of cattle for the vendor's false and fraudulent representation that they were gentle, exemplary or smart damages might be assessed.—Millison v. Hoch, 17 Ind. 227.

In an action for deceit, exemplary damages may be given.—Id.

[b] (App. 1907)

In an action for fraud in procuring an application and a note for the first year's premium for a life policy, it appeared that the agents soliciting the insurance represented that the insurer had a certain contract to sell; that it contained certain provisions that, if plaintiff would give his note for a certain amount, this contract would be delivered to him. The representations constituted false pretenses, as defined by Burns' Am. St. 1901, § 2352. Held, that in an action for the fraud, punitive damages could not be awarded as against the agents.—Hartford Life Ins. Co. v. Hope, 40 Ind. App. 354, 81 N. E. 595, 1088.

Where soliciting agents of an insurer were not liable for punitive damages for fraudulent representations in procuring an application for a life policy, the insurer was not liable for such damages.—Id.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Fraud, § 83.
See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 142.

§ 62. Amount awarded.

[a] (App. 1907)

Where in an action for fraudulent representations in procuring an application and a note for the first year's premium for a life policy, the uncontradicted evidence showed that plaintiff suffered damage to the amount of the note, which he was compelled to pay, but did not suffer any other damage, a verdict awarding damages in a sum in excess of the amount of the note was excessive.—Hartford Life Ins. Co. v. Hope, 40 Ind. App. 354, 81 N. E. 595, 1088.

(E) TRIAL, JUDGMENT, AND REVIEW.

Failure of court to find on question of fraud, see TRIAL, § 397.

§ 63. Mode and conduct of trial in general.

View and inspection by jury, see TRIAL, § 28.

§ 64. Questions for jury.

[a] (Sup. 1889)

Where money was obtained from plaintiff, a weak-minded, illiterate old man, by the false representations of defendants that they had a good cause of action against him, which they intended to prosecute, it was for the jury to say whether the representations were such as plaintiff had a right to rely on.—Ingalls v. Miller, 121 Ind. 188, 22 N. E. 995.

[b] (Sup. 1906)

Whether representations as to value are merely the expressions of opinion or averments of fact to be relied upon is a question for the jury.—Culley v. Jones, 164 Ind. 168, 73 N. E. 94.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Fraud, §§ 65½, 67-71.
See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 123-126, 143; note, 37 L. R. A. 613.

§ 65. Instructions.

Applicability of instructions to pleadings and evidence in general, see TRIAL, § 251.

Instructions as to evidence and matters of fact in general, see TRIAL, § 234.

Instructions excluding or ignoring issues, defenses or evidence, see TRIAL, § 253.

[a] (Sup. 1889)

A charge that "fraud is never presumed, but the burden rests upon one claiming fraud to make it out by clear and convincing" proof, is not misleading, as conveying the impression that fraud must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.—Wallace v. Mattice, 118 Ind. 59, 20 N. E. 497.

[b] (App. 1907)

Where, in an action for fraudulent representations in procuring an application and a note for the first year's premium for a life policy, it was shown that the agents soliciting the insurance knew that plaintiff had not been vaccinated; that the agents undertook to explain the provisions of the policy plaintiff would receive, and stated that on his death his beneficiary would receive $1,000 and an additional sum, but did not intimate that there were any exceptions to these provisions, an instruction authorizing a verdict for plaintiff if the soliciting agents failed to explain that, in case of his death from smallpox, he not having been vaccinated, the beneficiaries could only receive the amount paid in premiums, was proper; the agents, having undertaken to explain the provisions of the policy, being bound to fully describe the same.—Hartford Life Ins. Co. v. Hope, 40 Ind. App. 354, 81 N. E. 595, 1088.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Fraud, §§ 72-74.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 127-129.

§ 66. Verdict and findings.

Sufficiency of findings in general, see TRIAL, § 355.

Sufficiency of findings by court, see TRIAL, § 305.

Surplusage in verdict, see TRIAL, § 336.

[a] (Sup. 1888)

Where fraud is essential to the existence of a cause of action, it must be found as a fact, and not left to be inferred as a matter of law.—Phelps v. Smith, 17 N. E. 602, 19 N. E. 156, 116 Ind. 387.

[b] Where fraud is essential to a recovery and there is a special finding, it must be found as an ultimate or inferential fact to sustain a judgment based on the special finding in favor of the party asserting fraud.—(Sup. 1889) Wilson v. Campbell, 21 N. E. 893, 119 Ind. 286; (1892) Parks v. Satterthwaite, 32 N. E. 82, 132 Ind. 411.

[c] (Sup. 1891)

A judgment on the ground of fraud cannot be entered on a finding which does not find fraud as an ultimate fact, but merely states evidence of fraud.—Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Canada & St. L. R. Co., 127 Ind. 250, 26 N. E. 794, 11 L. R. A. 740.

[d] (App. 1891)

In an action for deceit, in that defendants falsely represented a mare sold plaintiffs to be a quiet and suitable family mare, the jury rendered a verdict for plaintiffs, with a special finding that such representation was false and fraudulent, but with an additional finding that before the purchase one of the plaintiffs obtained the mare from defendants, and tried her, and that during the trial she conducted herself badly. Held, that judgment was properly rendered for defendants on the special findings, since they showed that plaintiffs did not rely on the false representations.—Denny v. Woods, 2 Ind. App. 301, 28 N. E. 443.

[e] (App. 1896)

Fraud is made a question of fact by the statute (Rev. St. 1881, § 4924; Burns' Ann. St. 1894, § 6649), and must be found as a fact in the special finding, and not left to inference.—Johnson v. Bedwell, 43 N. E. 246, 15 Ind. App. 236.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. Fraud, § 75.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 146.

§ 67. Judgment.

Discharge of judgment by debtor's discharge in bankruptcy, see BANKRUPTCY, § 423.
Res judicata, see JUDGMENT, §§ 540-749.

[a] (Sup. 1861)

In an action for damages for false representations made upon the sale of a newspaper, with its good will, etc., it was proper for the court in virtue of its chancery powers to direct that the amount of the judgment in favor of the vendee should be credited on notes given by him to the vendor for the purchase money.—Harvey v. Smith, 17 Ind. 272.

§ 68. Offenses.

Laws 1907, p. 100, c. 73, provides that whoever shall offer for sale any horse, knowing it to be broken-winded, etc., and shall conceal the existence of such disease from the person to whom he is offering the animal for sale, or who shall employ any trick, artifice, drug, etc., to conceal the existence of such disease or defect, and shall thereby effect the sale of such animal to one ignorant of the disease or defect, shall be fined, etc. Held, that the statute could be properly divided into two parts, and that under the provisions of the first part the offense is complete upon the offering to sell a horse known to be so affected and concealing the defect, whether a sale is completed or not.—Boyer v. State, 169 Ind. 691, 83 N. E. 350.

The first purpose of the statute is to make it a crime for one to offer such an animal for sale, if the person so doing has knowledge of the defect, and conceals its existence from the one to whom it is offered for sale by failing to disclose the facts, while the second is to prohibit the employment of any artifice, etc., to conceal an infirmity, and thereby effect a sale to one ignorant thereof.—Id.

The word "conceal," as employed in the first part of the statute, is not used in its primary sense, meaning to hide, to cover up, to withhold from observation, but is used in its secondary sense or meaning, which is to withhold from utterance or declaration, to keep secret, to fail to disclose—citing Words and Phrases, vol. 2, p. 1377.—Id.

§ 69. Prosecution and punishment.

Act of conspirator as evidence, see CRIMINAL LAW, § 423.

[a] (Sup. 1906)

An indictment alleging that defendant, by means of a fraudulent trick and by his fraudulent manner, induced one to lose $5,000, is bad, since the facts constituting the fraud are not shown.—Clark v. State, 166 Ind. 238, 77 N. E. 52.

[b] (Sup. 1906)

An indictment charged that accused unlawfully offered for sale a broken-winded horse, with knowledge of its diseased condition, and concealed the existence of the disease from K., the prospective purchaser named, and did thereby effect the sale of the horse to K., who was ignorant of the existence of the disease, etc. Held, that the indictment was sufficient, since it was unnecessary to set out any facts constituting concealment to charge the offense of offering the horse for sale and concealing its diseased condition, and the allegation regarding the sale could be treated as surplusage.—Boyer v. State, 169 Ind. 691, 83 N. E. 350.

In a prosecution for offering to sell a wind-broken horse, with knowledge of the infirmity and concealment thereof, evidence held to sustain a conviction.—Id.

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

Scope-Note.

[INCLUDES statutory provisions making a writing necessary to the creation, assignment or surrender of estates in land, the bringing of actions on promises, agreements, or representations, or the validity of contracts, and the operation and effect of such provisions in general; requisites and sufficiency of the instrument, agreement, memorandum, or note in writing required by statute, or of the acceptance and receipt of goods or giving of earnest or part payment therefor required on contracts for sales, etc.; effect of part performance in general; and pleading the statute and evidence relating thereto.

[EXCLUDES necessity of writing to create trusts (see Trusts), or to bar statutes of limitations (see Limitation of Actions); and part performance of a contract on one part as ground for compelling performance on the other part (see Specific Performance). For complete list of matters excluded, see cross-references, post.]

I. AGREEMENTS IN CONSIDERATION OF MARRIAGE.§ 2. Nature and subject of agreement in general.

[a] (Sup. 1860)

A parol agreement by which an intended husband and wife contract that neither shall have any interest in the property of the other is valid.—Houghton v. Houghton, 14 Ind. 505, 77 Am. Dec. 69.

An antenuptial purchase by the husband of the wife's personal property, and of her right to the husband's personal property, is not within the statute of frauds.—Id.

[b] A promise by a woman to her former husband that if he would remarry her she would release her judgment against him for alimony is void if not in writing, though the parties remarried.—(Sup. 1868) Flenner v. Flenner, 29 Ind. 564; (1874) Brenner v. Brenner, 48 Ind. 262.

[c] (Sup. 1877)

An agreement between two persons, each owning real property, and about to intermarry, that upon the death of either the survivor will not claim any of the property of the other, is not within that provision of the statute of frauds which requires any agreement or promise made in consideration of marriage to be in writing.—Rainbolt v. East, 56 Ind. 538, 26 Am. Rep. 40.

[d] (Sup. 1886)

An agreement whereby a husband promises his wife that he will renounce his interest in her estate after her death if she will give him in her will a life interest in the homestead, is good, though founded on an equitable consideration, and a will according to such agreement and acceptance of its provisions by the husband after the wife's death, is a family settlement, and is not invalidated by the statute of frauds.—Wright v. Jones, 105 Ind. 17, 4 N. E. 281.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 157.

§ 5. Marriage as consideration.

[a] (Sup. 1884)

A verbal contract to marry on condition that an antenuptial contract be prepared and executed is an indivisible conditional contract, and therefore within the statute of frauds.—Caylor v. Roe, 99 Ind. 1.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, § 5.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 157.

§ 6. Marriage as acceptance of promise.

[a] A parol agreement that in consideration of marriage a woman will release a judgment she has recovered against a man is within the statute of frauds and void; and the celebration of the marriage is not such a part performance of the contract as takes it out of the statute.—(Sup. 1868) Flenner v. Flenner, 29 Ind. 564; (1874) Brenner v. Brenner, 48 Ind. 262.

§ 9. Promise to answer in general.

[a] (Sup. 1837)

If a third person be induced to purchase the assignment of a note due from an intestate's estate by the promise of the administrator that it shall be paid, the promise is not within the statute of frauds, and the administrator is personally liable to the assignee.—Blackman v. Miller, 4 Blackf. 322.

[b] (Sup. 1831)

An agreement by an administrator to submit to arbitration a suit brought by him in his representative capacity, each party to pay one-half the costs if the award is satisfactory, otherwise the party refusing to accept the award to pay all costs to date, is the individual contract of the administrator, and not within the statute.—Holderbaugh v. Turpin, 75 Ind. 84, 39 Am. Rep. 124.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, § 9.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 159.

§ 12. Effect of discharge of decedent's estate.

[a] (Sup. 1834)

A promise by an administrator to pay plaintiff for sawing certain lumber for decedent in consideration of the delivery of it to the administrator, the plaintiff having a lien on it for the bill, is not within the statute.—Bott v. Barr, 95 Ind. 243.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 159.

III. PROMISES TO ANSWER FOR DEBT, DEFAULT OR MISARRIAGE OF ANOTHER.

Agreements not to be performed within one year, see post, § 45.

Contracts as ground of defense, see post, § 141.

Instructions, see post, § 160.

Necessity of pleading writing or other compliance with statute, see post, § 148.

Promise by administrator, see ante, §§ 9, 12.

Requisites and sufficiency of memorandum, see post, §§ 105-113.

§ 14. Nature of debt, default, or miscarriage.

[a] (Sup. 1862)

A verbal contemporaneous agreement, made by the sellers of a contract to deliver hogs, to the effect that they will perform its stipulations, if the original contracting party fails so to do, can be enforced.—Beatty v. Grim, 18 Ind. 131.

[b] (Sup. 1875)

The parol promise of A. to C. to sign a certain bond to C. as surety of B., for the return of certain United States bonds if C. would loan them to B., upon which promise C. has relied, and accordingly loaned the bonds, is a contract for the payment of the debt of another, within the statute of frauds.—Hayes v. Burkam, 51 Ind. 130.

[c] (Sup. 1878)

A promise by one person to pay another's church subscription is within the statute of frauds, and unenforceable if not in writing.—Catlett v. Trustees of M. E. Church of Sweetser Station, 62 Ind. 365, 30 Am. Rep. 197.

[d] (App. 1896)

Defendant sold certain school warrants held by him, and verbally guaranteed that, if they were not paid when due, he would pay them. The warrants were known by defendant to be fraudulent, and he received the sole benefit of the transaction. Held, that the guaranty was not within the statute of frauds, on the ground that it was a promise to answer for the debt of another.—Voris v. Star City Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 50 N. E. 779, 20 Ind. App. 630.

[e] (App. 1909)

A promise by a railroad company to pay for a physician's services rendered an injured employé is the debt of the company, and not within the statute of frauds, where the agreement was part of the contract of settlement between the company and the employé for the injuries received by him.—Southern R. Co. v. Hazlewood, 88 N. E. 636.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, § 14.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 160, 161.

§ 15. Liability of original or principal debtor.

[a] (Sup. 1865)

In order to make a promise collateral, so as to bring it within that provision of the statute of frauds which requires a promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another to be in writing, the party for whom the promise is made must be liable to the party to whom it is made.—Downey v. Hinchman, 25 Ind. 453.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

An oral promise to pay the debt of a minor is not within the statute of frauds, since the minor is not liable.—King v. Summitt, 73 Ind. 312, 38 Am. Rep. 145.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, §§ 15, 16.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 162; note, 33 L. R. A. 359.

§ 16. Pre-existing liability of promisor.

[a] (Sup. 1834)

Where a partner has given a note signed in the firm name for his individual debt, a subsequent oral promise by another member of the firm to pay the note is not binding.—Taylor v. Hillyer, 8 Blackf. 433, 26 Am. Dec. 430.

[b] (Sup. 1868)

A partnership liability may become an individual debt against one member of the firm by contract, not in writing, between the partners, with the consent of the creditor.—Hopkins v. Carr, 31 Ind. 260.

[c] (Sup. 1877)

An agreement by a grantor of land by quitclaim deed, at the time of the sale, to pay all delinquent taxes due thereon, is not within the statute of frauds.—Headrick v. Wischart, 57 Ind. 129.

[d] (Sup. 1881)

A promise by a debtor to pay the debt to a person other than the creditor is not within the statute of frauds.—Indiana Mfg. Co. v. Porter, 75 Ind. 428.

[e] (Sup. 1886)

A promise by a guardian to a county treasurer to pay the taxes on the ward's land if the treasurer would receipt them as paid is not a promise to pay the debt of another, which is void because not in writing.—Elson v. Spraker, 100 Ind. 374.

[f] (Sup. 1890)

A husband purchased land, giving his notes for the price, and had the deed made in the name of his son, and delivered to his wife. The son also gave his notes for the purchase money, and gave a mortgage on the land to secure them. Before the notes were due, the husband had the vendor convey part of the land to his wife; and it was agreed that he should surrender one of the notes, that the wife should pay the other, and the vendor should resume possession of the balance of the land. Held, that the promise of the wife to pay the note, as part of the price of the land conveyed to her, was not within the statute of frauds, since it was virtually a promise to pay her own debt.—Bateman v. Butler, 124 Ind. 223, 24 N. E. 980.

[g] (Sup. 1891)

A promise by an owner to one furnishing materials to a contractor to pay for such materials cannot be upheld as a promise in a sense to pay the owner's own debt on account of the materialman's lien where such materialman was not in a situation to enforce such a lien.—Parker v. Dillingham, 129 Ind. 542, 29 N. E. 23.

[h] (App. 1892)

Where a mother, who is guardian of her son, engages board for him, the contract is an original undertaking.—McNabb v. Clipp, 5 Ind. App. 204, 31 N. E. 858.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

§ 17. Promise to answer in general.

[a] (Sup. 1843)

Where a widow has possession of goods of her deceased husband's estate, her parol promise to pay the debt due from the estate is not obligatory on her personally.—Chandler v. Davidson, 6 Blackf. 367.

[b] A promise to pay the debt of a third person is void, unless in writing.—(Sup. 1846) Murphy v. Merry, 8 Blackf. 295; (1852) Smith v. Stevens, 3 Ind. 332.

[c] (Sup. 1867)

The verbal promise, "You may charge it to me, and I will pay," spoken to a creditor of the mother of the speaker in reference to the mother's debt, in the absence of and without the knowledge or consent of the mother, is within the statute of frauds and unenforceable against the promisor, though the promise was made in consideration of forbearance to sue on the debt.—Ellison v. Wisheart, 29 Ind. 32.

[d] (App. 1896)

Plaintiff purchased land for defendant, the latter furnishing part of the purchase price, and plaintiff executing a mortgage for the balance, upon defendant's oral agreement to pay the same. Afterwards the land was conveyed in trust for defendant to another at defendant's request. Upon foreclosure of the mortgage, plaintiff was compelled to pay the deficiency remaining after sale of the land. Held, in an action to recover the amount thereof, that defendant's promise to pay the remainder of the purchase price was not a promise to answer for the debt of another.—Bedford Belt R. Co. v. Winstandley, 16 Ind. App. 143, 44 N. E. 556.

[e] (App. 1897)

A parol agreement between plaintiff and defendant, who held the note of an insolvent secured by mortgage, that if defendant would indorse said note to plaintiff without recourse, and pay a certain sum, and cause the insolvent to convey to plaintiff the interest covered by the mortgage, plaintiff would deliver certain property to defendant, is not a promise by defendant to answer for the debt or default of the insolvent.—Boos v. Hinkle, 48 N. E. 383, 18 Ind. App. 509.

[f] (App. 1908)

A promise to pay the debt of another, if made directly to the creditor, must be both in writing and based on a valuable consideration.—Southern Indiana Loan & Savings Inst. v. Roberts, 42 Ind. App. 653, 86 N. E. 490.

[g] (App. 1909)

A parol contract between creditors of the same debtor to sue the debtor, and obtain judgments for the amount due each, and to set aside a conveyance by the debtor as fraudulent, and to pay the expenses of the litigation equally, and divide the amount recovered equally, is not within the statute of frauds as a promise to pay the debt of another, but is a joint agreement between the creditors to share equally, at their equal expense, in the proceeds of a suit realized through their joint efforts.—Hotmire v. O'Brien, 90 N. E. 33.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

§ 18. Promise to debtor to discharge debt.

[a] The payee of a promissory note may maintain an action against one who promises the maker to pay all his debts in consideration of a transfer to himself of all the maker's property, such promise not being within the statute.—(Sup. 1856) Nelson v. Hardy, 7 Ind. 364; (1879) Carter v. Zenblin, 68 Ind. 436; (1879) Fisher v. Wilmoth, Id. 449.

[b] The parol agreement of a purchaser of mortgaged land to pay off the mortgage as a part of the consideration of the purchase is not within the statute as a promise to pay the debt of another.—(Sup. 1872) Helms v. Kearns, 40 Ind. 124; (1873) McDill v. Gunn, 43 Ind. 315; (1892) Lowe v. Hamilton, 132 Ind. 406, 31 N. E. 1117.

[c] (Sup. 1874)

A verbal promise of the purchaser of an equity of redemption to pay the mortgage debt, made after his purchase, and not connected with the consideration to be paid therefor, cannot be enforced by the mortgagee, although a valuable consideration may have been given for the promise; such an undertaking being void by the statute of frauds.—Berkshire v. Young, 45 Ind. 461.

[d] (Sup. 1874)

A parol agreement by a purchaser of a partner's interest in the firm property to pay as a part of the consideration therefor one-half of the firm debts is not within the statute of frauds.—Haggerty v. Johnston, 48 Ind. 41.

[e] (Sup. 1876)

A verbal contract between A. and B. for the payment by the former of an indebtedness of the latter to C. is not within the statute of frauds, and where B. has afterwards been compelled to pay said indebtedness he may maintain an action on said contract against A.—Crim v. Fitch, 53 Ind. 214.

[f] (Sup. 1876)

A verbal promise by a mortgagee of lands to his mortgagor to pay a prior vendor's lien thereon in the event of a foreclosure of his mortgage without redemption is within the statute.—Brake v. King, 54 Ind. 294.

[g] (Sup. 1877)

C., at sheriff's sale, bought land belonging to B., and it was afterwards sold to F. at sheriff's sale under an execution against C. H. brought an action against C. to redeem from the first sale, when F.'s assignee orally agreed with C. that, in consideration that C. would resist and defeat such action, such assignee would pay off a certain judgment held by a third party against C. Held, that such agreement was not within the statute of frauds.—Whitesell v. Heiney, 58 Ind. 108.

[h] (Sup. 1878)

On the dissolution of a partnership one of the partners sold and delivered to the others all his interest in the partnership property, in consideration of the payment by them to him of a sum of money, and an agreement on their part to pay all the indebtedness of the firm. Afterwards such partner was compelled to pay a part of such indebtedness, and brought suit against the others to recover the amount so paid. Held, that the agreement was not within the statute of frauds.—Vanness v. Dubois, 64 Ind. 338.

[i] (Sup. 1886)

A contract with a third person for the benefit of the creditor of such person is not within the statute of frauds, where it is founded upon a new and independent consideration.—Wolke v. Fleming, 103 Ind. 105, 2 N. E. 325, 53 Am. Rep. 495.

[j] (App. 1896)

Where a purchaser of property agrees by parol in consideration thereof to pay certain debts of his vendor due to a third person, the promise is original, and not within the statute.—William Deering & Co. v. Armstrong, 14 Ind. App. 44, 42 N. E. 372.

[k] (Sup. 1897)

Certain findings stated that a debtor caused certain land to be conveyed to defendant by one who held the same to indemnify himself against his liability as surety on the debtor's note, and that defendant agreed with said debtor and said surety to pay said note. Held, that defendant's agreement was a contract to loan money to pay said note, and that on failure of defendant to pay said note the surety could not recover the amount thereof, as defendant's undertaking, being by parol, was within the statute of frauds.—Lowe v. Turpie, 147 Ind. 652, 44 N. E. 25, 47 N. E. 150, 37 L. R. A. 233.

[l] (Sup. 1897)

A promise by the purchaser of a partner's interest in a firm, as a part of the consideration, to pay an indebtedness of the firm, is not within the statute.—Dickson v. Conde, 148 Ind. 279, 46 N. E. 908.

[m] (App. 1899)

In consideration of a transfer of goods, the vendee, by an agreement which referred to the bill of sale, assumed to pay certain debts of the vendor, the total of the debts assumed by the agreement exceeding by one item the sum named in the bill of sale as a consideration. Held, that the agreement to assume the item in excess of the sum named in the bill of sale was not without consideration.—Tibbet v. Zurbuch, 52 N. E. 815, 22 Ind. App. 354.

[n] (App. 1903)

In order to establish a personal liability for a mortgage debt against the grantees of the mortgagor, facts must be averred and proved sufficient to take the case out of the statute of frauds, and make the debt that of the grantees.—Southern Indiana Loan & Savings Inst. v. Roberts, 42 Ind. App. 653, 86 N. E. 490.

Where a grantee of land assumes as a part of the consideration for the conveyance a mortgage debt of the grantor, such debt is not the "debt of another" within the statute of frauds, but becomes the grantee's debt, who becomes personally liable therefor on his contract, whether it be in writing or by parol.—Id.

[o] (App. 1909)

A promise made to a debtor to pay his debt to a third person, made on a sufficient consideration passing between a debtor and the promisor, is not within the statute of frauds, and an action may be maintained by the third person without a discharge of the original debtor.—Southern R. Co. v. Hazlewood, 88 N. E. 630.

§ 20. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1882)

An express warranty of solvency of a third person which, though a part of a contract and made for the purpose of obtaining the property of the other party to the contract, is not within the statute of frauds.—Hassinger v. Newman, 83 Ind. 124, 43 Am. Rep. 64.

[b] (Sup. 1885)

A., holding land as a tenant for life, sold growing timber to B. C. sued A. and B. jointly for cutting the timber, and A. orally promised B. that she would pay all costs that might be caused by the action. Held, that A.'s promise was not within the statute of frauds, it not being a promise to answer for the debt of another.—Windell v. Hudson, 102 Ind. 521, 2 N. E. 303.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

§ 21. — Coexisting liability of another.

[a] (Sup. 1854)

An oral promise by one to another to indemnify him if he will become replevin bail for a third party is void under the statute of frauds.—Brush v. Carpenter, 6 Ind. 78.

[b] If a surety in an obligation, by making a promise of indemnity, procures another person to become surety with him in the instrument, this promise is not void under the statute of frauds because not in writing, for the indemnity is promised against the promisor's own default.—(Sup. 1875) Horn v. Bray, 51 Ind. 555, 19 Am. Rep. 742.

[c] An oral promise to indemnify another for becoming bail for a third, indicted for felony, is not within the statute of frauds, and is enforceable.—(Sup. 1880) Anderson v. Spence, 72 Ind. 315, 37 Am. Rep. 162; (1889) Keesling v. Frazier, 119 Ind. 185, 21 N. E. 552.

[d] (Sup. 1890)

A surety verbally agreed that, if one of the two principals would borrow the money and pay the indebtedness, and accept from his fellow-principal, as security for one-half the amount so paid, a second mortgage on his farm in which his wife refused to join, he, the surety, would indemnify him, and make good any loss he might sustain by being unable to make the amount out of the mortgaged property. Held, that the contract was an undertaking to become liable for the debt of another, within the statute of frauds (Rev. St. § 4904), and void.—Cheesman v. Wiggin, 122 Ind. 352, 23 N. E. 945.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., St. of, § 33.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 178.

§ 23. Original or collateral promise in general.

[a] (Sup. 1876)

An oral promise by a third person to a seller of goods, who has refused to deliver without security for the price, that, if he will make delivery, the promisor will see that he gets his pay, is within the statute of frauds, and must be in writing, even though the delivery was made on the faith of the promise.—Pettit v. Braden, 55 Ind. 201.

[b] (Sup. 1882)

Where defendant promised, in consideration of the adjustment and disposition of certain actions involving the title to lands claimed by his wife, to pay to plaintiff a certain sum of money, the promise was an original and independent one, and not merely a collateral promise to answer for the debt of another, and was not within the statute of frauds.—Shaffer v. Ryan, 84 Ind. 140.

[c] (Sup. 1885)

A contract wherein the assignee of a lease agrees as part of the consideration of the sale and transfer of that interest to him to pay rent to the owner of the fee is not a promise to answer for the default of another within the statute of frauds.—Wolke v. Fleming, 2 N. E. 325, 103 Ind. 105, 53 Am. Rep. 495.

[d] (Sup. 1903)

A complaint seeking recovery from defendant for taxes paid by plaintiffs on realty owned by defendant's husband alleged that immediately after the husband's death plaintiffs were about to enforce their claim to taxes, when defendant requested them to desist, and promised that if they would do so she would pay the taxes, and plaintiffs, relying on them, did so refrain. Held, that such promise was subject to objection as a collateral, rather than an original, promise.—Blumenthal v. Tibbits, 66 N. E. 159, 160 Ind. 70.

[e] (App. 1906)

Where relators furnished supplies, labor, and materials to a subcontractor for the construction of a highway, and treated the latter as their debtor until after he absconded, the undertaking of the contractors, if any, to liquidate such indebtedness, was not an original undertaking, but a contract to answer for the default of another, within the statute of frauds.—Miller v. State ex rel. Prather, 74 N. E. 260, 35 Ind. App. 379.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., St. of, §§ 18, 19.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 163-166.

§ 25. Obligation of promisor independent of liability of principal.

[a] (Sup. 1882)

A promise by a husband to pay a certain sum for the settlement of suits involving his wife's title to real estate held to be an original promise, and not to answer for the debt of another.—Shaffer v. Ryan, 84 Ind. 140.

[b] (Sup. 1891)

Plaintiff contracted with defendant's principal contractor to furnish a steam-heating apparatus for a court house, the plans agreed upon differing from the original specifications. Defendant, being unwilling to advance pay therefor to its principal contractor, paid an amount due thereon to plaintiff, who executed a bond for the completion of the work which was verbally assented to by defendant, and completed the same. Defendant took possession of the building, and continued to use the heating apparatus. Plaintiff sued for an unpaid balance. Held, that the contract was not a collateral one, and there was a consideration moving to defendant that took the promise out of the operation of the statute of frauds.—Board of Com'rs of Gibson County v. Cincinnati Steam-Heating Co., 128 Ind. 240, 27 N. E. 612, 12 L. R. A. 502.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., St. of, § 21.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 167.

§ 26. Credit given to promisor.

[a] (Sup. 1858)

A verbally agreed that, if B. would let C. have a horse, he would make good any agreement about it. Held, that it was for the jury to say whether credit was given primarily to C., and, they having so found, A.'s agreement was held collateral and void.—Billingsley v. Dempewolf, 11 Ind. 414.

[b] (Sup. 1874)

A. executed to B. his written agreement, which, after reciting that B. was about to appoint C. his agent for the purchase of grain, and to furnish him money for that purpose, contained this provision: "I hereby become responsible to said" B., "and agree to pay him all money that he may so advance to said" C., "and that may be due him from" C. "from time to time, by reason of such advances." Held, that the liability assumed by A. was primary and absolute, and not collateral.—Dickinson v. Colter, 45 Ind. 445.

[c] (Sup. 1874)

A father is liable for the board of his adult daughter, if furnished at his request, though no promise be made in writing.—Kernodle v. Caldwell, 46 Ind. 153.

[d] (Sup. 1876)

A parol promise by one to be responsible and stand good for the payment by another of wages that may accrue from the latter to the person to whom the promise is made is within the statute of frauds.—Miller v. Neihaus, 51 Ind. 401.

[e] (Sup. 1878)

In an action by M. against L. to recover for labor and materials, there was evidence that H. had contracted with L. to furnish the same for a building L. was erecting; that L. told M. to let H. have whatever he called for, and he (L.) would pay for it; and that M. had accordingly delivered the materials to H. and performed the labor at H.'s request, charging the same to his own separate account. Held not to establish any liability of L., nor to raise any question under the statute of frauds.—Lomax v. McKinney, 61 Ind. 374.

[f] (Sup. 1878)

A verbal agreement by a salesman, employed to sell goods for cash only, to be personally responsible to his employer for all uncollectible accounts of all sales made by him on credit, is within the statute of frauds; and hence no action is maintainable by the salesman against one to whom he has thus made sales on credit.—Smock v. Brush, 62 Ind. 156, 176.

[g] A direct and unconditional promise by one to pay for goods furnished to a third party, made prior to the delivery of the goods, and upon the faith of which the goods were delivered to such third party, is an original undertaking, which is not within the statute of frauds.—(Sup. 1880) Johnson v. Hoover, 72 Ind. 395; (1881) Wills v. Ross, 77 Ind. 1, 40 Am. Rep. 279.

[h] (Sup. 1883)

If A. and B. agree by parol, jointly, to pay for goods for A., the goods to be charged to both, B.'s promise is not within the statute of frauds, being original, and not collateral.—Boyce v. Murphy, 91 Ind. 1, 46 Am. Rep. 567.

[i] (Sup. 1884)

A person who employs another on his own credit to perform work for a third person is liable for its payment, and such contract is not within the statute of frauds.—Augbie v. Landis, 95 Ind. 419.

[j] (Sup. 1885)

The mere fact that a seller of goods at the buyer's request charges them to a third person does not make the buyer's promise to pay for them a promise to pay the debt of another.—Lance v. Pearce, 101 Ind. 595, 1 N. E. 184.

[k] (App. 1899)

Where plaintiff, under promise of reimbursement by defendants, secured a third party to perform services for defendants, agreeing to answer to such third party for the value of the services in case he was not paid by defendants, the plaintiff's agreement is not within the statute of frauds, as an agreement to answer for the debt of another, and he can recover from defendants the amount paid.—Week v. Widgeon, 55 N. E. 487, 23 Ind. App. 405.

[l] (Sup. 1902)

In an action on an undertaker's bill against the employer of decedent's husband, a complaint alleging that a coffin was furnished and services rendered at the special instance and request of the employer, without specifically alleging that credit was extended to him, is not objectionable as setting forth a case falling within the statute of frauds; as, where goods are furnished to a third person on the order of another, the person giving the order is regarded as the purchaser.—Cox v. Peltier, 65 N. E. 6, 159 Ind. 355.

[m] (Sup. 1903)

A wholesale liquor dealer refused to furnish more goods to a retailer, who had become largely indebted to him, unless the retailer's wife would become personally responsible for the goods. She said that she was running the business and would be responsible, and thereafter all goods were shipped in her name, but were sold by the husband, who continued to run the saloon in his own name, renewing the license in his name. Held, that the wife was not the purchaser of the liquors, but that her agreement to pay for them was merely an oral promise to answer for the debt of her husband, void under the statute of frauds.—Indiana Trust Co. v. Finitzer, 67 N. E. 520, 160 Ind. 647.

[a] (App. 1909)

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7462, providing that all contracts must be in writing in order to charge any person on promise to answer for the debt of another, applies to coal furnished a contractor drilling an oil well for a defendant sought to be charged therewith on a promise to pay for the same.—Mossburg v. United Oil & Gas Co., 43 Ind. App. 465, 87 N. E. 992.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, §§ 35-42½.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 180-186; note, 51 Am. Dec. 144.

§ 27. Promise to make, accept, or indorse bill or note.

[a] (Sup. 1884)

A parol acceptance of a bill is not within the statute, if the acceptor owes the drawer.—Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. v. Caldwell, 98 Ind. 245.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, §§ 43, 44.
See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 169.

§ 28. Promise on transfer of bill or note and mortgage.

[a] (Sup. 1871)

Where one owned a note and mortgage against the holder of a certain promissory note, and it was agreed by him with a third party that he would surrender the note and mortgage to his debtor, and take an assignment of the note held by the latter, which he accordingly did, and the third party agreed by parol to pay the note so taken, held that this was a contract within the statute of frauds, which requires a special promise to pay the debt of another to be in writing.—Crosby v. Jeroloman, 37 Ind. 264.

[b] (Sup. 1877)

Where the payee of a note transfers it by delivery only in exchange for goods, a verbal warranty by him, as a part of such exchange, that the note is valid, is not within the statute of frauds.—White v. Webster, 58 Ind. 233.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

An oral guaranty of the genuineness of a note and the liability of the maker to pay it, made by the holder upon a transfer of it for value, is not a promise to pay the debt of another, within the statute of frauds.—King v. Summitt, 73 Ind. 312, 38 Am. Rep. 145.

[d] (Sup. 1882)

An oral guaranty of the solvency of the maker of a note, made by the holder to induce another to take it in payment for property, is not within the statute of frauds; but his agreement to pay any amount the transferee should fail to collect is within the statute.—Hassinger v. Newman, 83 Ind. 124, 43 Am. Rep. 64.

[e] (Sup. 1883)

Where a party to whom a receiver's certificate of indebtedness is issued indorses the same to another, his parol promise to guaranty its payment is within the statute of frauds.—McCurdy v. Bowes, 88 Ind. 583.

§ 31. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1876)

A promise, to the holder of a judgment against the promisor's son, that, if he will satisfy an execution issued on it, the promisor will deliver certain personal property and pay a certain sum of money to the judgment plaintiff, is not a promise to pay the debt to another, and within the statute of frauds, but is a valid contract, supported by sufficient consideration, for breach of which the judgment creditor may maintain an action for damages on satisfying such execution.—Palmer v. Blain, 55 Ind. 11.

[b] (Sup. 1877)

A promise, not shown to have been in writing, by a mother to a creditor to pay a debt of her deceased son, in consideration of receiving certain assets of his estate and the proceeds of a policy of insurance on his life, is within the statute of frauds; it not appearing that the creditor surrendered any right against the estate.—Langford v. Freeman, 60 Ind. 46.

[c] (App. 1896)

In the case of a promise made to a debtor to pay his debt to a third person upon a sufficient consideration passing between the debtor and the promisor, an action may be maintained upon the promise without the discharge of the original debtor.—Hyatt v. Bonham, 49 N. E. 361, 19 Ind. App. 256.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, §§ 47, 48.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 186.

§ 32. — Novation.

[a] (Sup. 1851)

Where A. owes B., and B. owes C., in order to render A. liable to C. for B.'s debt without a promise in writing, a mutual agreement of the parties must be proved that B. was to be released and A. was to pay B.'s debt to C.—Decker v. Shaffer, 3 Ind. 187.

[b] (Sup. 1867)

E., without the knowledge of his mother, verbally promised her creditor, in consideration of forbearance to sue her, to pay her debt. Three of the six witnesses who heard the interview testified that there was an effectual novation, and the other three testified that the creditor "agreed to let her alone, and wait with the son till Christmas." Held, that the son's promise was within the statute of frauds; the mother's ignorance of the transaction excluding the idea of novation.—Ellison v. Wisehart, 20 Ind. 32.

[c] (App. 1898)

A lessor of an opera house agreed to pay the lessee $20 and a balance owing by the lessee for chairs placed in said house, and the lessee agreed to surrender the lease. They went together to the creditor, and stated the agreement; and the latter accepted the lessor as its debtor. Held, that there was a complete novation, so that the statute of frauds did not apply.—Hyatt v. Bonham, 49 N. E. 361, 19 Ind. App. 256.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, § 49.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 188.

§ 33. New consideration beneficial to promisor.

[a] (Sup. 1943)

A promise to pay the debt of another must be in writing, by the statute of frauds, to be the foundation of a suit, unless the consideration be sufficient to give to the promise the character of a original undertaking.—Chandler v. Davidson, 6 Blackf. 367.

[b] (Sup. 1875)

A parol promise to pay the debt of another if not paid by himself is within the statute of frauds, notwithstanding the purchaser is thereby induced to suffer the debtor to leave the state without paying the debt, taking his property with him.—Gillfillan v. Snow, 51 Ind. 305.

In an action by the payee of a promissory note against the widow of the deceased surety thereon to recover of her the amount of such note, the allegations of the complaint therein were execution of such note by decedent as surety of another, who executed it as principal. the decease of such surety, leaving an estate entirely sufficient to pay all his debts, and the legal appointment and qualification of an administrator to settle the same; the presentation of such note to such administrator as a claim against such estate, and his acceptance of the same and proceeding to pay it as a valid claim; the verbal promise, at the time of such acceptance, to payee, by such widow, to pay the same herself, on condition that payee would not require or demand payment of such claim out of the assets of such estate, nor file the same as a claim against it, provided, further, that the principal thereon should fail to pay it; the acceptance of such verbal promise by payee, and that, relying thereon, he did not file such claim against such estate, or demand or receive payment thereof from such administrator; the receiving by such widow, in addition to the amount allowed her by law as widow of decedent, of a sum exceeding the amount of plaintiff's claim out of the assets of such estate, the settlement in full of such estate by such administrator, and his discharge from such trust; the entire insolvency of such principal ever since the maturity of such note, and his failure to pay the same; and that such note is due and unpaid. Held, on demurrer for want of sufficient facts, that the complaint sets out a good cause of action against the defendant; such verbal promise not being within the statute of frauds.—Crawford v. King, 54 Ind. 6.

A verbal agreement, made on a valuable consideration to answer for the debt of another, may nevertheless be void by the statute of frauds because it is not in writing.—Krutz v. Stewart, 54 Ind. 178.

A promise by the payee and holder of a note, to the maker, that, if the latter will forbear issuing execution on a judgment he holds against a third person, the promisor will pay the judgment by allowing the amount as a credit on the note, is within the statute of frauds, and void if not in writing.—Id.

A parol promise, by the payee to the maker of a promissory note, that, if the latter will forbear to attach property in the hands of the former, and in which he is interested, belonging to an absconding debtor of such maker, he will credit the amount of such indebtedness on such note, is not within the statute of frauds.—Mitchell v. Griffin, 58 Ind. 559.

[f] (Sup. 1879)

An agreement by a creditor of a manufacturing company, made with the president upon being notified by him that the company must cease operations for want of funds, to furnish the necessary means, including the wages of operatives, in consideration of his receiving the proceeds of the business, is a contract for the benefit of such operatives, and not within the statute of frauds; and such creditor is liable for the wages of employes who perform services on the faith of the agreement.—Rhodes v. Matthews, 67 Ind. 131.

[g] (Sup. 1881)

The mere passing of a new and independent consideration from the promisee to the promisor does not take a promise to pay the debt of another out of the operation of the statute of frauds.—Holderbaugh v. Turpin, 75 Ind. 84, 30 Am. Rep. 124.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

A verbal promise by the owner of buildings to pay the materialmen for material furnished the contractor if the materialmen would give him time, where he owes the contractor nothing, is within the statute of frauds (Rev. St. 1881, p. 4904), though the materials are furnished in reliance on such promise, if it appears that the materialmen did not agree not to file a lien nor to release the contractor, though in fact they did fail to take the steps requisite to entitle them to a lien.—Parker v. Billingham, 129 Ind. 542, 29 N. E. 23.

[i] (App. 1882)

A promise by the widow of a deceased debtor that, if the creditors would forbear taking letters of administration on deceased's estate, she would pay their claims, is a promise to pay the debt of another, and is within the statute of frauds.—Keadle v. Siddens, 5 Ind. App. 8, 31 N. E. 539.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, §§ 50-53, 56.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 188-195.

§ 34. Promise to apply or pay from property of debtor.

[a] (Sup. 1856)

A promise by A. to B., with C.'s consent, that if B. would extend the time of payment of a debt due B. from C., and furnish goods to C. on credit, he (A.) would retain money falling due to C., and pay B. the debt already existing and for the goods furnished, is not within the statute of frauds.—Nelson v. Hardy, 7 Ind. 364.

[b] (Sup. 1866)

Where a junior mortgagee has taken possession of the property under a promise to the mortgagor that he would sell it, and from the proceeds first pay the senior mortgagee, his promise is not within the statute of frauds.—Woodward v. Wilcox, 27 Ind. 207.

[c] (Sup. 1888)

Neither a promise to discharge liens in consideration of a conveyance of land nor a promise to pay the purchase price of the land conveyed is within the provision of the statute of frauds which inhibits the maintenance of an action on a verbal contract for the sale of land.—Turpie v. Lowe, 15 N. E. 834, 114 Ind. 37.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, § 54.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 172.

§ 35. Release or transfer of lien or security.

[a] (Sup. 1855)

Where a creditor, having a specific lien, surrenders it upon the express promise of a third person to pay the debt, the undertaking is an original one, and not within the statute of frauds.—Spooner v. Dunn, 7 Ind. 91, 63 Am. Dec. 414; Same v. Shearer, Id. 136; Same v. Dawson, Id. 236.

[b] (Sup. 1870)

An oral promise to pay the debt of another in consideration of the release of a lien on his property, if made with the view and the result of obtaining for the promisor a benefit from the release, is not within the statute of frauds, though the original debtor is not released from liability.—Luark v. Malone, 34 Ind. 444.

[c] (Sup. 1873)

The verbal promise of a mortgagee of a chattel to pay for repairs of the mortgaged property made for the mortgagor by a mechanic, in consideration of which the mechanic relinquishes his lien on the property for the repairs made by him, is not within the statute of frauds, and may be enforced.—Conradt v. Sullivan, 45 Ind. 180, 15 Am. Rep. 261.

[d] (Sup. 1878)

In an action by E. against F., the complaint recited substantially that E. held a mortgage on R.'s leasehold of a coal mine to secure payment of certain notes, not including one for $327; that F., desiring security for R.'s indebtedness to himself, promised to pay E. this note, and E. consented to R.'s executing to F. a mortgage on the same leasehold to secure said indebtedness of R. to F., and in such mortgage said note was included; that R. became insolvent, and F. took possession; that by reason of said promises E. was induced to, and did, release R. Held, that F.'s promise was on a sufficient consideration not to be within the statute of frauds, and, under the issue made by the general denial, evidence was admissible to determine whether F.'s mortgage became a prior lien over E.'s, and also the extent of E.'s loss of security.—Fleming v. Easter, 60 Ind. 309.

[e] (Sup. 1882)

A verbal agreement founded on a valuable consideration to satisfy a lien is valid, and not affected by the statute of frauds.—Felton v. Smith, 84 Ind. 485.

[f] (Sup. 1888)

A creditor, who, as security for a debt, with plaintiff's consent, takes from his debtor an assignment of an insurance policy which had already been assigned to plaintiffs, to indemnify them as sureties for another debt, assuming and agreeing to pay the last-named debt, is liable to plaintiffs, who have been compelled to pay it, though the policy is not yet collected, such promise being original, and not within the statute.—Leake v. Ball, 116 Ind. 214, 17 N. E. 918.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, §§ 55, 57.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 192.

§ 36. Purchase of debt.

[a] (Sup. 1894)

A promise by a wife to accept, in payment of a note, property delivered to her husband, is not a promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another, within the meaning of the statute of frauds.—Collins v. Stanfield, 139 Ind. 184, 38 N. E. 1001.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, § 58.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 195.

IV. REPRESENTATIONS.

§ 37. Statutory provisions.

[a] (App. 1898)

The word "person," as used in the statute of frauds, embraces corporations.—Heintz v. Mueller, 49 N. E. 203, 19 Ind. App. 240.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, § 59.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 195, 196.

§ 38. Nature and subject-matter.

[a] (Sup. 1882)

An oral representation by persons in partnership, falsely and fraudulently made, that each of them had invested $800 in the business, whereby another was induced to invest that sum and become a member of the co-partnership, is not a representation as to the credit or solvency of another, within Rev. St. 1881, § 4900.—St. John v. Hendrickson, 81 Ind. 350.

[b] (App. 1897)

Recovery may be had for the price of goods sold on credit through defendant's fraud in subscribing his name as a witness to a false signature to a letter of credit, as such action is not founded on an oral representation as to the solvency of another, within Rev. St. 1894, § 6634 (Rev. St. 1881, § 4900), providing that one cannot be charged for a representation as to the credit of another unless such representation be in writing, and signed by him.—Mendenhall v. Stewart, 47 N. E. 943, 18 Ind. App. 202.

[c] (App. 1888)

Plaintiff, relying on representations as to the condition of a corporation, purchased shares of defendant, which were issued "directly from the company," and paid him therefor. Held, that the alleged representations were made to establish the general credit of the corporation, with the intent that it should obtain money thereon, and the case was within Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 6634 (Hornor's Rev. St. 1897, § 4900), providing that no action shall be maintained to charge a person by reason of any representation made concerning the credit, ability, trade, or dealings of any other person unless made in writing, and signed by the party to be charged.—Heintz v. Mueller, 49 N. E. 203, 19 Ind. App. 240.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, § 60.

§ 39. Intent or purpose.

[a] (Sup. 1885)

Representations concerning particular property or assets of another, when made with a view to establish his general credit and pecuniary ability, are within the statute.—Cook v. Churchman, 104 Ind. 141, 3 N. E. 759.

[b] (App. 1907)

Representations by members of a corporation of existing facts as to its property for the purpose of showing the value of stock sought to be sold are not representations concerning the character, etc., of a third person within Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6634, providing that no action shall be maintained to charge a person by reason of any representation concerning the character, conduct, credit, ability, trade, or dealings of any other person, unless the representation be made in writing and signed by the person to be charged thereby or his agent.—Grover v. Cavanagh, 82 N. E. 104, 40 Ind. App. 340.

Under such statute, the representations as to the character, conduct, credit, etc., of a third person required to be in writing, must be made with the intent that he shall in the first instance obtain credit, money, or goods thereupon.—Id.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, § 61.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 197.

§ 42. Effect of fraud.

[a] (Sup. 1885)

Under the provision of the statute of frauds declaring that no action shall be maintained to charge any person by reason of any representation made concerning the character, conduct, credit, ability, trade, or dealings of another, unless such representation is in writing and signed, etc., if parol representations are made regarding the credit and ability of a third person, with the intent that such third person shall obtain money or credit thereon, the statute applies, and no action thereon can be maintained, although the party making the representations may have entered into a conspiracy with such third person with the expectation of obtaining some incidental benefit for himself.—Cook v. Churchman, 104 Ind. 141, 3 N. E. 759.

[b] (Sup. 1888)

H. colluded with T. for the purpose of obtaining plaintiff's property and defrauding him out of part of the purchase price, by having a colorable sale made to T., an insolvent, whom H. orally represented to plaintiff as financially responsible: T. giving his note for part of the purchase price, and then making a pretended sale to H. Held, that the statute of frauds did not apply to what was an actual conspiracy to defraud, and not merely an oral representation as to the solvency of T., and that both H. and T. were liable for the unpaid purchase price.—Hodgin v. Bryant, 114 Ind. 401, 16 N. E. 815.

[c] (Sup. 1903)

Fraudulent representations made by defendant in pursuance of a conspiracy entered into with the owners of worthless patent rights, whereby he induced plaintiff and others to purchase such rights in reliance on defendant's business judgment, and fictitious co-operation in the purchase by the execution of his notes, which it was agreed the sellers were to return to him, and pay him $1,000 for his services, are not representations concerning "the character, credit, ability, trade, or dealings of another," within the meaning of the statute of frauds (Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6634; Rev. St. 1881, § 4900; Horner's Rev. St. 1901, § 4900), requiring such representations to be in writing to render them actionable.—Coulter v. Clark, 66 N. E. 739, 100 Ind. 311.

§ 44. Nature and subject-matter.

[a] (Sup. 1863)

An agreement to lease land for the term of two years, at a rent equal to the full rental value of the premises, the occupation to commence at a future day, is an agreement relating to an interest in land, and under Rev. St. 1843, c. 28, § 16, and notwithstanding the exception in that section relating to leases not exceeding the term of three years, to be valid, it must be in writing.—Stackberger v. Mosteller, 4 Ind. 461.

[b] (Sup. 1865)

The statute in relation to contracts not to be performed within a year which is substantially like that of 29 Car. II, c. 3, § 4, has no reference to agreements founded on a past consideration.—Wiggins v. Keizer, 6 Ind. 252.

[c] (Sup. 1859)

Contracts of partnership that are not to be performed within a year are within the statute of frauds.—Wilson v. Ray, 13 Ind. 1.

A promise to pay money after the expiration of a year is as much within the statute as a promise to do any other act.—Id.

[d] (Sup. 1874)

The fifth subdivision of the first section of the statute of frauds (1 Gav. & II. Rev. St. pp. 348, 349, 350), which declares that no action shall be brought "upon any agreement that is not to be performed within one year from the making thereof, unless the promise, contract or agreement, upon which such action shall be brought, or some memorandum or note thereof, shall be in writing, and signed by the party to be charged therewith, or by some person thereunto by him lawfully authorized, excepting, however, leases not exceeding the term of three years," does not extend to agreements concerning lands.—Fall v. Hazelrigg, 45 Ind. 576, 15 Am. Rep. 278.

[e] 1 Rev. St. 1876, pp. 303, 504, § 1, cl. 5, in relation to contracts not to be performed within one year, has no application to contracts for the sale of, or in relation to, real estate.—(Sup. 1879) Baynes v. Chastain, 68 Ind. 376; (1880) Cole v. Wright, 70 Ind. 179.

[f] (Sup. 1890)

Under the direct provisions of Rev. St. 1881, § 4904, a parol lease of land for a period not exceeding three years is valid.—Lowman v. Sheets, 24 N. E. 351, 124 Ind. 416, 7 L. R. A. 784.

[g] (App. 1895)

A parol lease for 10 years is within the statute of frauds (Rev. St. 1894, § 6029), and is therefore void.—Kleespies v. McKenzie, 40 N. E. 648, 12 Ind. App. 404.

[h] (Sup. 1901)

A contract for the lease of water rights for 25 years is not in violation of Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 6029, subd. 5 (Rev. St. 1881, § 4904, subd. 5; Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 4904, subd. 5), requiring contracts not to be performed in one year to be in writing, since the lease conveys an interest in real estate, and such section has no application to contracts conveying such interest.—St. Joseph Hydraulic Co. v. Globe Tissue-Paper Co., 59 N. E. 995, 156 Ind. 665.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

§ 45. Stipulations as to time.

Possibility of performance, see post, § 49.

[a] (Sup. 1855)

The provision of the statute of frauds as to contracts which are not to be performed within a year applies to those contracts in which this is so by the express stipulation of the parties, and not to those which may or may not be performed within a year.—Wiggins v. Keizer, 6 Ind. 252.

[b] (Sup. 1863)

A contract whereby A. sells a horse to B. and warrants that it shall be sound for one year thereafter, and agrees that if, after the expiration of one year, the horse prove unsound, he will take it back and pay the plaintiff $100, is within the statute of frauds, as not to be performed within a year, and not operative against A., unless in writing. 1 Gav. & H. St. p. 348, § 1, subsec. 5.—Shipley v. Patton, 21 Ind. 169.

[c] (Sup. 1864)

The statute of fraud applies only to contracts, which by the express stipulations of the parties are not to be performed in a year, and not to those which may or may not, upon a contingency, be performed within a year.—Indiana & I. C. R. Co. v. Secorce, 23 Ind. 223.

[d] (Sup. 1879)

A verbal agreement between J.'s putative father and her mother to support J. until majority is void, under 1 Rev. St. p. 503, § 1, cl. 5, as not to be performed within one year.—Goodrich v. Johnson, 66 Ind. 258.

[e] (Sup. 1881)

A contract whereby plaintiff paid a certain sum in consideration of acting as defendant's agent for a "reasonable time" held not within the statute of frauds as to contracts not to be performed within a year.—Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. Greene, 77 Ind. 590.

[f] (Sup. 1885)

To bring a contract within the statute of frauds it must affirmatively appear by the terms of the contract that it is one not to be performed within one year.—Hinkle v. Fisher, 104 Ind. 84, 3 N. E. 624.

[g] (Sup. 1890)

A parol agreement, not amounting to a partnership, to keep mares for breeding purposes from 1887 until 1891, each party furnishing a part of the feed, with postponement of a settlement to that date, is within the statute of frauds.—Lowman v. Sheets, 24 N. E. 351, 124 Ind. 416, 7 L. R. A. 784.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, §§ 67-71.

§ 46. Intent of parties.

[a] (Sup. 1859)

The plaintiff, in consideration that the defendant would draw, accept, and indorse paper, to enable the plaintiff to raise money to build a railroad, for which work the plaintiff was to be paid in bonds of the railroad company, agreed to pay the defendant one-half of all that he should realize on the bonds over 75 cents on the dollar, and the defendant agreed so to draw, accept, and indorse, and to make up to the plaintiff one-half of the loss on the bonds, should they not bring 75 cents on the dollar. Held, that this contract, when made, was purely executory, and within the statute of frauds, if its provisions were not intended to be performed within one year.—Wilson v. Ray, 13 Ind. 1.

§ 49. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1860)

A marriage contract, providing for the disposition of the property of the parties to their respective heirs, is one which may be performed within a year, and therefore is not within the statute of frauds.—Houghton v. Houghton, 14 Ind. 505, 77 Am. Dec. 69.

[b] (Sup. 1873)

An agreement, connected with a contract letting lands, that the tenant will "during the term" (three years) erect a fence, is not within the statute of frauds, for it may be performed within the first year.—Marley v. Noblett, 42 Ind. 85.

[c] (Sup. 1875)

A parol contract of marriage that may be performed at any time within three years, and consequently within one year, is not within the statute of frauds; but, if not to be performed within one year, it is within the statute.—Paris v. Strong, 51 Ind. 339.

[d] (Sup. 1881)

A contract whereby plaintiff sells land to B., the latter agreeing to pay any excess over the purchase price for which he might sell the land within five years, is not within the statute of frauds, being an agreement possible to be performed within one year.—Parker v. Siple, 76 Ind. 345.

[e] (Sup. 1882)

A parol contract to breed a mare, and deliver the colt at weaning time, being impossible, in the course of nature, of performance within a year, is within the statute of frauds.—Groves v. Cook, 88 Ind. 169, 45 Am. Rep. 46.

[f] (Sup. 1887)

A verbal contract that the vendee shall sell the lands conveyed as soon as possible, and pay the vendor a stipulated sum, is not within the provision of the statute of frauds, requiring contracts not to be performed in a year to be in writing.—Worley v. Sipe, 111 Ind. 238, 12 N. E. 385.

To bring a contract within the provisions of the statute of frauds that no action shall be brought on any agreement that is not to be performed within a year from the making thereof, unless the agreement or some memorandum shall be in writing, and signed by the party to be charged, etc., it must affirmatively appear from its terms that its stipulations are not to be performed within a year after the time of making it, and it has no application to a contract, which may or may not be performed within a year.—Durham v. Hiatt, 26 N. E. 401, 127 Ind. 514.

A contract whereby plaintiff is to trade defendant's lands for other lands, to manage the lands thus acquired, and to resell them and the timber thereon for a compensation of half the profits after paying defendant his advances, is not within the statute of frauds invalidating agreements not to be performed within a year (Rev. St. 1881, § 4904), as it cannot be said that the contract could not be performed in a year.—Id.

[h] (Sup. 1906)

Where plaintiff was employed by a city as city engineer for a period of one year, and there was nothing to show that plaintiff's work could not be completed within such time, the contract was not within the statute of frauds (Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6620, subd. 5), as a contract not to be performed within a year.—City of Decatur v. McKean, 167 Ind. 249, 78 N. E. 982.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, § 74.

§ 50. — Dependent on contingency.

See post, § 51.

[a] (Sup. 1859)

Where no time is fixed for the performance of a contract or where it is to be performed by a certain day, the right to perform it sooner not being precluded, or where the performance depends on a contingency which may or may not happen within the year, the contract is not within the statute of frauds (Rev. St. 1843, p. 589); but, where a contract is not to be performed within a year or where it cannot be performed within the year according to the intent and understanding of the parties as evidenced by the contract, it is within the statute.—Wilson v. Ray, 13 Ind. 1.

[b] (Sup. 1865)

In a suit against an executor upon a parol agreement of his testator to leave a certain sum by will to the plaintiff, if he continued to work for the testator until his death, it was held that the agreement was not within the statute of frauds, as it had been performed by the plaintiff, and because it might have been performed within a year.—Bell v. Hewitt's Ex'r, 24 Ind. 290.

[c] In an action on a subscription the complaint set out the contract, which was as follows: "Ten days after the completion of the I. & St. L. Railroad from I. H. county, and the running of a train of cars thereon, I promise to pay to the order of said railroad company, at the Bank of D., the sum of one hundred dollars, without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisement laws. The consideration of this note is the construction of said road as aforesaid within one-half mile of the town of D., and the promise and agreement of said company that by means of said road and its connections the company will run trains through from I. within two years from the 1st day of January, 1869,"—dated November 25, 1868, and signed by the defendant, and averred performance within the time and in the manner mentioned. Held, that the contract, being capable of performance within one year, was not within the statute of frauds.—(Sup. 1871) Straghan v. Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co., 38 Ind. 185; Curtis v. Same, Id. 222; Wilson v. Same, Id. 227; Emmons v. Same, Id. 247; King v. Same, Id. 266; Scarce v. Same, Id. 271; Weaver v. Same, Id. 277; Nichols v. Same, Id. 279; Osborn v. Same, Id. 294; Blake v. Same, Id. 323; Keeney v. Same, Id. 348; Gregg v. Same, Id. 372; Hunt v. Same, Id. 383; Smith v. Same, Id. 389; Welsham v. Same, Id.; Nave v. Same, Id. 443; (1872) Newman v. Same, 39 Ind. 153.

A contract which by its terms is to be performed at the death of one of the parties is not within the provision of the statute of frauds which requires contracts not to be performed within a year from the making thereof to be in writing.—Frost v. Tarr, 53 Ind. 390.

[e] (Sup. 1877)

An agreement between grantor of lands and grantee that the latter, in consideration of the conveyance, shall support the former for life, is not within the statute of frauds, but may be oral.—Harper v. Harper, 57 Ind. 547.

[f] (Sup. 1896)

An agreement not to engage in a rival business in a certain locality so long as the other party remains in such business is not within the statute of frauds.—O'Neal v. Hines, 145 Ind. 32, 43 N. E. 946.

[g] (App. 1905)

Where plaintiff, in consideration of wages, nurse hire, and doctor's bills resulting from present disability, and employment when recovered, released defendant from liability for an injury to plaintiff on a specified date, such contract was not within the statute of frauds (Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6629, subd. 5), since it might have terminated within a year through plaintiff's death.—American Quarries Co. v. Lay, 73 N. E. 608, 37 Ind. App. 386.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, §§ 75-77.

§ 51. Possibility of discharge or other termination without performance.

[a] (Sup. 1855)

An agreement to pay for the support of a child, both past and future, in consideration of a promise to continue the child's nurture, is not within the statute of frauds, since the contract might be terminated within a year by the death of the child.—Wiggins v. Keizer, 6 Ind. 252.

[b] (Sup. 1859)

Where the agreement of the defendant, upon which suit is brought, is not in any event to be performed within a year, it is within the statute, although there may be other stipulations providing for contingencies that would make the plaintiff liable to the defendant within a year, and release the defendant from liability altogether.—Wilson v. Ray, 13 Ind. 1.

[c] (Sup. 1861)

An agreement by one not to sell, or assist others in selling, musical instruments, is not invalid under the statute of frauds, as being a contract not to be finished within one year, as it may be ended by the death of the contractor within that time.—Hill v. Jamieson, 16 Ind. 125, 79 Am. Dec. 414.

[d] (Sup. 1882)

An agreement by a lessor not to engage in a rival business is not within the statute of frauds.—Welz v. Rhodius, 87 Ind. 1, 44 Am. Rep. 747.

[e] (App. 1892)

A verbal contract to furnish one with steady and permanent employment is not void under the provision of the statute of frauds (Rev. St. § 4904, subd. 5) relating to agreements not to be performed within one year, as such provision does not apply to contracts for personal services, which may terminate with the death of the party.—Pennsylvania Co. v. Dolan, 6 Ind. App. 100, 32 N. E. 802, 51 Am. St. Rep. 280.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, § 78.

§ 53. Commencement of period.

[a] (App. 1899)

An oral contract of employment to render services for a year, to commence in the future, is a contract within the statute of frauds, as an agreement not to be performed within a year from the making thereof.—Board of Com'rs of Clark County v. Howell, 52 N. E. 769, 21 Ind. App. 495.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, §§ 80, 92.

See, also, note, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 738.

§ 54. Sufficiency of performance possible within year.

[a] (Sup. 1859)

Though a contract may be performed on one side within a year, yet, if it cannot on the other side, it is within the statute of frauds (Rev. St. p. 589).—Wilson v. Ray, 13 Ind. 1.

[b] (Sup. 1863)

A contract for the sale of land, where the vendor is to convey instantly, but the vendee is not to make payment for over a year, is not within the statute of frauds.—Haugh v. Blyche's Ex'rs, 20 Ind. 24.

[a] (Sup. 1857)

Where it was agreed that the husband should invest the wife's money in land for the use of her and her son, even if the agreement was verbal, it was not within the statute of frauds.—Resor v. Resor, 9 Ind. 347.

[b] (Sup. 1884)

A prescriptive title to real estate may be shown by parol.—Stretch v. Schenck, 23 Ind. 77.

[c] (Sup. 1884)

A. entered into a parol agreement with B., by which he was to erect a mill on the land of the latter, who was to convey to him an undivided half of the land, and become the owner of half of the mill; but the contract was to have no force unless B. discharged a judgment which was a lien on the land. If the judgment was not discharged, the mill was to remain the property of A. The mill was accordingly erected, but the judgment was not discharged, and the land was sold on execution; the sheriff, at the sale, stating that the mill did not belong to the owner of the land, and was personal property. The purchaser at the sheriff's sale afterwards conveyed the land to C. by a warranty deed, with a stipulation that the grantee assumed all risk of title to the mill. Held, that in an action for the conversion of a steam engine, boiler, and machinery in the mill, brought by a vendee of A. against C., evidence of the parol agreement was admissible.—Yater v. Mullen, 23 Ind. 562.

[d] (Sup. 1883)

A parol agreement, on the sale of land, that the crops growing thereon are to be reserved by the vendor as a part of the consideration, is valid. The execution of the deed is a performance of the contract by the vendor.—Heavilon v. Heavilon, 29 Ind. 509.

[e] (Sup. 1874)

Where there was a parol agreement between a mortgagor, a mortgagee, and a third person that an indemnifying mortgage of real estate, held by the mortgagee, should be changed by inserting therein a provision that such third person should also be indemnified as surety for the mortgagor, such agreement was equivalent to an agreement to execute a new mortgage, and was within the statute of frauds, and could not be enforced by such third person.—Irwin v. Hubbard, 49 Ind. 350, 19 Am. Rep. 679.

[f] (Sup. 1877)

Title to realty may be shown, in an action for unlawful detainer before a justice of the peace, by parol.—Compton v. Ivey, 59 Ind. 352.

[g] (Sup. 1879)

A parol reservation of growing crops on a sale of land is valid.—Harvey v. Million, 67 Ind. 90.

[h] (Sup. 1879)

A parol agreement between two adjoining landowners relative to the maintenance of a fence is not within the statute of frauds.—Baynes v. Chastain, 68 Ind. 376.

Where adjoining owners divide their partition fence into two parts, and each agrees to keep one of the parts in repair, the agreement thus made is not within the statute of frauds, since, being in relation to real estate, it is not within the clause applying to contracts not to be performed within one year, and, though in relation to real estate, is not for the sale of lands, and so not within the clause relating to sales of land.—Id.

[i] (Sup. 1880)

An oral contract between a husband and wife that money advanced by her for the purchase of land by him should be paid to their children did not give the wife any interest in the land, and was within the statute of frauds.—Goff v. Rogers, 71 Ind. 459.

[j] (Sup. 1881)

Though an agreement by a mortgagee to hold and sell the mortgaged land on the mortgagor conveying to him his equity of redemption therein is within the statute of frauds, his agreement to pay to the mortgagor the overplus which he might receive on the sale and after paying the mortgage debt is not within the statute.—Humphrey v. Fair, 79 Ind. 410.

[k] (Sup. 1882)

An agreement by a mortgagee that, if the mortgagor would permit a foreclosure and pay costs and attorney's fees, he would bid in the land for the full amount of the debt, held not required by the statute of frauds to be in writing.—McQuat v. Cathcart, 84 Ind. 567.

[l] (Sup. 1883)

A deed absolute in form, executed on a parol agreement that it shall be held as security for a debt, and that upon payment the grantee will reconvey, is a mortgage; and the statute of frauds cannot be pleaded in defense to an action for a reconveyance, as the legal title never passed from the grantor.—Landers v. Beck, 92 Ind. 49.

A cross-complaint in an action for the recovery of real property alleged that defendant was owner of the land in controversy, and had been in possession thereof for 15 years; that he had made valuable improvements thereon, and had paid the taxes and other assessments against the property; that plaintiff was setting up a title, and had instituted an action to recover possession; that, after defendant had purchased the real estate, his grantor became insolvent; that plaintiff recovered a judgment against the grantor; that defendant was about to institute proceedings to enjoin a sale under the judgment, when plaintiff in person and by his attorney informed defendant that he need not pay any attention to the sale; that it was not the intention of plaintiff to purchase or disturb defendant's title; that plaintiff would bid it off at a nominal sum merely to get it out of the way, inasmuch as he had to have the real estate levied on sold in the inverse order from that in which the debtor had conveyed it; that for this reason only had defendant's property been levied on and advertised for sale; that defendant relied on the promise and permitted the estate to be sold, and did not redeem from the sale; that the premises were purchased for the nominal sum of $1, and that plaintiff knew that defendant was relying on the promise; that at the time of the sale the real estate was of the value of $6,000. Held, that the statute of frauds had no application to the cause of action alleged in the cross-complaint, the defendant not seeking to enforce a contract for the sale of real estate; the theory of the pleading being that defendant was the owner and held the legal title, and that plaintiff was asserting a claim thereto.—Detwiler v. Schultheis, 23 N. E. 709, 122 Ind. 155.

[n] (Sup. 1890)

Where land is granted for use as a road, a parol agreement reserving the right to use a stream of water flowing across the land is not void under the statute of frauds, since the right would have remained in the grantor without any agreement therefor.—Smith v. Holloway, 124 Ind. 329, 24 N. E. 886.

[o] (App. 1894)

The grantor of farm lands may reserve the growing crops by oral agreement.—Kluse v. Sparks, 10 Ind. App. 444, 36 N. E. 914, 37 N. E. 1047.

[p] (Sup. 1896)

An oral agreement to the effect that a vendor of material used in the construction of a building shall have a lien on the property is in violation of the statute of frauds.—Slack v. Collins, 42 N. E. 910, 145 Ind. 569.

[q] (App. 1896)

Plaintiff purchased land for defendant, the latter furnishing part of the purchase price, and plaintiff executing a mortgage for the balance upon defendant's oral agreement to pay the same. Afterwards the land was conveyed, in trust for defendant, to another at defendant's request. Upon foreclosure of the mortgage, plaintiff was compelled to pay the deficiency remaining after sale of the land. Held, in an action to recover the amount thereof, that defendant's promise to pay the remainder of the purchase price was not an attempt to convey an interest in land by parol.—Bedford Belt R. Co. v. Winstandley, 16 Ind. App. 143, 44 N. E. 556.

[r] (Sup. 1902)

An agreement after the foreclosure sale of mortgaged premises, between the purchaser, or his assignee, and the mortgagor, to extend the time of redemption, where no part of the redemption money is paid as a consideration therefor, though not in writing, nor supported by any consideration, except the promise of the mortgagor to pay the amount to become due and interest thereon, is not within the statute of frauds.—Turpie v. Lowe, 158 Ind. 314, 92 N. E. 484, 92 Am. St. Rep. 310.

[s] (App. 1905)

A contract between the owners that each should keep in repair a certain part of their partition fence is not within the statute of frauds.—Burck v. Davis, 73 N. E. 192, 35 Ind. App. 648.

§ 58. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1868)

A parol lease for a term of two years, with an agreement that the lessee shall have the right to renew at the end thereof, for an additional term of three years, on the same terms, by giving the lessor six months' notice in writing of his election, is within the statute of frauds, and void, although bona fide leases for a term not exceeding three years are not required by the statute to be in writing.—Schmitz v. Lauferty, 29 Ind. 400.

[b] (Sup. 1869)

A parol lease of lands for the term of 1 year, to commence 30 days after the making of the contract, is valid within the statute of frauds; and the lessee may maintain an action against the lessor to recover possession according to the terms of the lease.—Huffman v. Starks, 31 Ind. 474.

[c] (Supp. 1870)

The right to use for the purpose of worship a church edifice, when not occupied by the church to which it belongs, is an "interest" in real estate; and a contract therefor, to be valid under the statute of frauds, must be in writing, signed by the party to be charged.—Brumfield v. Carson, 33 Ind. 94, 5 Am. Rep. 184.

[d] (App. 1909)

Though Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7462, declares that a lease for more than three years must be in writing, and section 8054 that general tenancies are from year to year, where a lessee, at the expiration of his term, under a lease giving him an option to extend it for seven years, verbally notified the lessor of his intention to exercise the option reserved, and such notice was accepted, and the lessee continued in possession, paying rent as agreed, he was entitled to the full extended term, and he did not become a tenant from year to year.—Remm v. Landon, 43 Ind. App. 91, 86 N. E. 973.

Part performance, see post, § 129.

[a] (Supp. 1867)

A promise by a vendor to a purchaser of land to open a street adjacent, upon his own land, to the public, is a promise affecting an interest in real estate, viz. an easement, and, if oral, is void under the statute of frauds (1 Gav. & H. St. p. 348, § 1).—Richter v. Irwin, 28 Ind. 26.

[b] (Supp. 1882)

A perpetual right of way over land of another is an interest in real estate within the meaning of the statute of frauds.—Simons v. Morehouse, 88 Ind. 301.

[c] (Supp. 1887)

A right of way is an interest in lands, and a grant thereof by parol is void, under the statute of frauds.—Robinson v. Thrailkill, 110 Ind. 117, 10 N. E. 647.

[d] (Supp. 1896)

An executed parol license may become an easement upon the land of another.—Joseph v. Wild, 45 N. E. 467, 146 Ind. 249.

[e] (App. 1908)

A railroad right of way over land is an interest in real property which may be transferred only by an instrument in writing.—Polk v. Givens, 90 N. E. 19.

§ 63. — In general.

Requisites and sufficiency of writing, see post, §§ 102, 106.

[a] (Supp. 1858)

Where a party has entered upon and improved lands under a verbal contract of sale, and afterwards verbally contracts with his vendor to deliver back possession and improvements for a consideration, a suit may be maintained on the second contract by the vendee; it not being a contract for the "sale of lands." If it is to be regarded as a sale of goods, part of the consideration being a horse, which was delivered by the vendor, he could maintain an action on the contract, and, as the remedy must be mutual, the vendee can also.—Sutton v. Sears, 10 Ind. 223.

[b] (Supp. 1868)

A tenant from year to year by parol may by parol convey or surrender his right of possession.—Ross v. Schneider, 30 Ind. 423.

[c] (Supp. 1877)

An agreement between two persons, each owning real property and about to intermarry, that upon the death of either the survivor will not claim any of the property of the other, is within that provision of the statute of frauds which requires a contract for the transfer of real property to be in writing.—Rainbolt v. East, 56 Ind. 538, 26 Am. Rep. 40.

[d] (Supp. 1878)

A postnuptial agreement for the acceptance by a wife of a sum of money in lieu of her right in the husband's lands must be in writing, signed by her, to bind her. 1 Rev. St. 1876, p. 414.—Randles v. Randles, 63 Ind. 93.

[e] (Supp. 1883)

An agreement by a widow to renounce her interest in the land of her late husband will not bind her, if it is not in writing and without consideration, and there are no facts in the case which create an estoppel.—Switzer v. Hawk, 89 Ind. 73.

[f] (Supp. 1883)

Rev. St. 1881, § 2500, provides that when an estate in lands is conveyed to a person and his intended wife, or to such intended wife alone, or to any person in trust for her, for the purpose of creating a jointure for the intended wife, or when, for the same purpose, a pecuniary provision shall be made for her benefit, the same shall be a bar to the right or claim of such wife in land of her husband, provided she, at the time the jointure was created, signified in writing, indorsed on or attached to the deed creating it, her assent to receive it in lieu of all right or claim in his lands. Section 2019 provides that conveyances of land or any interest therein shall be by deed in writing, except leases for a term not exceeding three years. Held, that a written antenuptial agreement which amounts to a deed creating a jointure, within the meaning of section 2500, made in good faith on a valuable consideration, cannot be rescinded by parol after the marriage.—Craig v. Craig, 90 Ind. 215.

[g] (Sup. 1884)

In an action on a note and mortgage, the answer alleged that while the payee was still the holder of the note and mortgage a suit was brought on one of the notes executed and secured by the mortgage and assigned to K., and that a decree of foreclosure was rendered and a sale made, and that, after the sale, the payee agreed verbally that, if there was no redemption, he would treat the property and money previously paid to him as a full satisfaction of his claim and would release the makers from liability on any of the notes. Held, that the contract was not within the statute of frauds.—Shade v. Creviston, 93 Ind. 591.

[h] (Sup. 1884)

The agreement of a purchaser at an executor's or administrator's sale to pay the liens against the property is enforceable, though not in writing.—State ex rel. Sparrow v. Kelso, 94 Ind. 587.

[i] (App. 1896)

In an action against an assignee of a natural gas and oil lease, it is not necessary for the lessor to plead an assumption of the lease by the assignee, nor is such transaction within the statute of frauds.—Edmonds v. Mounsey, 44 N. E. 196, 15 Ind. App. 309.

[j] (App. 1906)

The written lease of an incorporeal hereditament can only be surrendered by a written instrument.—Heller v. Dailey, 34 Ind. App. 424, 70 N. E. 821.

A parol agreement between a lessor and lessee to substitute an assignee of the lessee and to bind the assignee to the terms of the lease and relieve the lessee is void as against the statute of frauds; it being for an interest in land and not for three years or less.—Id.

[k] (App. 1906)

Where an oil and gas lease granted and guaranteed to the lessee and his assigns all the oil and gas underlying 20 acres of land, such lease constituted a conveyance of real estate, so that the lessee's liability could only be released by a writing duly acknowledged, as required by Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 3335, and not by parol.—Ramage v. Wilson, 77 N. E. 368, 37 Ind. App. 532.

Where the original transaction between the mortgagor and the mortgagee was not in the form of a mortgage, but an absolute deed with a collateral written agreement to reconvey upon the payment of the money at a specified time, the equity of redemption may be released by parol or extinguished by such transaction between the parties as would render it inequitable that the mortgagor should be permitted to redeem, notwithstanding the statute of frauds.—Ferguson v. Boyd, 169 Ind. 537, 81 N. E. 71, 82 N. E. 1064.

The surrender of the equity of redemption of a grantor in a deed absolute on its face but accompanied by a written contract to reconvey on payment of money loaned is not within the statute of frauds; a conveyance or foreclosure being unnecessary to extinguish the grantor's title.—Id.

§ 65. — Redelivery, destruction, or alteration of deed.

[a] (Sup. 1855)

The statute of frauds will not permit a grantee of lands, who has voluntarily and without fraud or mistake destroyed the instrument of conveyance, to resort to parol evidence of the contents of the instrument destroyed in support of his title.—Speer v. Speer, 7 Ind. 178, 63 Am. Dec. 418.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 223.

§ 68. — Partition.

Parol partition in general, see PARTITION, § 5.

[a] (Sup. 1885)

The purpose of a testator, as expressed in his will, was to make provision for his widow for her lifetime, and then to secure an equal division of the property among his sons at her death. The widow surrendered her right to the personal estate to the sons under an oral agreement that the same should be treated as an advancement, and the shares equalized in the final partition of the real estate. The agreement was so far executed as that the mother had surrendered and the sons received the personal property in accordance therewith. Held, in an action to review the judgment of partition by the assignee of one of the sons, that the purpose of the testator had been substantially accomplished by such agreement and proceedings, and that the assignee could not, after the agreement had been so far executed, invoke the statute of frauds to defeat the partition.—Foltz v. Wert, 103 Ind. 404, 2 N. E. 950.

[b] (Sup. 1889)

A parol agreement for exchange of parts of lots, in performance of which the parties have taken possession, agreed upon dividing lines, and erected a division fence, and one party has made street improvements in front of the land received by him in exchange, is a valid parol partition, and not within the statute of frauds.—Tate v. Foshee, 117 Ind. 322, 20 N. E. 241.

§ 69. — Exchange.

See post, § 74.

[a] (App. 1903)

Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6629, prohibiting the enforcement of parol contracts for the sale of real estate, applies with equal force to contracts for the exchange of real estate.—McCoy v. McCoy, 69 N. E. 193, 32 Ind. App. 38, 102 Am. St. Rep. 223.

[b] (App. 1909)

An agreement between the widow and children of an intestate, by which the widow was to take all of the real estate of decedent and use it for her benefit during her life, and the children were to have it share and share alike, at the death of the widow, was not an agreement for a partition by the apportionment to the owners of their shares in realty, but was an agreement for the exchange of interests in land, within the statute.—Garrick v. Garrick, 43 Ind. App. 585, 87 N. E. 696, 88 N. E. 104.

§ 70. — Establishment of boundary.

Location of boundaries of leased land and possession thereof as part performance, see post, § 129.

[a] (Sup. 1860)

Where adjoining landed proprietors agree by parol, upon a valuable consideration, on a boundary between them different from the true boundary, and the agreement is so far performed as to be taken out of the statute of frauds, it is valid, and may be enforced in a court of equity.—Meyers v. Johnson, 15 Ind. 261.

[b] (App. 1909)

An oral agreement between adjoining land-owners as to the boundary line, in effect a transfer of land from one party to the other, is within the statute (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7462).—Fuelling v. Fuesse, 43 Ind. App. 441, 87 N. E. 700.

[a] A parol promise to convey land is void by the statute of frauds.—(Sup. 1839) McClure v. McCormick, 5 Blackf. 129; (1867) Thompson v. Elliott, 28 Ind. 55.

[b] The statute of frauds will apply to a verbal contract for the sale of land, unless there is part performance or some other matter to prevent.—(Sup. 1851) Lester v. Bartlett, 2 Ind. 628; (1862) Junction R. Co. v. Harpold, 19 Ind. 347.

[c] (App. 1892)

A complaint which counted on a parol contract by which, in consideration of care and support by plaintiff during life, a decedent agreed to convey a certain amount of land of a specified value, is bad on demurrer; such contract being within Rev. St. 1881, § 4904, requiring all contracts for the sale of land to be in writing.—Hersham v. Pascal, 4 Ind. App. 330, 30 N. E. 932.

§ 72. — Nature of property.

Crops to be grown, see post, § 83.

[a] Growing crops, raised annually by labor, are the subject of sale as personal property before maturity; and such sale does not necessarily involve an interest in the realty, requiring a written agreement.—(Sup. 1848) Northern v. State ex rel. Lathrop, 1 Ind. 113, Smith, 71; (1853) Bricker v. Hughes, 4 Ind. 146; (1858) Sherry v. Picken, 10 Ind. 375.

[b] (Sup. 1874)

A parol agreement for the sale of standing trees passes no title to, nor vests any right in, the vendee, if the vendor, before such trees are severed, revokes the license which the agreement creates to enter and remove the trees.—Owens v. Lewis, 46 Ind. 488, 15 Am. Rep. 295.

[c] A contract conveying standing timber is a contract concerning realty, which must be in writing.—(Sup. 1874) Owens v. Lewis, 46 Ind. 488, 15 Am. Rep. 295; (1882) Cool v. Peters Box & Lumber Co., 87 Ind. 531; (1889) Hosstetter v. Auman, 20 N. E. 506, 119 Ind. 7.

[d] (Sup. 1881)

A tree growing permanently on land constitutes a part thereof, and a parol contract for the sale of such tree passes no title to it which can be enforced. Such a contract may amount to a license to enter upon the land and cut down and remove the tree; but the license thereby granted is one which may be revoked at any time before the tree is cut down.—Armstrong v. Lawson, 73 Ind. 498.

[e] (Sup. 1884)

A parol sale of a building not permanently annexed to the land, with right of removal, is not within the statute of frauds.—Rogers v. Cox, 96 Ind. 157, 49 Am. Rep. 152.

§ 73. — Interest in or concerning property.

[a] (App. 1900)

A certificate of sale of real estate on foreclosure represents an interest in land, and a contract to transfer it is within the statute of frauds, and must be in writing.—Cox v. Roberts, 57 N. E. 937, 25 Ind. App. 252.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, §§ 119-121.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 230.

§ 74. — Nature of contract in general.

See, ante, §§ 56, 63, 65, 68-70.

Certain real estate belonging to A. was sold at a sheriff's sale, on a judgment of foreclosure against A. and wife. B. and C. purchased the land at the sale, and received a certificate of sale from the sheriff. About the time of the sale A. entered the military service of the United States, and while he was absent in such service D. purchased the land from B. and C., on a parol agreement to pay the sum of $400 to them, take their assignment of the certificate of sale, sell the land, and out of the proceeds of the sale to retain a debt of about $40 due him from A., and to pay the balance to the wife of A. B. and C. assigned the certificate to D. in consideration of his said undertaking, and he procured a sheriff's deed for the land, and afterwards sold it for $2,400, and failed and refused to pay any portion of it to A.'s wife. Held, that the promise of D. to B. and C. in favor of the wife of A. was not within the statute of frauds.—Gwaltney v. Wheeler, 26 Ind. 415.

[b] (Sup. 1867)

Defendant sold to plaintiff a parcel of land, the purchase price being payable in four annual installments and secured by mortgage on the land. Plaintiff was unable to pay the first installment when it became due, and reconveyed the land to defendant, upon a parol agreement that defendant would hold such land for plaintiff until a certain day, and, if the first installment was then paid, he would reconvey the land to plaintiff upon the terms of the first contract. Held, that the agreement for a resale was void, under the statute of frauds, not being in writing.—Thompson v. Elliott, 28 Ind. 55.

[c] (Sup. 1871)

A husband cannot maintain an action upon a verbal contract to convey land as compensation for services rendered by his wife, in supporting and caring for the owner for the value of the land upon failure to convey.—Baxter v. Kitch, 37 Ind. 554.

[d] (Sup. 1873)

An action to recover from defendant money received by him on a sale of plaintiff's land, in which he acted as plaintiff's agent, is not an action on a sale of land, and the complaint therein need not allege writing.—Ferguson v. Ramsey, 41 Ind. 511.

[e] (Sup. 1873)

A parol agreement between A. and B., by the terms of which B. is to exchange certain land owned by him for certain other land owned by C., and convey the latter to Z. for a stipulated price, is within the statute of frauds.—Sands v. Thompson, 43 Ind. 18.

[f] (Sup. 1876)

Plaintiff informed defendant that, in order to procure means to purchase certain land of defendant, he would be compelled to dispose of his own at a certain sacrifice. Defendant verbally agreed with plaintiff that, if the latter would so dispose of his land and apply the proceeds to purchasing defendant's, he, on a certain day, for a fixed price, would sell and convey his land to plaintiff. Held, that B.'s agreement to convey was within the statute of frauds, and that an action could not be maintained on it for a breach.—Parker v. Heaton, 55 Ind. 1.

[a] (Sup. 1880)

Defendant having a decree of foreclosure against land of plaintiff, it was agreed, in order to avoid a sale under decree, that plaintiff should convey the land to defendant; that defendant should pay plaintiff a sum of money and allow him to remain in possession for a certain length of time; and, if plaintiff could within that time find a purchaser at not less than the amount of the judgment, with interest, that defendant should convey to him and pay the surplus money to plaintiff. In an action to recover the surplus money, plaintiff having conveyed to defendant, and the latter to a purchaser found by the former, held, that the contract was not within the statute of frauds.—Reyman v. Mosher, 71 Ind. 596.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

After the mortgagee purchased at a sale under his mortgage, the mortgagor not being entitled to time for redemption, it was agreed between the parties to the mortgage and a third party that the latter should redeem the property for the mortgagor; and in pursuance of the agreement he paid the mortgagee the amount due under the mortgage, and took a deed to the property, agreeing to convey to the mortgagor on payment of the amount expended by him. Held, that the agreement was within the statute of frauds.—Rucker v. Steelman, 73 Ind. 396.

[i] (Sup. 1881)

A. and B., the holders of notes secured by mortgage on a mill, agreed by parol that A. should purchase the mill at foreclosure sale and run it; that, when the earnings of the mill had been sufficient to pay A.'s note and the incidental expenses, then A. and B. should each own one undivided half of the mill, or if, before the earnings were so sufficient, B. should find a purchaser who would pay A., A. should deliver up the mill. Held, that this was not a contract for a future sale, void under the statute of frauds, but that it created, after A.'s purchase, a trust in A.—Hunt v. Elliott, 80 Ind. 245, 41 Am. Rep. 794.

[j] (Sup. 1882)

Where land was to be conveyed by absolute deed, and the grantee was to execute an agreement for a defeasance, on his receipt of the deed he can be compelled to execute the agreement; it not being within the statute of frauds.—Chambers v. Butcher, 82 Ind. 508.

[k] (Sup. 1883)

A parol agreement by a purchaser at a sheriff's sale to give the owner six years within which to redeem, if acted upon by the owner is upon good consideration, though nothing was paid therefor by the owner, and is not within the statute of frauds.—Rector v. Shirk, 92 Ind. 31.

[l] (Sup. 1886)

An agreement made during the year for redemption from a mortgage, extending the time for redemption is not within the statute of frauds.—Cox v. Ratcliffe, 105 Ind. 374, 5 N. E. 5.

[m] (Sup. 1887)

A parol contract whereby in consideration of a wife's release of her inchoate interest in her husband's land by joining in a mortgage thereon, the mortgagee agrees to purchase the land at foreclosure sale and convey to her a certain part thereof, is within the statute of frauds.—Green v. Groves, 109 Ind. 519, 10 N. E. 401.

[n] (App. 1886)

Plaintiff purchased land for defendant, the latter furnishing part of the purchase price, and plaintiff executing a mortgage for the balance upon defendant's oral agreement to pay the same. Afterwards the land was conveyed in trust for defendant to another at defendant's request. Upon foreclosure of the mortgage, plaintiff was compelled to pay the deficiency remaining after sale of the land. Held, in an action to recover the amount thereof, that defendant's promise to pay the remainder of the purchase price was not an attempt to convey an interest in land by parol.—Bedford Belt R. Co. v. Winstandley, 44 N. E. 556, 16 Ind. App. 143.

[o] (Sup. 1897)

Where land is conveyed in consideration of an agreement to convey other real estate and the grantor is not put in possession, the agreement is within the statute of frauds, and is incapable of being enforced or of supporting an action for damages for its breach.—Lowe v. Turpie, 44 N. E. 25, 147 Ind. 652, 37 L. R. A. 233.

[p] (App. 1897)

A parol agreement that if defendant would indorse to plaintiff the note of an insolvent, secured by mortgage, and procure a conveyance to plaintiff of the mortgaged property, plaintiff would deliver certain property to defendant, is not an agreement to convey land, within the meaning of the statute of frauds.—Boos v. Hinkle, 48 N. E. 383, 18 Ind. App. 509.

[q] (App. 1909)

A parol contract to convey land in consideration of services rendered is unenforceable under the statute of frauds.—Flowers v. Poorman, 43 Ind. App. 528, 87 N. E. 1107.

An oral agreement to devise land to one who has furnished the money for its purchase is within the statute of frauds.—Judy v. Gilbert, 77 Ind. 96, 40 Am. Rep. 289.

[c] (Sup. 1886)

A parol agreement to treat a girl as a child of the promisors and to will her their property, which is real and personal, in consideration of services to be performed by her, is within the statute of frauds.—Wallace v. Long, 105 Ind. 522, 5 N. E. 666, 55 Am. Rep. 222.

[d] (App. 1891)

An agreement whereby a niece entered the home of her uncle under promise that, if she would live with him, he would educate, clothe, and support her as his own daughter, and would make her an heir to his estate, equal to his sons, is void, as within the statute of frauds.—Nelson v. Masterton, 28 N. E. 731, 2 Ind. App. 524.

[e] (App. 1903)

A parol contract for services to be paid for by a testamentary bequest of the testator's entire estate is within the statute of frauds, and not enforceable.—Alerding v. Allison, 68 N. E. 185, 31 Ind. App. 397.

In this state a contract for the sale and delivery of goods for the price of $50 or more is within the statute of frauds, and must be in writing, unless, etc.—Smith v. Smith, 8 Blackf. 208.

[b] (Sup. 1878)

A contract for a sale of goods for a price of over $50, made by an agent of one doing business in another state with a merchant in Indiana, is void, under the statute of frauds (1 Rev. St. 1876, p. 504, § 7), where no part of the property was received by the purchaser, and no earnest was given to bind the bargain or in part payment, and no note or memorandum was made and signed by the party to be charged or his lawfully authorized agent.—*Hausman v. Manufacture and sale of articles, see ante, § 83.

[a] (Sup. 1850)

A. entered into a contract in writing to deliver to B. a certain quantity of pork at Fairhaven for certain prices, and delivered a portion of it, when a verbal agreement was made by the parties that the residue on the contract, and all A. had, be delivered at Hamilton, for a higher price, within a reasonable time. Assumpsit was brought for the failure of A. to so deliver the pork at Hamilton. There was no averment or proof of waiver by B. of his right to demand a delivery of the remainder under the written contract, or that such a waiver formed a part of the consideration of the contract on which the suit was brought, or was accepted by A. Held, that the contract was void under the statute of frauds, and that B. could not recover.—Bailey v. Epperly, 2 Ind. 85.

[b] (Sup. 1865)

An agreement by a buyer of chattels on which there is an unrecorded mortgage, with the mortgagee, to surrender the property to him upon his delivering to the buyer a note which he has given the seller for the purchase money, is not within the statute of frauds.—Clark v. Duffey, 24 Ind. 271.

[c] (Sup. 1872)

A sale by public auction is within the statute of frauds.—Norris v. Blair, 39 Ind. 90, 10 Am. Rep. 135.

[d] (Sup. 1874)

An agreement by one person that, if another will assist him in getting a lot of hogs to market, he shall receive as his compensation a certain share of the profits, is not within the statute of frauds.—Kelsey v. Henry, 48 Ind. 37.

[e] (Sup. 1886)

A municipal corporation may be bound by a parol contract made by its authorized officers or agents, in proper case; but a parol contract made by such corporation for the purchase of a fire engine of the value of more than $50 is invalid, under the statute of frauds, unless it appears that there has been part payment or a delivery, or something has been given in earnest to bind the bargain, so as to bring it within one of the exceptions to the statute.—Over v. City of Greenfield, 107 Ind. 231, 5 N. E. 872.

[f] (Sup. 1888)

A piano was sold on credit, under an agreement that it might be fully tested, and, if unsatisfactory, exchanged for another. Afterwards this agreement was modified by an oral agreement to rescind the sale absolutely, and refund the purchase money already paid. Held that, since the contract of sale had never been completed, the agreement to rescind was not a new and independent contract, and having been fully performed by the purchaser, was not within the statute.—Wulschner v. Ward, 115 Ind. 219, 17 N. E. 273.

Where an unconditional sale has been entirely consummated, so that nothing further remains to be done, a contract for its rescission stands upon the footing of a new and independent contract, and hence is not a binding contract when it falls within the statute of frauds, that is to say, when such a contract is required to be in writing and is not; but where the sale has some condition or contingent agreement connected with it, or some material thing remains to be done before the transaction is complete, an oral agreement for its rescission is binding, provided the agreement is clear and distinct, and provided, further, that the party seeking a rescission promptly complies with the agreement on his part.—Id.

[g] (App. 1899)

A complaint in a suit brought to recover for certain merchandise alleged to have been sold by plaintiff to defendants at a price exceeding $50, based upon a written proposal executed by defendants to a third person, is bad, such proposal or contract of sale being within the statute of frauds (Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 6636), providing that no contract for the sale of goods for the price of $50 or more shall be valid unless the purchaser shall receive part of such property or shall give something in earnest to bind the bargain or in part payment, or unless some note or memorandum in writing of the bargain be made and signed by the party to be charged thereby or by some person thereunto by him lawfully authorized.—Sprinkle v. Trulove, 54 N. E. 461, 22 Ind. App. 577.

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, §§ 154-161.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 240, 241; note, 14 L. R. A. 230.

§ 85. Nature and amount of price.

See ante, § 81.

[a] (Sup. 1853)

A parol contract for the sale of a colt for less than $50 is valid, without writing, delivery, or earnest.—Henline v. Hall, 4 Ind. 189.

[b] (Sup. 1856)

A verbal contract to sell and deliver all the broom corn raised in a certain season on 25 acres of land at $60 a ton, delivery to be made at the rate of one ton every two weeks, is within the statute as to the value of the goods.—Bowman v. Conn, 8 Ind. 58.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

A verbal agreement to purchase all the mules which may be bred from a certain jack during a certain season at $46 each is within the statute, and cannot be enforced, unless the amount claimed is shown to be less than $50.—Carpenter v. Galloway, 73 Ind. 418.

[d] (Sup. 1885)

Rev. St. 1881, § 4910, declaring contracts involving $50 or more to be void in certain cases, has reference to the sale of goods the price of which amounts to $50 or more.—Hinkle v. Fisher, 3 N. E. 624, 104 Ind. 84.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, § 141.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 238.

(B) ACCEPTANCE OF PART OF GOODS.

§ 89. Acceptance in general.

[a] (App. 1908)

Where the buyer of goods canceled the order before shipment, and refused them on shipment, and notified the seller that the goods were in the freighthouse at his risk, and awaiting his order, there was no acceptance within section 7 of the statute of frauds (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7469) invalidating contracts for the sale of goods for the price of $50 or more, unless the purchaser shall accept and receive a part thereof.—Porter v. Patterson, 42 Ind. App. 404, 85 N. E. 797.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, §§ 165-173.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 247-249; note, 70 L. R. A. 321.

§ 90. Delivery and receipt.

Necessity of pleading delivery or receipt, see post, § 148.

[a] (Sup. 1850)

The statute of frauds does not require a delivery of goods sold where the contract is in writing, or where the purchase money, or part of it, is paid.—Pierce v. Gibson, 2 Ind. 408.

[b] (Sup. 1860)

It seems that a contract to buy, cut, and carry away, at the purchaser's convenience, standing timber, amounts to a completed sale when the trees are cut and marked.—Wright v. Schneider, 14 Ind. 327.

[c] (Sup. 1871)

Where one who has ordered a tombstone by parol approves the work and materials, and has it placed in his possession, there is sufficient evidence of delivery and acceptance to take the case out of the statute of frauds.—Barkalow v. Pfeiffer, 38 Ind. 214.

[d] (Sup. 1878)

Evidence of a delivery to a carrier, without the knowledge of the buyer, of part of a lot of goods sold merely verbally, the whole lot being for the price of $50 or more, does not show a delivery or acceptance within 1 Rev. St. p. 504, § 7.—Hausman v. Nye, 62 Ind. 485, 30 Am. Rep. 199; Keiwert v. Meyer, 62 Ind. 587, 30 Am. Rep. 206.

[e] (Sup. 1873)

In a suit in Indiana by a resident of Wisconsin for liquors sold and delivered to a resident of Iowa, pursuant to a verbal order given in Iowa, the answer in which avers that the sale was made in violation of the Iowa statute prohibiting sales of such liquors, and making a copy of the statute a part of the answer, a reply that plaintiff had avoided the effect of such statute and also of the Iowa statute of frauds by delivering the liquors in Wisconsin for transportation to a railroad company designated by the parties at the time of the contract of sale, is insufficient.—Keiwert v. Meyer, 62 Ind. 557, 30 Am. Rep. 206.

[f] (Sup. 1884)

Where an agent of the seller was invoicing certain goods, and the purchaser said he thought he would take them at a certain amount, to which the seller, who was standing by, assented, held, that there was no delivery under the statute of frauds.—Dehority v. Paxson, 97 Ind. 253.

[g] (Sup. 1890)

The owner of certain mares, by an oral agreement, sold a half interest therein to defendant, payment to be made on or before four years. It was further agreed that defendant should have possession and care of all the mares from the time of the agreement; that they should be kept for four years, for breeding purposes only, at the joint expense of the parties, and should not be worked or sold within that time except by consent. At the end of the four years their interests were to be equal. Held, that the sale and delivery of the mares was not within the statute of frauds, as it was fully executed by the vendor.—Lowman v. Sheets, 124 Ind. 416, 24 N. E. 351, 7 L. R. A. 784.

A parol contract for the sale of a one-half interest in personal property for an agreed price, the possession of which is delivered to the buyer, is not within the statute of frauds.—Id.

[h] (App. 1885)

Where one orally contracting to buy goods, on being told by the seller to take them, directs a third person to do so, the latter, upon doing so, is not liable for their value to the seller, his receipt of the goods having the effect of taking the contract of sale out of the statute of frauds.—Moore v. Hays, 12 Ind. App. 476, 40 N. E. 638.

[i] (App. 1896)

Where plaintiff contracted with defendant for the purchase of a car load of wheat, and defendant, stating that he had a car of wheat at a railroad station several miles distant, agreed to have the same shipped at once to plaintiff, and to send him the bill of lading, the agreement to ship, being executory, did not constitute delivery, within the statute of frauds.—Galbraith v. Holmes, 15 Ind. App. 34, 43 N. E. 575.

[j] (App. 1899)

Averments to the effect that purchasers of a machine inspected it upon arrival, and said they would accept it if the seller would procure a new axle for the truck, which he did, and that thereupon they assisted in setting up the machine, but refused to accept it when the seller turned it over to them, do not show such a receipt and acceptance as will take a contract, void under the statute of frauds, out of the statute.—Sprankle v. Trulove, 54 N. E. 461, 22 Ind. App. 577.

[k] (App. 1903)

The statute of frauds (Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6035) does not require a delivery of goods when the contract of sale is in writing.—Warner v. Warner, 66 N. E. 760, 30 Ind. App. 578.

(C) GIVING EARNEST OR PART PAYMENT.

Necessity of pleading earnest or part payment, see post, § 148.

§ 94. Earnest.

[a] (Sup. 1858)

Emblements are personal property, and may be sold by parol contract; earnest being paid where the price reaches an amount within the statute of frauds.—Sherry v. Picken, 10 Ind. 375.

[b] (Sup. 1868)

The parties to a contract for the sale of goods to be delivered at a future time, the price of which was more than $50, each delivered to the agent of both a check payable to said agent as a forfeiture, the money, on failure of either party, to be paid over by the agent to the other. Held, that nothing was given in earnest to bind the bargain, or in part payment for the goods.—Noakes v. Morey, 30 Ind. 103.

[c] (Sup. 1885)

A contract for the purchase of a certain number of bushels of corn at a certain price, payable on delivery, the purchaser, as part of the consideration, to furnish bags in which to put the corn, when shelled, which he does to the value of $100, is within the statute. The delivery of the bags is neither earnest nor part payment.—Hudnut v. Weir, 100 Ind. 501.

[d] (Sup. 1888)

A complaint by the seller against the purchaser, for damages sustained from the refusal to accept corn sold and delivered, alleging that, as part of the consideration and price, defendant agreed to and did furnish plaintiff with the use of sacks to deliver the corn, that the use of the sacks was part payment for the corn, and was worth a named sum, and that without such use the price of the corn would have been more, states a contract not within the statute, as the use of the sacks, if so agreed, was a sufficient payment or earnest to bind the bargain.—Weir v. Hudnut, 115 Ind. 525, 18 N. E. 24.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, § 182.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 251.

§ 95. Part payment.

[a] (Sup. 1867)

Where an agreement was entered into by A. to deliver certain merchandise, the place and time of delivery and the price fixed, and he received a part of the contract price, and agreed to be present on the following day to receive a further sum and reduce the agreement to writing but failed to be present, and refused to perform his agreement, and the other party was present and ready, it was held that such agreement was a completed one, without being reduced to writing, and the part payment took the case out of the statute of frauds.—White v. Allen, 9 Ind. 561.

[b] (Sup. 1879)

In an action upon a parol contract for the sale of hogs at a price of over $50, the giving of a note, not governed by the law merchant, for a part of the purchase money, did not take the case out of the statute of frauds (1 Rev. St. 1876, p. 504, § 7).—Krohn v. Bantz, 68 Ind. 277.

[c] (Sup. 1883)

An oral agreement to exchange a colt for a mare, accompanied by a delivery of the colt, to become the recipient's property on the approval of a third person, is not within the statute of frauds.—Kuhns v. Gates, 92 Ind. 66.

[d] (App. 1896)

Where plaintiff orally contracted to buy a car load of wheat from defendant, and agreed, as payment, to credit an account due from defendant, and to send him goods to make up the balance, the agreement as to credit to be allowed on defendant's account was not such a partial payment as would take the transaction out of the statute of frauds, there being no receipt or actual credit given at the time.—Galbraith v. Holmes, 15 Ind. App. 34, 43 N. E. 575.

[e] (App. 1908)

An acceptance of lumber by a buyer pursuant to a parol contract of purchase and a payment thereon amount to such performance of the contract as will take it out of the statute of frauds.—Fletcher v. Southern, 41 Ind. App. 550, 84 N. E. 526.

§ 99. — Nature and form of instrument.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

The conditions on which a deed is placed in the hands of a depository as an escrow may be proved by parol.—Freeland v. Charnley, 80 Ind. 132.

[b] Contracts which are required to be in writing must be wholly in writing.—(Sup. 1881) Pulse v. Miller, 81 Ind. 190; (1895) Carekaddon v. City of South Bend, 39 N. E. 667, 41 N. E. 1, 141 Ind. 596.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 253-257.

§ 100. — Contents of instrument.

[a] (Sup. 1886)

A lease which does not ascertain the demised premises is insufficient to take the contract out of the statute of frauds.—Dingman v. Kelly, 7 Ind. 717.

[b] (Sup. 1867)

The description of the premises demised, in a lease required by the statute to be in writing, cannot be supplied by parol evidence; but an ambiguity may be explained, and the premises identified.—Guy v. Barnes, 29 Ind. 103.

[c] (App. 1906)

A contract between plaintiffs and defendant for the purchase of land, they to furnish the purchase money and take title in certain proportions, is in writing, within the statute of frauds, though when it came to taking deed title was taken in defendant's name under a parol agreement that he should hold it as security for the part of their purchase money which he loaned to them.—Holliday v. Perry, 38 Ind. App. 588, 78 N. E. 877.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, § 189.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 268-270.

§ 102. — Signature by agent.[a] (App. 1906)

Where a lessee under an oil and gas lease had a vested interest in the land for the purposes authorized by the lease, which contained no provision specifying the manner of its termination or cancellation in whole or in part, a release of the lease purporting to be the act of an agent of the owner thereof was ineffective unless the agent had written authority to execute the same, under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, §§ 3336, 3337, providing that no conveyance of lands by attorney shall be good unless the attorney shall have been empowered by an instrument in writing, subscribed, sealed, and acknowledged by his principal in like manner as a conveyance is required to be, and duly recorded, etc.—Ramage v. Wilson, 77 N. E. 368, 37 Ind. App. 532.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, § 191.

§ 103. Nature and form of memorandum in general.

Letters in connection with other writings, see post, § 109.

[a] (Sup. 1841)

A receipt for the purchase money of real estate may constitute a sufficient agreement under the statute of frauds, provided it show on its face, or by reference to some other instrument, every material part of a valid contract on the subject, but not otherwise.—Barickman v. Kuykendall, 6 Blackf. 21.

[b] (Sup. 1846)

Sales of land on execution are also within the statute of frauds, and the sheriff's return of the execution, stating fully the terms of the contract, if made immediately on striking off the property, will bind the purchaser under the statute; but a return subsequently made will not have that effect.—Hunt v. Gregg, 8 Blackf. 105.

[c] (Sup. 1876)

The testimony of a sheriff that his return on an execution was made "immediately after" the sale thereunder does not render such return sufficient to take the sale out of the statute of frauds.—Gossard v. Ferguson, 54 Ind. 519.

[d] (Sup. 1879)

A memorandum written on a bill head of defendant, and, by an averred mistake, omitting the word "sold" before his name, and set up in his answer and offer of set-off, denying delivery, etc., is not a "note or memorandum in writing of the bargain," within the statute of frauds (1 Rev. St. p. 504, § 7).—Lee v. Hills, 66 Ind. 474.

[e] (Sup. 1881)

The sheriff's return of a sale of land under a mortgage foreclosure, bearing date of the day of the sale, is sufficient memorandum in writing to take the sale out of the statute of frauds.—Jones v. Kokomo Bldg. Ass'n, 77 Ind. 340.

[f] (Sup. 1885)

Under a special finding that a sheriff made a certificate at a sale on execution, it will be presumed to have been a sufficient memorandum within the statute of frauds.—Elston v. Castor, 101 Ind. 426, 51 Am. Rep. 754.

[g] (Sup. 1888)

A contract to dispose of property by will is sufficient, under the statute of frauds, when it can be extracted from letters written by the parties in the course of the negotiations.—Roehl v. Haumesser, 114 Ind. 311, 15 N. E. 345.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 258-270; note, 22 L. R. A. 426.

§ 106. — In general.[a] (Sup. 1855)

A complaint against E.'s executor alleged that E., in his lifetime, in consideration of the rescinding a sale of certain real estate sold by him to B., C., and D., was indebted to them, severally, to A. $200, B. $200, and C. $100, according to the effect of a certain writing, as follows: "E. agrees to pay what he thinks right in case of a quit-off, to B. and C. $200 each, and to D. $100," etc., and that the sums were due and unpaid. The writing was not signed, but the plaintiffs showed that it was in E.'s handwriting, and offered to show by a witness that testator had said in conversation that he owed B., C., and D., $500. Held, that the evidence was insufficient to prove a rescission of the sale, so as to render the unsigned agreement binding on the decedent.—Coburn v. Hall, 7 Ind. 291.

[b] (Sup. 1868)

The following was held not to be a sufficient memorandum of sale of lands to take the case out of the statute of frauds, because it contained no promise to convey: "Received of L. Underwood $300 cash, on payment on house."—Patterson v. Underwood, 29 Ind. 607.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

Where A. orally guarantied the debt of another, and subsequently wrote to the party creditor, "Give John a little more time, and I will see that you get your money," the writing was sufficient, within the statute of frauds, to render

A. liable as guarantor.—Wills v. Ross, 77 Ind. 1, 40 Am. Rep. 279.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, §§ 193, 210, 211.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 258.

§ 108. — Statement of consideration.

[a] (Sup. 1844)

The presence of a seal is sufficient recital of consideration to satisfy the statute of frauds.—Gregory v. Logan, 7 Blackf. 112.

[b] (Sup. 1867)

The statute of frauds does not require that a written undertaking to pay the debt of another should state the consideration of the promise.—Hiatt v. Hiatt, 28 Ind. 53.

[c] (Sup. 1906)

A complaint for damages for breach of contract to convey land alleged a contract by which plaintiff offered to exchange his stock of groceries, etc., to be invoiced at cost price for land owned by defendant, but the contract concluded, "I am to pay for said farm $50 per acre in merchandise and fixtures. When merchandise has been invoiced at cost, I am to deduct therefrom the sum of $246, and the remainder is the amount that I am to receive for said stock." Held, that it appeared from the contract that the parties expected that the value of the merchandise as fixed by invoice less $246 would equal or exceed the sum at which the land was to be taken by plaintiff, and that he was to pay in cash any excess in value of the land over the merchandise, and, therefore, the contract was not indefinite and uncertain within the meaning of the statute of frauds.—Howard v. Adkins, 107 Ind. 184, 78 N. E. 665.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, §§ 214-221.

§ 109. — Subject-matter in general.

[a] (App. 1908)

The written memorandum necessary to take a contract out of the statute of frauds may consist of letters, and the terms of the contract, or some of them not shown by the letters, may be shown by some other writing which clearly adopts the letters, but the memorandum, whether consisting of a single writing or of different writings, must contain all the essential elements of the contract.—Porter v. Patterson, 42 Ind. App. 404, 85 N. E. 797.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, §§ 222-224.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 270.

§ 110. — Description of lands.

[a] (Sup. 1849)

A covenant to convey such land as the covenantee may select out of a certain tract is not void, under the statute of frauds, by reason of not containing a particular description of the land to be conveyed; and the selection of certain land from the tract may be proved by parol in action on the covenant.—Carpenter v. Lockhart, 1 Ind. 434, Smith, 326.

[b] (Sup. 1861)

A parol contract for labor, to be paid for by a conveyance of whichever of two town lots the party doing the labor shall select, is not within the statute of frauds.—Lingle v. Clemens, 17 Ind. 124.

[c] (Sup. 1874)

A contract to convey "six hundred and forty acres of land in Anderson county, Kansas," is too indefinite to constitute the memorandum required by the statute.—Baldwin v. Kerlin, 46 Ind. 420.

A contract to convey "our woolen mills, in the northwest corner of public square in the town of Franklin," is too indefinite, where the mills were not in the public square, but were across the street from it.—Id.

[d] (Sup. 1875)

A contract for the sale of "the one hundred and twenty acres of land in Shannon county, Missouri," does not sufficiently describe the land.—Miller v. Campbell, 52 Ind. 125.

[e] (Sup. 1881)

A. wrote to B., offering to buy certain land. B. accepted in writing, and sent to C. a deed of the land, to be delivered to A. upon payment of the price. The correspondence between A. and B. did not describe the land. D. with full knowledge of the above facts, procured a deed to the same land from B., and secured the destruction of the deed in C.'s hands. Held, that A. could not compel D. to convey to him on payment of the price.—Freeland v. Charnley, 80 Ind. 132.

[f] (Sup. 1881)

In order to render a contract for the conveyance of lands valid, it is not necessary that the description of the lands should be contained in one of a series of instruments; but, if taking all the instruments in the series together the description appears, it will be sufficient.—Pulse v. Miller, 81 Ind. 190.

In order that a contract for the sale of lands may be valid, the instrument which contains the description of the lands must be clearly referred to and identified by the contract.—Id.

A contract for the conveyance of lands must describe the property on which it is intended to operate, and, if there is no description of the land, the statute of frauds prohibits enforcement.—Id.

A written agreement providing that the parties of the first part had conveyed certain lands situated in a certain county "in part" and agreed to have the same completed within 20 days was insufficient under the statute of frauds for indefiniteness of description.—Id.

[a] (Sup. 1890)

A contract for sale of land which contains no description of the land sold is not rendered valid by having such description indorsed on the back of the contract, without any words connecting such indorsement with the contract itself.—Wilstach v. Heyd, 122 Ind. 574, 23 N. E. 963.

[b] (Sup. 1894)

A contract for the sale of lands, describing them by section, township, and range, is valid under the statute of frauds, though the names of the state and county are omitted; and parol evidence is admissible to complete the description, and identify the property.—Tewksbury v. Howard, 138 Ind. 103, 37 N. E. 355.

[c] (App. 1896)

A contract for the conveyance of lands, to be selected by vendee from certain tracts owned by vendor, is valid, though the lands to be so conveyed are not specifically described in such contract.—Lingeman v. Shirk, 15 Ind. App. 432, 43 N. E. 33.

§ 113. — Statement of terms and conditions.

[a] (Sup. 1872)

Where a sale was made at public auction upon a credit, and a note was to be given with security, waiving valuation and appraisal laws, a memorandum of the sale, made by the clerk thereof, which did not state these facts, was insufficient to avoid the effect of the statute provision.—Norris v. Blair, 30 Ind. 90, 10 Am. Rep. 135.

[b] (Sup. 1875)

A memorandum, to be sufficient within the statute of frauds, must set out the contract with such reasonable certainty that its terms may be understood from the writing itself, without recourse to parol proof. The fact that such memorandum is indorsed on the order of sale, but without any reference to it for the ascertainment of the thing sold, is no better than if indorsed on any other paper.—Ridgway v. Ingram, 50 Ind. 145, 19 Am. Rep. 706.

§ 115. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1845)

The statute of frauds does not require that an agreement for the sale of real estate should be signed by both parties. It is sufficient if it have the signature of the party sued.—Shirley v. Shirley, 7 Blackf. 452.

[b] (Sup. 1846)

It is not necessary that a contract in writing, under the statute, should be signed by both parties. If it have the signature of the party sued, it is sufficient.—Smith v. Smith, 8 Blackf. 208.

[c] (Sup. 1864)

An agent who made a purchase for his principal drew up a memorandum of the sale, writing his principal's name at the commencement. Some time after, when no one was present, he subscribed his principal's name, but immediately marked it off. Held, that there was no signing within the meaning of the statute of frauds; there being no proof of the principal's name being written at the commencement with the intention of signing for him.—McMillen v. Terrell, 23 Ind. 163; Same v. Smith, Id. 168.

[d] (Sup. 1864)

The law does not prescribe the particular place where the obligor's name must be placed; but, wherever placed, it must be done with the intention of executing the instrument as the obligation of the party so signing it.—McMillen v. Terrell, 23 Ind. 163.

[e] (Sup. 1872)

Plaintiff engaged by writing, signed by him alone, to furnish defendant a certain number of hogs of a certain average weight at a stipulated price per head between specified dates, acknowledging the receipt of money on the contract. Held, in a suit by plaintiff for the failure of defendant to receive and pay for the hogs, that the writing, not being signed by the party to be charged, was not a valid note or memorandum in writing under the statute of frauds, but, defendant having treated it as a memorandum of the contract, the writing was admissible in evidence in support of an action on a parol contract.—Newby v. Rogers, 40 Ind. 9.

By the words "the party to be charged," in the statute of frauds (1 Gav. & H. St. p. 351, § 7), the defendant in the action is to be understood.—Id.

[f] (Sup. 1874)

A memorandum of a sale of lands, made at the time of the sale in a private sale book kept by the sheriff and opposite a printed notice of the sale posted therein, stating the name of the purchaser and the amount for which the land sold, but which is not signed by the sheriff or his deputy, is not a sufficient memorandum to satisfy the statute of frauds.—Ruckle v. Barbour, 48 Ind. 274.

[g] (Sup. 1896)

The acceptance by the grantee of a deed containing a personal agreement to be performed by him, though not connected with the land conveyed, is equivalent to his signature to the agreement, within the requirement of the statute of frauds, that such contracts shall be "signed by the party to be charged therewith."—Thiebaud v. Union Furniture Co., 143 Ind. 340, 42 N. E. 741.

[h] (Sup. 1902)

Under Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6029, requiring a promise, contract, or agreement within the statute of frauds, or some memorandum or note therefor, to be in writing, and to be signed by the party to be charged therefor, a contract for the conveyance of land in consideration of the promisee's agreement to pay a certain amount was sufficient as to the promisors, if signed by them.—Burke v. Mead, 64 N. E. 890, 159 Ind. 252.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

§ 116. — By agent.

Instrument creating or conveying interest in real property, see ante, § 102.

[a] (Sup. 1845)

At a public sale of town lots, a lot was struck off to a person for a certain sum, and a memorandum of the purchase was made at the time by the clerk of the sale in the sale book. Held, that the sale was valid, under the statute of frauds.—Hart v. Woods, 7 Blackf. 508.

[b] (Sup. 1846)

An auctioneer is the agent of the purchaser of either lands or goods at auction, to sign a contract for him as the highest bidder; and if he sign the memorandum of sale, in the name of the purchaser, immediately on receiving the bid and knocking down the hammer, this is a sufficient signing of the contract, within the statute of frauds.—Hunt v. Gregg, 8 Blackf. 105.

A memorandum of the sale, stating with certainty the terms and conditions of the contract, and signed by the auctioneer with his own name, is sufficient to bind both parties.—Id.

[c] (Sup. 1868)

A memorandum made by an agent of two parties to a contract for the purchase of corn, and signed by him in his own name, in the absence of the parties, not by their agreement, but at his own instance, and for his own use and convenience, is not sufficient to take the case out of the statute of frauds.—Noakes v. Morey, 30 Ind. 103.

[d] (Sup. 1888)

In the absence of statutory prohibition, authority of an agent to sign a letter relied on to take a contract out of the statute may be proved by parol, as in any other case of agency.—Roehl v. Haumesser, 114 Ind. 311, 15 N. E. 345.

[e] (Sup. 1894)

An agent may make a contract, good within the statute of frauds, without disclosing his principal, and the true relation may be shown by parol.—Tewksbury v. Howard, 138 Ind. 103, 37 N. E. 355.

[f] (App. 1899)

An exhibit set out in a complaint as an order passed by defendant county board of commissioners, and spread on its records, which is signed "Peter Dillon, P. B.," is not, without further allegation, shown to be signed by an authorized agent of defendant, so as to satisfy the statute of frauds.—Board of Com'rs of Clark County v. Howell, 52 N. E. 769, 21 Ind. App. 495.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

§ 117. Delivery of memorandum.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

A deed duly executed by the vendors and delivered to their agent to be delivered to the vendee on payment of the price, while retained by such agent and undelivered did not constitute a sufficient writing to satisfy the statute of frauds.—Freeland v. Charnley, 80 Ind. 132.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

An undelivered deed is not a sufficient writing to take a case out of the statute of frauds.—Pulse v. Miller, 81 Ind. 190.

[c] (App. 1910)

Where the parties orally agreed to the terms of the contract for the sale of land, and the terms were afterward reduced to writing, no delivery of the writing is necessary to take the contract out of the statute of frauds and render it enforceable.—Ames v. Ames, 91 N. E. 509.

As the writing evidencing an oral contract for the sale of land is not the contract, but only the evidence thereof, whether it remains in the hands of one of the parties or another, it fulfills the purpose of the statute of frauds and renders the oral contract enforceable, if it is properly identified as the full expression of the contract on which the parties agree.—Id.

The rules governing delivery of deeds and notes do not apply to a writing evidencing an oral contract for the sale of land to take the same out of the operation of the statute of frauds.—Id.

§ 118. Separate writings.

Letters by one party, see ante, § 103.

[a] (Sup. 1875)

A memorandum, in order to make another writing a part thereof so as to constitute a part of the contract, must refer to such other writing, and parol proof of the connection of the papers is not admissible to establish a contract required by the statute to be in writing.—Ridgway v. Ingram, 50 Ind. 145, 19 Am. Rep. 706.

On an order of sale issued on a judgment and decree of foreclosure of a mortgage of real estate, an indorsement made by a sheriff as follows: "Sold to A. B., for $2,400, October 16, 1869. [Signed] C. D., Sheriff,"—was held not a sufficient contract or memorandum of a sale made by a sheriff, within the statute of frauds.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

A memorandum, signed by the party or his agent, and distinctly referring to another writing, which contains the terms of the contract, is sufficient to take it out of the statute, although none of such terms may be contained in the memorandum.—Wills v. Ross, 77 Ind. 1, 40 Am. Rep. 279.

[c] (App. 1908)

The complaint alleged an oral contract made in January for the sale of goods, and that in March the buyer canceled the order by letter, and thereafter, on July 15th, the goods were shipped and invoices forwarded, which the buyer acknowledged by letter in which he referred to the prior cancellation of the order and refused to receive the goods, stating that they were at the seller's order and at his risk. Held, that the two letters of the buyer could not be coupled with the invoices acknowledged in the last letter, so as to constitute a good contract within the statute of frauds, as the first letter canceled the contract and the last letter affirmed the cancellation; and hence the complaint was materially defective.—Porter v. Patterson, 42 Ind. App. 404, 85 N. E. 797.

[d] (App. 1908)

The written memorandum of a sale of goods required by the statute of frauds (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7469), may be made up of letters or telegrams, but such writings must exhibit terms upon which the parties have met; and, if anything is left for further negotiation, the statute is not satisfied.—Jennings v. Shertz, 88 N. E. 729.

Where a proposition is submitted by letter calling for an answer based on such propoposal, the answer need not necessarily repeat all the terms of the proposal to satisfy the statute of frauds (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7469), but is to be read in connection with the proposal, and the whole together constitutes the contract.—Id.

Marriage as execution of contract to convey in consideration of marriage, see ante, § 6.

Specific performance of oral contracts partly performed, see SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, §§ 40-47.

§ 119. Operation as to rights or remedies in general.

Refusal or neglect to reduce agreement to writing according to promise, see post, § 126.

[a] (Sup. 1864)

The true ground of relief against the statute of frauds, and the only defensible ground on which the cases can be put, is fraud; that equity will not permit a suitor to make use of a statute against frauds as a means of perpetrating frauds, because to do so would defeat the very purpose for which the statute was made.—Eastburn v. Wheeler, 23 Ind. 305.

[b] (Sup. 1865)

Statutes against frauds cannot as a general rule be pleaded to protect a fraud.—Gray v. Stiver, 24 Ind. 174.

[c] (Sup. 1877)

The statute of frauds cannot be used as a cover to protect the perpetration of a fraud.—Teague v. Fowler, 56 Ind. 509.

[d] (Sup. 1889)

A mere neglect or refusal to convey land in accordance with a parol contract is not such a fraud as to take the case out of the statute of frauds.—Jackson v. Myers, 120 Ind. 504, 22 N. E. 90, 23 N. E. 86.

[e] (App. 1906)

Where fraud is involved in an equity case, evidence will be admitted which the statute of frauds by its terms would exclude, to prevent a misappropriation of the property.—Holliday v. Perry, 38 Ind. App. 588, 78 N. E. 877.

One may not avail himself of the defense of the statute of frauds to shield him in the perpetration of a fraud.—Id.

[f] (App. 1903)

An oral contract for the sale of goods being invalid under the statute of frauds, whether a provision thereof permitting the buyer to cancel in the event of purchasing elsewhere required notice of cancellation to the seller was immaterial; the entire contract being unenforceable, regardless of the oral contract and of any injustice done the seller.—Porter v. Patterson, 42 Ind. App. 404, 85 N. E. 797.

§ 120. What law governs transactions.

[a] (Sup. 1859)

Where a sale of personal property is made in another state, and suit is brought on it in this state, it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the common law prevails in that state, and that a parol sale is valid.—Johnson v. Chambers, 12 Ind. 102.

[b] (App. 1392)

A parol agreement, made in Illinois, to lease land situated therein for the term of a year, to begin at some definite future time, being within the Illinois statute of frauds, cannot be enforced in Indiana, although it is not repugnant to the statute of the latter state, as the law of Illinois governs.—Cochran v. Ward, 5 Ind. App. 89, 29 N. E. 795, 31 N. E. 581, 51 Am. St. Rep. 229.

The rule that in matters of procedure the lex fori governs, does not control an action brought in Indiana to enforce a parol agreement made in Illinois relating to land situated there, which agreement is within the Illinois statute of frauds, though not repugnant to that of Indiana; "procedure" in this connection applying to the nature of the action, to the rules of evidence and pleading, the order and manner of trial, etc., and not to matters of remedy which are incorporated into a contract as affecting its nature and obligatory character.—Id.

§ 121. Construction of statute in general.

Construction of statutes adopted from other countries, see STATUTES, § 226.

[a] (Sup. 1856)

The statute of frauds should be closely adhered to by the courts.—Ball v. Cox, 7 Ind. 453.

[b] (Sup. 1856)

Our statute of frauds being substantially in the language of the English statute (29 Car. II.), the court will adopt the English construction of it.—Bowman v. Conn, 8 Ind. 58.

[c] (Sup. 1872)

In adopting section 17 of the English statute of frauds as the statute of Indiana, the omission of the words "wares and merchandise" after the word "goods" does not change the applicability thereto of the construction given to that section in the English statute.—Vawter v. Griffin, 40 Ind. 593.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

§ 123. Operation as tenancy from year to year, month to month, or at will, of estate or interest created without writing.

Creation of leases in general, see ante, § 57.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

Where possession of land is taken under a parol contract for an indefinite time, this constitutes a tenancy from year to year, which is not within the statute of frauds.—Swan v. Clark, 80 Ind. 57.

[b] (Sup. 1882)

A parol lease of land for a period longer than three years is not void, but the lessee who takes possession holds as a tenant from year to year; the tenancy in all other respects being governed by the lease.—Nash v. Berkmeir, 83 Ind. 536.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, §§ 272-274.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 282.

§ 125. Validity and enforcement of contracts in general.

[a] (Sup. 1856)

A parol contract for the sale of land is voidable merely, and not void. The statute does not wholly vacate it, but merely inhibits bringing an action to enforce it. The parties may execute it if they choose, but they cannot be compelled to do it.—Hadden v. Johnson, 7 Ind. 394.

[b] (Sup. 1861)

If one purchase property at a sale on execution at the request of the execution debtor, under an agreement to restore it to the debtor, whereby the debtor is induced to relax his exertions to satisfy the execution, the agreement will be enforced.—Arnold v. Cord, 16 Ind. 177.

[c] The statute of frauds does not vacate such contracts as, though required to be in writing, yet are not so, but only inhibits all actions brought to enforce them.—(Sup. 1861) Fowler v. Burget, 16 Ind. 341; (1870) Mather v. Scoles, 35 Ind. 1; (1881) Wills v. Ross, 77 Ind. 1, 40 Am. Rep. 279.

[d] (Sup. 1861)

A contract by a father that his son should work for defendant until his majority, his maintenance to be provided in the term for his services, though not reduced to writing, was not void, but merely voidable.—Fowler v. Burget, 16 Ind. 341.

[e] (Sup. 1880)

While it is true that specific performance of a promise to execute a note and mortgage cannot be enforced, yet the injured party may bring an action for damages for breach of such a promise.—Johnson v. Hoover, 72 Ind. 305.

[f] (Sup. 1881)

Where a contract for the sale of goods is within the statute of frauds, the failure of the buyer to measure the goods in accordance with the terms of the agreement is not actionable negligence which will render him liable in tort to the seller for a loss of the goods while awaiting delivery.—Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Noel, 77 Ind. 110.

[g] (Sup. 1890)

Contracts within the statute of frauds are not void, but only voidable at the election of the party to be charged.—Lowman v. Sheets, 24 N. E. 351, 124 Ind. 410, 7 L. R. A. 784.

[h] (App. 1832)

Though within the statute of frauds, a parol agreement between a widow and her children, under which she is to have a life use in certain lands, is not absolutely void, and a condition therein that the widow shall maintain the improvements is binding upon her.—Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Trapp, 4 Ind. App. 69, 30 N. E. 812.

[i] (App. 1907)

A parol contract binding one to purchase real estate and convey the same to another is not within Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6629a, providing that no contract for the payment of money for finding a purchaser for the real estate of another shall be valid unless in writing, etc., but is within section 6629, rendering contracts for the sale of lands unenforceable unless in writing, and the purchaser cannot maintain an action for the difference between what the land would have cost him and what it was worth on the refusal of the vendor to convey, unless performance is shown.—Collins v. Green, 40 Ind. App. 630, 82 N. E. 932.

[j] (App. 1910)

An oral contract for the sale of land is not void; but, because of the statute of frauds, it is unenforceable.—Ames v. Ames, 91 N. E. 509.

§ 126. Promise to reduce agreement to writing.

[a] (Sup. 1884)

The refusal of a party to a contract to fulfill his promise to put it in writing is not such a fraud as will take the contract out of the statute of frauds.—Caylor v. Roe, 90 Ind. 1.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, § 279.

[a] (Sup. 1943)

Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6629, cl. 4, requiring contracts for the sale of land to be in writing, does not invalidate a note given in consideration of a devise, into possession of which the devisee's heirs have come.—Ballard v. Camplin, 67 N. E. 505, 161 Ind. 16.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

§ 129. Part performance in general.

Burden of proof to show part performance, see post, § 149.

Necessity of pleading part performance, see post, § 149.

Part performance of marriage contract, see ante, § 6.

Possession of tenant as creating tenancy from year to year or at will, see ante, § 123.

[a] An oral contract for the sale of lands, which contract is partly performed by a transfer of the possession of the land to the bargainee, and the erection by him of valuable improvements thereon, is taken out of the prohibition of the statute of frauds.—(Sup. 1820) Tibbs v. Barker, 1 Blackf. 58; (1835) Johnston v. Glancy, 4 Blackf. 94, 28 Am. Dec. 45; (1837) Moreland v. Lemasters, 4 Blackf. 383; (1887) Burns v. Fox, 113 Ind. 205, 14 N. E. 541; (1894) Starkey v. Starkey, 136 Ind. 349, 36 N. E. 287.

[aa] (Sup. 1830)

A. and B. jointly purchased a land-office certificate, which was assigned to A. alone. They agreed upon a division of the land, by which A. was to receive a few acres more than B., and was to allow a certain sum for the excess, and each entered upon and held possession of the portion allotted to him. Held, that the agreement between them was not within the statute of frauds.—Green v. Vardiman, 2 Blackf. 324.

[b] Payment of the price of land under a parol contract for its conveyance is not such a part performance as will take the contract out of the statute of frauds.—(Sup. 1835) Johnston v. Glancy, 4 Blackf. 94, 28 Am. Dec. 45; (1879) Carlisle v. Brennan, 67 Ind. 12; (1879) Suman v. Springate, Id. 115; (1882) Felton v. Smith, 84 Ind. 485.

Where a vendee of land under an oral contract is in possession at the time of his purchase, his continuing in possession is insufficient to take the case out of the statute.—Johnston v. Glancy, 4 Blackf. 94, 28 Am. Dec. 45.

[c] (Sup. 1841)

The doctrine of courts of equity that payment of part of the purchase money on a parol contract for real estate, with taking possession of the premises under the contract, is such a part performance as takes the case out of the statute of frauds, does not prevail in courts of law.—Barickman v. Kuykendall, 6 Blackf. 21.

[cc] (Sup. 1844)

A. purchased land, paid most of the purchase money, and took a bond for a conveyance. A. sold the land by parol, without assigning the bond, to B., who paid the purchase money and was put in possession. B. sold in the same manner to C., C. to D., D. to E. (who made valuable improvements thereon), E. to F., and F. to G. F. gave G. an order on A. for an assignment of the bond to G., which was shown to A., and he acknowledged the right of F. to control the assignment of the bond, but afterwards, on F.'s request, conveyed the bond to F. G. thereupon brought a bill in equity for an assignment of the bond, and a conveyance of the land by the obligor; and A., B., C., D., E., F., and the obligor were made parties. Held, that the case was not within the statute of frauds.—Underhill v. Williams, 7 Blackf. 125.

[d] (Sup. 1848)

A parol contract for the sale of land is void at law, notwithstanding possession taken and improvements made, and money paid on such contract may be recovered back.—Sailors v. Gambriel, 1 Ind. 88, 1 Smith, 82.

[dd] Possession, improvements, and payment of the purchase price by performance of services stipulated are sufficient part performance to take a parol contract to convey land out of the statute of frauds.—(Sup. 1856) Atkinson v. Jackson, 8 Ind. 31; (1858) Stater v. Hill, 10 Ind. 170; (1863) Watson v. Mahan, 20 Ind. 223.

[e] (Sup. 1861)

A parol contract for the sale of land is voidable, not void; and payment of the consideration may be such part performance as to take it out of the statute of frauds.—Lingle v. Clemens, 17 Ind. 124.

[ee] (Sup. 1864)

In a complaint to foreclose a mortgage, the answer alleged, by way of cross complaint, that after the delivery of the mortgage a third person applied to the mortgagor to purchase a certain tract of land, offering a satisfactory price, provided he would take a certain lot at $300 in part payment, which he refused to do, and declined the offer, and that the plaintiff thereupon agreed with the mortgagor that, if he would accept the rejected offer and take the lot at $300, he would purchase and take a conveyance thereof from the defendant at $300, and credit that sum upon the mortgage note, whereby the defendant was induced to sell his land at the price offered, and to take a conveyance of the lot, and he immediately tendered a conveyance thereof to the plaintiff, and asked that the credit be made upon his note, which was refused. Held, that the agreement was taken out of the statute of frauds by the defendant's part performance.—Eastburn v. Wheeler, 23 Ind. 305.

[f] (Sup. 1868)

In an action against a husband to foreclose a mortgage, the wife filed a cross-complaint, alleging that before the mortgage she had purchased the land of her husband, but he had failed to convey, of which the mortgagee had notice, and that she had ever since continued in possession with her husband, and prayed specific performance. Held that, as there was no change of possession and no such part performance by her payment that she could not be placed in statu quo, the sale was void under the statute of frauds.—Cuppy v. Hixon, 29 Ind. 522.

[ff] (Sup. 1870)

Payment of purchase price of land is not such a part performance as will take a case out of the statute of frauds.—Mather v. Scoles, 35 Ind. 1.

[g] (Sup. 1873)

Where a son, having a claim against his father for labor and for an interest in certain crops, released the claim, moved upon certain land belonging to his father, cultivated the same, and made visible, lasting, and valuable improvements, upon the verbal promise by his father to convey the land to him, and, after nine years' residence and labor on the land, built a dwelling house thereon, upon the receipt of a letter from his father, stating that, if he would erect a building on the land, he should be paid the value of the building and interest thereon, or a deed to the land should be made, at the option of the father, held, that the letter did not merge the parol promise previously made, the performance of which, by the plaintiff, took it out of the statute of frauds, and that the contract could be enforced after the death of the father, in an action against the other heirs to have the title of the son in the land declared.—Haddon v. Haddon, 42 Ind. 378.

[gg] (Sup. 1873)

A. and B. made a parol agreement that, if B. would exchange certain of his real estate for certain real estate owned by C., and convey the real estate procured of C. to A., the latter would pay to B. a certain price for the same. Held, that the exchange by B. of his property for that of C. was not a part performance of the contract between A. and B., so as to take the case out of the statute of frauds.—Sands v. Thompson, 43 Ind. 18.

[h] (Sup. 1874)

Where a mortgagor, the mortgagee, and a third person agreed by parol that an indemnifying mortgage on real estate should be changed by inserting therein a provision that such third person should also be indemnified as surety for the mortgagor, and in reliance on which agreements the third person signed the bond as surety, this was not such a part performance of the agreement as to take the case out of the statute of frauds, nor was the refusal on the part of the mortgagor such a fraud as to have that effect.—Irwin v. Hubbard, 49 Ind. 350. 19 Am. Rep. 679.

[hh] (Sup. 1876)

A sale of lands on execution is within the statute of frauds; and if no certificate nor deed is given to the purchaser, and no memorandum of the sale is made by the auctioneer on striking off the property, the sale cannot be enforced, even though the purchase money is paid and the sheriff makes a due return of the sale.—Gossard v. Ferguson, 54 Ind. 519.

[i] (Sup. 1876)

Plaintiff informed defendant that, in order to procure means to purchase certain land of defendant, he would be compelled to dispose of his own at a certain sacrifice, and defendant orally agreed with plaintiff that, if the latter would so dispose of his land and apply the proceeds to purchasing defendant's, he, on a certain day, for a fixed price, would sell and convey his land to plaintiff, who thereupon sold his land at such sacrifice. Held, that the disposal by plaintiff of his land was not such part performance as would take the oral agreement between the parties out of the statute of frauds.—Parker v. Heaton, 55 Ind. 1.

[ii] (Sup. 1877)

In an action on a note, defendant alleged that by parol contract between him and plaintiff he sold plaintiff, and agreed to convey to a third person named, certain land on condition of a full satisfaction of such note, and payment by plaintiff to defendant of a specified sum; that defendant, pursuant to such contract, delivered possession of such land, which was still retained; that waste had been committed thereon; that defendant had executed and tendered to plaintiff a deed for the land pursuant to such contract, on condition that plaintiff would comply with it on his part, which he refused to do; and that defendant was still willing to comply with such contract and execute such deed, on compliance by plaintiff. Held, that the answer alleged facts which showed part performance of the contract sufficient to avoid the statute of frauds.—Melton v. Coffelt, 59 Ind. 310.

[j] (Sup. 1877)

A contract not in writing by an owner of land, giving a party the right to set out and grow 500 peach trees thereon, and to receive two-thirds of the product during the lifetime of the trees, is, after part performance, not void by the statute of frauds.—Wiley v. Bradley, 60 Ind. 62.

[jj] (Sup. 1879)

A wife, sued with her husband in an action to recover real estate, filed a cross-complaint alleging that the plaintiff knew that the property had been purchased with her money; that her husband had been indebted to plaintiff, and that she had joined him in a mortgage to plaintiff, on an agreement that if she so mortgaged, and paid plaintiff the debt out of her own property and the expenses of foreclosure, plaintiff should foreclose, buy in the property, and at once convey it to her in fee simple; that she had performed her part of the agreement, but that plaintiff refused to convey to her. Held, that the agreement was within the statute of frauds, and that the cross-complaint did not show such part performance as would take the case out of the statute.—Carlisle v. Brennan, 67 Ind. 12.

[k] (Sup. 1879)

The mere payment of the price of real estate under a parol contract for the purchase thereof will not take the case out of the statute of frauds.—Suman v. Springate, 67 Ind. 115.

[kk] (Sup. 1879)

A verbal agreement for the exchange of lands for other lands subject to a mortgage is taken out of the statute of frauds by part performance, where the parties exchange possession, and valuable improvements are made, and the mortgage paid off by the one receiving the lands subject thereto.—Armstrong v. Fearnaw, 67 Ind. 429.

[l] (Sup. 1880)

In order that taking possession of the land shall take the contract out of the statute of frauds, it must have been under or by virtue of the contract.—Neal v. Neal, 69 Ind. 419.

[ll] (Sup. 1880)

When the parties to contracts within the statute of frauds and the statutes concerning trusts and powers have voluntarily and fully executed their agreements, so far as they affect real estate or any interest or trust therein, there is no reason why the statutes should be interposed against the further enforcement of the contracts according to their terms.—Tinkler v. Swaynie, 71 Ind. 562.

[lll] (Sup. 1881)

An allegation merely that a party was in possession of land, for the purchase of which he had made an oral agreement, was not sufficient to take the contract out of the statute of frauds, since it does not show that the possession was taken under the contract.—Rucker v. Steelman, 73 Ind. 396.

Payment of all the purchase money does not take a contract for the sale of land out of the statute of frauds.—Id.

[m] Where possession is relied on to take a contract for the sale of lands out of the statute of frauds, as part performance, possession must be taken under the contract, and not otherwise.—(Sup. 1881) Judy v. Gilbert, 77 Ind. 96, 40 Am. Rep. 289; (1882) Felton v. Smith, 84 Ind. 485.

[mm] (Sup. 1881)

Where a verbal agreement for the sale of land is so far performed that the purchaser acquires a perfect title and full possession, the vendor may recover the stipulated price.—Arnold v. Stephenson, 79 Ind. 126.

[mmm] (Sup. 1881)

Defendant agreed by parol to sell certain land for plaintiff, and render the surplus to him after settling his own account. Held that, after sale by defendant, there was such part performance as to take the case out of the statute of frauds.—Humphrey v. Fair, 79 Ind. 410.

[mmm] (Sup. 1882)

In ejectment, the answer alleged that defendant had been the owner in fee and continuously in possession of the land more than 40 years, when upon foreclosure of a mortgage it was sold, and a son of defendant obtained a deed; that, the son being indebted to the defendant in a specified amount for which defendant held the son's notes, it was agreed that if defendant, who was old and infirm, would surrender to the son all the notes and discharge him from liability defendant should continue in the undisturbed possession of the premises for five years, having all the rents and profits; and that defendant surrendered the notes and continued to occupy and cultivate the land. Held, that the answer did not show a part performance sufficient to take the lease out of the statute of frauds.—Railsback v. Walke, 81 Ind. 409.

Where the tenant under a parol lease for a longer term than three years takes and holds possession for more than a year, pays the consideration, and cultivates the land, the contract will not, because of part performance, be taken out of the statute.—Id.

Land was sold by the sheriff under a mortgage foreclosure, and the owner, by contract with the purchaser at the foreclosure sale, retained possession under a parol lease for five years. Held, that his mere continuing in possession was not a sufficient performance of the contract to take it out of the statute of frauds.—Id.

[n] The mere continuance of a possession taken under a contract made prior to an oral contract for the sale of lands will not take the case out of the statute of frauds.—(Sup. 1882) Felton v. Smith, 84 Ind. 485; (1895) Waymire v. Waymire, 40 N. E. 523, 141 Ind. 164.

[nn] (Sup. 1882)

Part performance of a contract void within the statute of frauds will not entitle the party to enforce the contract where such a part performance was entirely to his advantage, and he suffered no loss or inconvenience, and parted with no advantage or value in the transaction.—Groves v. Cook, 88 Ind. 169, 45 Am. Rep. 462.

[o] (Sup. 1883)

A parol agreement by one tenant in common with her cotenants, without consideration, that she would release and renounce her interest to them each in his respective piece, and they each accordingly made improvements, is not taken out of the statute of frauds in the absence of any other showing of part performance.—Switzer v. Hawk, 89 Ind. 73.

[oo] (Sup. 1884)

Where the grantee in a contract for the sale of land went into possession thereof under the contract, there was a sufficient part performance to take it out of the statute of frauds.—Paulus v. Latta, 93 Ind. 34.

[p] (Sup. 1884)

Possession taken under an oral contract for the sale of realty is part performance, within the meaning of the statute of frauds.—Coe v. Johnson, 93 Ind. 418.

[pp] (Sup. 1884)

Where a building which is not permanent and is not annexed to the freehold is sold with a right of removal, the contract, though verbal, will justify the purchaser, if he has fully complied with his contract, in entering and removing it.—Rogers v. Cox, 96 Ind. 157, 49 Am. Rep. 152.

[q] (Sup. 1884)

Where the plaintiff, as assignee and holder of a certificate of sale, agreed with defendants to give them time to redeem certain real estate in controversy beyond the year allowed by law for the redemption, and actually received of them a certain sum in part payment of the redemption money, such agreement was not within the statute of frauds, and if it was it could not be invoked to avoid the agreement so long as plaintiff retained in his possession the sum which had been paid him.—McMakin v. Schenck, 98 Ind. 264.

[qq] (Sup. 1885)

Part performance of an oral contract that cannot be performed within a year does not take it out of the statute.—Wolke v. Fleming, 103 Ind. 105, 2 N. E. 325, 53 Am. Rep. 495.

Where an oral contract not to be performed within a year is fully performed on one side within a year, the statute of frauds does not apply.—Id.

[r] (Sup. 1887)

A parol contract whereby, in consideration of a wife's release of her inchoate interest in her husband's land by joining in a mortgage thereon, the mortgagee agrees to purchase the land at foreclosure sale, and convey to her a certain part thereof, is not taken out of the statute of frauds by the execution of the mortgage, nor by the continuance of her possession already existing before the agreement.—Green v. Groves, 109 Ind. 519, 10 N. E. 401.

[rr] (Supp. 1887)

A private right of way, though it is an easement and an interest in land, within the statute of frauds, may be conveyed by parol contract where immediate possession is taken under it, and it is constantly used thereafter, constituting a part performance.—Robinson v. Thraikill, 110 Ind. 117, 10 N. E. 647.

[s] (Supp. 1888)

Purchasing, paying for, and taking exclusive possession by one of two tenants in common of his co-tenant's interest, and making valuable improvements thereon, takes the case out of the statute, where no deed has been given, and puts a subsequent purchaser of such interest on inquiry.—Peck v. Williams, 113 Ind. 256, 15 N. E. 270.

[ss] (Supp. 1890)

A parol agreement to compromise a claim to land cannot be avoided, as within the statute of frauds, where, in pursuance thereof, defendant has conveyed to a trustee who has quieted title as against third persons, and executed a note and mortgage to plaintiff for his interest, and then conveyed to defendant subject to the mortgage.—Hatfield v. Miller, 123 Ind. 463, 24 N. E. 330.

[sun] (Supp. 1890)

The statute prohibiting the making of contracts not to be performed within one year has no application to contracts which have been fully performed by one of the parties.—Lowman v. Sheets, 24 N. E. 351, 124 Ind. 416, 7 L. R. A. 784.

[t] (Supp. 1890)

On the 10th of November, defendant orally agreed with plaintiff that, if the latter would move on to defendant's farm and work for him, defendant would pay him a certain sum per month, commencing on the 1st of March, then next, and to continue nine months. Held, in an action for damages for failure to furnish work, that the contract was within the statute of frauds, as one not to be performed within a year, and was void so far as it remained unexecuted, and that it was not rescued from the operation of the statute by the fact that plaintiff moved his family and effects on to the farm; it not appearing that plaintiff either conferred any benefit upon defendant or sustained any damage thereby.—Shumate v. Farlow, 125 Ind. 359, 25 N. E. 432.

[tu] (Supp. 1890)

Where the vendees were occupying the land, either as tenants or as former owners, there is no such taking of possession under the contract as will avoid the statute of frauds.—Swales v. Jackson, 126 Ind. 282, 26 N. E. 62.

[u] (Supp. 1891)

Where the parties themselves put a practical construction on the contract, and the premises are taken possession of and occupied under the lease by the consent of both parties, it should be sufficient to take the contract out of the operation of the statute of frauds where the only infirmity in the contract is the insufficiency of the description of the lands.—Weaver v. Shipley, 27 N. E. 146, 127 Ind. 526.

The agreement as to the boundaries of leased land and its occupancy for four years, with the knowledge and consent of the landlord, is an important element in the partial performance relied on to take it out of the statute of frauds.—Id.

The practical location of the boundaries of leased premises, coupled with the subsequent possession of the same by the tenants by and with the landlord's knowledge and consent, is a sufficient location of the property, and takes the contract out of the operation of the statute of frauds.—Id.

[uu] (Supp. 1892)

Where plaintiff took possession of land under contract with the owner, the taking of possession being a part of the consideration for a promised conveyance to plaintiff, the possession was a part performance which took the case out of the statute of frauds.—Puterbaugh v. Puterbaugh, 30 N. E. 519, 131 Ind. 288, 15 L. R. A. 341.

[v] (App. 1892)

Taking possession under a parol lease of part of the premises, and paying rent for such part, does not take the lease out of the statute of frauds, so as to give the lessee any right to the balance of the premises.—Cochran v. Ward, 5 Ind. App. 89, 29 N. E. 795, 31 N. E. 581, 51 Am. St. Rep. 229.

[vv] (Supp. 1894)

W., who had a contract with C. for the conveyance of land, contracted with plaintiff to convey a certain portion thereof to him. Defendant agreed verbally with W. and plaintiff that, in consideration of the land being conveyed to him, he would convey to plaintiff said portion. Held that, after the land was conveyed to defendant, there was such a part performance as to take his promise out of the statute of frauds.—Boruff v. Hudson, 138 Ind. 280, 37 N. E. 786.

[w] (Supp. 1895)

Allegations, in a complaint for the specific performance of a parol contract for the sale of lands, that the purchaser "went into possession of the same," and that he "immediately entered upon, and cleared up, and put buildings and other valuable improvements upon, said land," do not sufficiently show that he took possession under the contract, to take the case out of the statute of frauds.—Waymire v. Waymire, 141 Ind. 164, 40 N. E. 523.

[ww] (App. 1895)

Defendant and others, desiring to locate a factory near C., agreed with an improvement company to purchase a number of lots, at a fixed price, from lands thereafter to be acquired. The improvement company contracted with plaintiff corporation for the factory, sold it land on which to build the factory, and agreed to furnish purchasers for 150 of the lots at the prices agreed on with defendant and the other subscribers to the fund. Plaintiff platted the land, and threw it open. Defendant went on it, selected a lot by number, and took possession of it as his choice, but did not remain in possession, or exercise any ownership over it. His choice was recorded by the secretary of the subscribers' meeting, and the lot withdrawn from selection. Plaintiff did not thereafter claim possession or exercise control over the lot, was not present at the subscribers' meeting, and had no knowledge that defendant had taken possession. The contract of purchase gave defendant no right to the lot until he settled for it and received a deed. Held, that the possession of defendant was not a sufficient part performance to take the parol contract for the purchase of the lot out of the statute of frauds.—Barnett v. Washington Glass Co., 12 Ind. App. 631, 40 N. E. 1102.

[x] (App. 1896)

Where one by rightfully going into possession of land as a purchaser has taken the contract of purchase out of the statute of frauds, equity will not permit him to be transformed into a trespasser and wrongdoer at the will of the vendor or persons claiming under him.—Mowrey v. Davis, 40 N. E. 1108, 12 Ind. App. 681.

A parol contract for the sale of a growing perennial crop is taken out of the statute of frauds by the purchaser's entry on the land with the owner's consent to harvest the crop.—Id.

[xx] (Sup. 1896)

Where a license to erect a stairway over a vacant lot, for entrance to the upper story of a building to be erected by the licensee on adjoining land, is to continue until the erection of a permanent stairway, to be constructed when the licensor builds, it is performed, so as to take it out of the statute of frauds, by the erection of a building and temporary stairway by the licensee.—Joseph v. Wild, 45 N. E. 467, 146 Ind. 240.

[xxx] (App. 1898)

M. and others made a parol agreement with an improvement company to purchase a certain number of lots, to be platted on certain land. The consideration was the location in the town of a certain factory. The lot which was to be conveyed to M. was to be selected in the manner agreed on by him and others, who were parties to the contract. Such company and a glass company then made a contract whereby the latter agreed to locate a factory on certain land, and lay out a part of the land into lots, and the improvement company, agreed to sell a certain number of the lots at an average price of $200 each. The glass company performed the contract, and M. subscribed for and selected one lot, and took possession. Held, that the statute of frauds did not apply to an action by the glass company against M. to recover the price of such lot.—Washington Glass Co. v. Mosbaugh, 49 N. E. 178, 19 Ind. App. 105.

[y] (App. 1899)

Part performance of a contract that cannot be performed by either party within a year does not prevent interposition of the statute of frauds to an action to enforce or recover damages for the breach thereof.—Board of Com'rs of Clark County v. Howell, 52 N. E. 769, 21 Ind. App. 495.

[yy] (Sup. 1902)

Where a parent enters into an oral contract with a daughter to convey certain real estate to her if she will move on the land, improve it, and make a home thereof, and the latter, with the knowledge and encouragement of the parent, enters and continues in possession of the land for 12 years, and erects valuable improvements thereon and fully performs her part of the contract, there is sufficient performance to take the contract out of the statute of frauds.—Horner v. McConnell, 63 N. E. 472, 158 Ind. 280.

[yyy] (App. 1902)

Where it was agreed that plaintiff should sell his farm and purchase defendant's the proceeds of plaintiff's farm to be paid to defendant in addition to another sum, and plaintiff took possession by asserting his ownership in the presence of the defendant, and paid defendant $50, and sold his farm, and tendered the price to defendant within the time agreed on, there was not a part performance sufficient to take the contract out of Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6629, providing that contracts for the sale of lands cannot be enforced unless in writing, and signed by the party to be bound.—Riley v. Haworth, 64 N. E. 928, 30 Ind. App. 377.

The payment of part of the price of land is not such a part performance as will remove an oral contract from the operation of Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6629, providing that no action shall be brought on a contract for the sale of land, unless in writing.—Id.

[z] (App. 1904)

A purchaser of land under a parol contract providing for the execution of a deed to the land on demand and payment of the purchase price, who entered into and continued in the possession of the land and made lasting improvements, is, on complying with the terms of the contract, entitled to a deed.—Elsbury v. Shull, 70 N. E. 287, 32 Ind. App. 556.

[zz] (Sup. 1905)

Where a widow took actual absolute possession of every part and interest in certain real estate under an alleged parol contract of the heirs to surrender to her their interest in consideration of her paying the debts of the estate out of her separate property, which she did, and thereafter continued in possession undisturbed and made valuable improvements on the land, the contract was not within the statute of frauds.—O'Brien v. Knotts, 75 N. E. 504, 165 Ind. 308.

[Lxx] (App. 1909)

The payment of the price of land alone is not a sufficient part performance to take the transaction out of the statute.—Garrick v. Garrick, 87 N. E. 696, 43 Ind. App. 585, rehearing denied 88 N. E. 104, 43 Ind. App. 585.

§ 130. Contracts in part within statute.

Contracts performed as to part within statutes, see post, § 133.

Contracts performed only as to part not within statute, see post, §§ 136, 137.

An agreement in the alternative, to convey land, or, in case of failure to convey, then to pay a sum of money, is within the statute of frauds, and must be in writing. If it is not, neither branch of it can be enforced, and no action can be maintained upon it, either for damages for failure to convey or for recovery of the sum of money stipulated.—Mather v. Scoles, 35 Ind. 1.

Where there are a number of contracts made at the same time and as parts of the same transaction, some of which are within the statute of frauds, and the others not, and they are of such a nature that they can reasonably be considered as separate, those which are not within the statute will be enforced, though the others may fall within the statute.—Lowman v. Sheets, 24 N. E. 351, 124 Ind. 416, 7 L. R. A. 784.

The owner of certain mares, by an oral agreement, sold a half interest therein to defendant, payment to be made on or before four years. It was further agreed that defendant should have possession and care of all the mares from the time of the agreement; that they should be kept for four years, for breeding purposes only, at the joint expense of the parties, and should not be worked or sold within that time except by consent. At the end of the four years, their interests were to be equal. Held that, though the agreement to keep the mares for breeding purposes for more than a year was within the statute, the two contracts were so far separated from and independent of each other that the refusal of the vendor to carry out the latter agreement would not deprive defendant of his rights under the former, though this contract would not have been entered into except for the other.—Id.

[c] (App. 1893)

Where a guardian who has failed to account for moneys received verbally promises to hold them for the ward and pay them over, with accretions, and also to make the ward his heir, the fact that the latter promise is within the statute of frauds does not prevent enforcement of the former.—Doan v. Dow, 8 Ind. App. 324, 35 N. E. 709.

[d] (App. 1896)

A contract partly written and partly verbal is a parol contract, and therefore, when relating to the sale of land, unenforceable by reason of the statute of frauds.—Lingeman v. Shirk, 43 N. E. 33, 15 Ind. App. 432.

§ 131. Modification of contract.

Persons to whom statute is available, see post, § 143.

[a] (Sup. 1861)

A. sold to B. land, and took his notes in part payment. In consideration of a defect in title, by reason of the refusal of the grantor's wife to sign the deed, it was agreed by A. that only two of the notes should be paid. Held, that this agreement was valid, though not in writing.—Friermood v. Pierce, 17 Ind. 461.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

A written contract falling within the statute of frauds cannot be varied by any subsequent agreement of the parties, unless such new agreement is also in writing.—Carpenter v. Galloway, 73 Ind. 418.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

The statute of frauds has no application to a suit to correct a description in a deed, though the agreement in pursuance of which the deed was made rested in parol.—Morrison v. Collier, 79 Ind. 417.

[d] (Sup. 1881)

There is nothing in the statute of frauds which prevents a correction of the description of the premises in a deed or mortgage of real estate.—Dutch v. Boyd, 81 Ind. 146.

[e] (Sup. 1901)

Plaintiffs purchased land under a written agreement whereby they were to divide the land into town lots, the purchaser of each lot to give a mortgage to plaintiffs' vendor, and to receive a deed from him. When the total sales should equal the purchase price of the tract, a deed of the unsold lots was to be made to plaintiffs. Thereafter plaintiffs sued the vendor, alleging that an oral modification of the contract had been made, whereby the vendor should accept in part payment of the lots other pieces of land; that the vendor had refused to accept property offered in exchange for the lots. Held that, the oral modification being a modification of terms of a contract required by the statute of frauds to be in writing, there could be no recovery.—Bradley v. Harter, 60 N. E. 139, 156 Ind. 499.

[i] (App. 1903)

A contract, which, being within the statute of frauds, has been made in compliance therewith, cannot be orally modified.—Christian v. Highlands, 69 N. E. 266, 32 Ind. App. 104.

[g] (App. 1906)

A complaint, showing a written contract by which defendant and plaintiffs agreed to purchase coal lands under certain conditions; that plaintiffs afterwards orally agreed that defendant should advance their share of the money, take the legal title to the land, and hold as security until payment; that plaintiffs offered to repay said sum, but defendant refused to accept or to convey their interest—counts on a contract in writing for the purchase of such land, the oral agreement as to payment being collateral.—Holliday v. Perry, 38 Ind. App. 588, 78 N. E. 877.

[h] (App. 1909)

Since a lease for over three years is required by Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7462, to be in writing, such a lease can be changed or modified only by a written instrument.—Burgett v. Loeb, 43 Ind. App. 657, 88 N. E. 346.

§ 132. Readiness and willingness to perform contract.

Actual performance by tender of deed, see post, § 133.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

An allegation that, under a parol contract for the sale of land, plaintiff tendered a warranty deed and possession, does not show such part performance as will take the case out of the statute of frauds; there being no acceptance.—Arnold v. Stephenson, 79 Ind. 126.

[b] (Sup. 1882)

One who has paid part of the purchase money on a verbal contract for the purchase of real estate cannot, by refusing to accept a deed, recover back the money paid.—Day v. Wilson, 83 Ind. 463, 43 Am. Rep. 76.

[c] (Sup. 1882)

A parol contract for the sale of land is not void, but only voidable, and is sufficient consideration for a promissory note. If the vendor show himself able and willing to perform, he can recover on the note.—Schierman v. Beckett, 88 Ind. 52.

[d] (Sup. 1883)

Where a vendor offers to the purchaser or fully secures to him the title contracted for, he is entitled to recover the purchase money, though the contract was by parol.—Stephenson v. Arnold, 89 Ind. 426; Ayers v. Slifer, Id. 433.

[e] (App. 1898)

A vendor of land under a parol contract, who is able and willing to perform, may maintain an action for the purchase money.—Washington Glass Co. v. Mosbaugh, 49 N. E. 178, 19 Ind. App. 105.

§ 133. Contracts performed as to part within statute.

Executed contracts, see post, § 139.

Part performance in general, see ante, § 130.

Possession under contract, see ante, § 79.

[a] (Sup. 1861)

A lease was made for a term coming within the statute of frauds, but nevertheless not put into writing. The lessee executed two notes for his rent, and, after holding possession during the full term, he refused to pay the notes, on the ground that the contract could not have been enforced had either party refused to perform his part before expiration of the term. Held that, after conclusion of the term and peaceful possession on his part throughout, it was too late for him to avail himself of this defense.—Gibson v. Wilcoxon, 16 Ind. 333.

Where a verbal contract for the conveyance of real estate has been executed on one side by a conveyance of the property, the proper action is upon an implied promise arising from the plaintiff's performance, implied promises not being embraced by the statute of frauds; but in such case no action can be maintained on the special contract itself.—Fisher v. Wilson, 18 Ind. 133.

[c] In an action on a subscription, the complaint set out the contract, which was as follows: "Ten days after the completion of the I. & St. L. Railroad from I. H. county, and the running of a train of cars thereon, I promise to pay to the order of said railroad company, at the Bank of D., the sum of $100, without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisement laws. The consideration of this note is the construction of said road as aforesaid within one-half mile of the town of D., and the promise and agreement of said company that by means of said road and its connections the company will run trains through from I. L. within two years from the 1st day of January, 1869,"—dated November 25, 1868, and signed by the defendant; and it averred performance within the time and in the manner mentioned. Held, that if the contract had originally been within the statute, and therefore not binding on the plaintiff, yet after such performance by the company the maker could not defend on the ground that he alone signed the instrument.—(Sup. 1871) Straughan v. Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co., 38 Ind. 185; Curtis v. Same, Id. 222; Wilson v. Same, Id. 227; Fimmons v. Same, Id. 247; King v. Same, Id. 248; Seearce v. Same, Id. 271; Weaver v. Same, Id. 389; Welsham v. Same, Id.; Nave v. Same, Id. 443; (1872) Newman v. Same, 39 Ind. 153.

[d] Where a deed is executed and delivered, and possession taken thereunder, it is no defense to an action for the price that the promise to pay therefor was in parol.—(Sup. 1872) Curran v. Curran, 40 Ind. 473; (1878) Huston v. Stewart, 64 Ind. 388; (1887) Worley v. Sipe, 111 Ind. 238, 12 N. E. 385.

[e] (Sup. 1881)

Where a purchaser receives a sheriff's deed, and acquires full title and complete possession of land, he cannot escape liability to the vendor under a verbal contract on the ground that the statute of frauds prohibits the enforcement of such contracts for the sale of an interest in land.—Arnold v. Stephenson, 70 Ind. 126.

[f] (Sup. 1885)

Two out of several co-tenants orally agreed to exchange their interests in definite portions of the common estate, and made mutual deeds, each grantee taking possession of the portion conveyed to him, exclusive of his grantor, and made lasting improvements; the agreement being acquiesced in for 14 years. Held, that there was sufficient part performance to take the agreement out of the statute of frauds.—Savage v. Lee, 101 Ind. 514.

[g] (App. 1903)

Burns Rev. St. 1901, § 6620, prohibiting the enforcement of parol contracts for the sale of land, does not prevent an action to enforce a vendor's lien on land conveyed pursuant to an oral contract to exchange.—McCoy v. McCoy, 69 N. E. 193, 32 Ind. App. 38, 102 Am. St. Rep. 221.

§ 136. — Agreements not to be performed within one year.

[a] (Sup. 1890)

In settlement of a suit on two notes against his daughter and her husband, decedent promised, in consideration of their relinquishing their defense, and giving security for interest to accrue to the time his granddaughter should become 21, to indorse the notes to his granddaughter, and pay her $2,000 more when she arrived at that age. Held, that performance by the others within the year took the promise of decedent as to such payment of the statute of frauds (Rev. St. 1881, § 4904), forbidding suit on oral contracts not to be performed within one year.—Piper v. Fosher, 121 Ind. 407, 23 N. E. 260.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 295.

§ 137. — Agreements relating to real property.

[a] (Sup. 1878)

In an action for the partition of certain lands, one of the defendants answered, claiming title thereto and setting up a verbal contract between himself and the former owner of the lands, who had died intestate, by which said defendant was to board and care for such intestate during her life, and in consideration therefor said intestate was to convey said lands to the defendant or devise the same to him by will. It was also alleged that the defendant had performed his part of such contract, and that said intestate had put him into possession of the lands under the same. Held, such such contract was not within the statute of frauds.—Mauck v. Melton, 64 Ind. 414.

[b] (Sup. 1879)

The owner of lands agreed verbally with his sons, then living with him, that, if they would support him and his wife, he would convey to them. They did so, the family continuing to reside together. No conveyance was made. The father died intestate. Held, that the verbal contract was not taken out of the statute of frauds.—Johns v. Johns, 67 Ind. 440.

[c] (Sup. 1886)

A parol agreement to treat a girl as a child of the promisors, and to will her their property, consisting of real and personal estate, in consideration of services to be performed by her, is not taken out of the statute of frauds by performance on the girl's part.—Wallace v. Long, 105 Ind. 522, 5 N. E. 666, 55 Am. Rep. 222.

[d] (Sup. 1888)

An agreement between a father and son that the son is to receive a piece of land for work done for his father is taken out of the statute by the son performing his part of the agreement, being put in possession, making valuable improvements, and holding the land for 26 years.—Cutsinger v. Ballard, 115 Ind. 93, 17 N. E. 206.

[c] (Sup. 1891)

A verbal contract on the part of a wife, after her husband's death, to leave to an adopted child all her property at her death, is void under the statute of frauds, where the property is land and personalty exceeding $50, and performance on the part of the child is not sufficient to take the case out of the statute.—Austin v. Davis, 128 Ind. 472, 26 N. E. 890, 25 Am. St. Rep. 450, 12 L. R. A. 120.

§ 138. Contracts implied by law on part performance.

[a] (Sup. 1871)

Suit cannot be maintained to recover the value of the land orally agreed to be conveyed in payment for services.—Baxter v. Kitch, 37 Ind. 554.

[b] (Sup. 1872)

A person who takes possession of a tract of land under a contract of purchase that is illegal and void is liable for the rent of the premises.—Mattox v. Hightshue, 39 Ind. 95.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

The implied promise to pay the value of property, arising where a verbal contract has been performed by the conveyance of the property bargained for, is not within the statute of frauds.—Arnold v. Stephenson, 79 Ind. 126.

[d] (Sup. 1881)

Defendant made a parol agreement to pay plaintiff "$100 in growing timber," for which he received the consideration, and then he refused to allow the trees to be cut. Held, that plaintiff could recover $100 as damages.—Terrell v. Frazier, 79 Ind. 473.

[e] (Sup. 1882)

An action to recover the value of lands conveyed in performance of an oral contract whereby defendant was to convey other lands in payment, and which he refuses to execute, is not an action on a contract within the meaning of the statute of frauds.—Jarboe v. Severin, 85 Ind. 496.

Where damages cannot be recovered for breach of an agreement because of the statute of frauds, a party to it who has performed his part must in an action at law recover upon an agreement implied by the law from the facts.—Id.

[f] Where labor and services are rendered under a contract void under the statute of frauds, a recovery may be had on a quantum meruit.—(Sup. 1885) Wolke v. Fleming, 103 Ind. 105, 2 N. E. 325, 53 Am. Rep. 495; (1886) Wallace v. Long, 105 Ind. 522, 5 N. E. 666, 55 Am. Rep. 222.

[g] (Sup. 1835)

One who has transferred property under a contract voidable under the statute of frauds may recover the value of the property under quantum valebat.—Wolke v. Fleming, 103 Ind. 105, 2 N. E. 325, 53 Am. Rep. 495.

[h] (Sup. 1889)

A parol agreement to devise a farm in consideration of support for life, though void under the statute of frauds, is sufficient foundation for a claim against the promisor's estate after his death for the value of the support rendered.—Schoonover v. Vachon, 121 Ind. 3, 22 N. E. 777.

[i] (Sup. 1891)

Where plaintiff served the decedent under an agreement that he would make proper provision in his will for her as compensation, and he fails to do so, and the contract is void under the statute of frauds, she can recover on a quantum meruit.—Miller v. Eldridge, 126 Ind. 461, 27 N. E. 132; Taggart v. Tevanny, 1 Ind. App. 339, 27 N. E. 511.

[j] (App. 1893)

Where an agreement for continuous services for a long period of time is fully performed by the party rendering the services, he will not be left without remedy on the ground that the contract is within the statute of frauds.—Knight v. Knight, 33 N. E. 456, 6 Ind. App. 203.

[k] (App. 1894)

A recovery may be had for services rendered under a void parol agreement to convey or devise land, in consideration thereof, on a quantum meruit, and evidence of the promise is admissible to rebut the presumption that such services were rendered gratuitously.—Kettry v. Thumma, 9 Ind. App. 498, 36 N. E. 919.

[l] (App. 1902)

Where services are rendered on an oral agreement to make provision for the servant by will, and the employer dies without making such provision, the servant may recover the value of his services from the estate on a quantum meruit, though the promise itself is within the statute of frauds.—Gullett v. Gullett, 63 N. E. 782, 28 Ind. App. 670.

[m] (App. 1909)

Where a parol contract to convey land in consideration of personal services was unenforceable because of the statute of frauds, and the party receiving the services died without conveying the lands, the servant could recover the value of the services on a quantum meruit against decedent's estate.—Flowers v. Poorman, 43 Ind. App. 528, 87 N. E. 1107.

§ 139. Contracts completely performed.[a] (Sup. 1856)

If the purchaser at an execution sale, on bidding off the land, pays the purchase money, and the sheriff fails at the time to make the note or memorandum, but during the lifetime of the execution executes a deed pursuant to the sale, which the vendee accepts, the sale is valid, and the vendee's title cannot be impeached.—Hadden v. Johnson, 7 Ind. 394.

[b] (Sup. 1885)

Where the money was not paid at the time of a sheriff's sale, but the party subsequently completed the sale by the payment of the money and the delivery of the certificate, and no new rights of third parties had intervened, the sale became valid so far as it might have been affected by the statute of frauds.—Elaston v. Castor, 101 Ind. 426, 51 Am. Rep. 754.

[c] (Sup. 1885)

Full performance of a verbal contract for the sale of goods, the price of which amounts to $50 or more, takes the contract out of the operation of the statute of frauds.—Hinkle v. Fisher, 104 Ind. 84, 3 N. E. 624.

[cc] (Sup. 1886)

Where a contract for the sale of land is so far executed as to deliver a deed upon condition, it is taken out of the statute of frauds when the condition is fully performed.—McCasland v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 108 Ind. 130, 9 N. E. 119.

[d] (Sup. 1891)

The statute of frauds does not apply to executed contracts.—Anderson School Tp. v. Milroy Lodge Free & Accepted Masons, No. 139, 130 Ind. 108, 29 N. E. 411, 30 Am. St. Rep. 206.

[e] (App. 1893)

An executed parol agreement for the construction of a ditch across one man's land, to drain the land of another, creates an easement appurtenant to the latter tract of land.—Steinke v. Bentley, 6 Ind. App. 663, 34 N. E. 97.

[f] (App. 1906)

Where plaintiffs and defendant agreed in writing to buy lands, and plaintiffs borrowed from defendant their part of the money with which to pay therefor, and such lands were so bought and paid for, such contract was fully performed; such borrowed money in legal effect being theirs.—Holliday v. Perry, 38 Ind. App. 588, 78 N. E. 877.

[g] (App. 1907)

A parol contract bound one to purchase real estate and convey the same to another. The latter did not pay any part of the price and the former did not make the conveyance, but sold the land to a third person. Held not to show performance taking the contract out of the statute of frauds.—Collins v. Green, 40 Ind. App. 630, 82 N. E. 932.

§ 141. Contracts as ground of defense.[a] (Sup. 1852)

After a sealed note had been executed and delivered, a third person wrote a guaranty thereon in consideration that the maker deliver to the guarantor, canceled, another note made by the guarantor in favor of the maker of the sealed note; the payee of the sealed note agreeing at the time to accept the guarantor as his debtor in lieu of the original maker. Held, that this arrangement, being void under the statute of frauds as an attempt to alter the effect of the written guaranty by parol evidence, could not be shown in an action by the payee of the sealed note against its maker.—Smith v. Stevens, 3 Ind. 332.

[b] (Sup. 1861)

Where one agrees with a mortgagor to purchase the land at the sale, promising to allow the former to redeem, but fraudulently failing to give a written instrument evidencing such promise until too late to prevent the sale, the conveyance to the purchaser will be set aside, and possession given the mortgagor; the statute of frauds not being a defense in such a case.—Arnold v. Cord, 16 Ind. 177.

[c] (Sup. 1865)

In an action by a minor to recover for work and labor, the defendant cannot avail himself of an oral contract with the plaintiff's mother for the plaintiff's services, on certain terms, until he became of age. The contract, not being in writing, is not a contract of apprenticeship, and is void by the statute of frauds, as not to be performed within a year.—Tague v. Hayward, 25 Ind. 427.

[a] (Sup. 1889)

A parol agreement to devise a farm in consideration of support for life, though void under the statute of frauds, is sufficient foundation for a claim against the promisor's estate after his death for the value of the support rendered.—Schoonover v. Vachon, 121 Ind. 3, 22 N. E. 777.

[b] (App. 1892)

A husband died without fulfilling his contract to convey to his wife land in consideration of her joining him in deeds to other lands owned by him. Held that, though the contract is within the statute of frauds, the wife can recover, from the husband's estate, the consideration received by him, which is the value of her interest in the land which she joined in conveying.—Worth v. Patton, 5 Ind. App. 272, 31 N. E. 1130.

[c] (Sup. 1907)

Plaintiff in a suit to redeem from a mortgage cannot interpose the statute of frauds to cut off equitable defenses.—Ferguson v. Boyd, 169 Ind. 537, 81 N. E. 71, 82 N. E. 1064.

§ 143. Persons to whom statute is available.[a] (Sup. 1837)

The owner of personal property sold it while in transit to plaintiff to whom the carrier delivered it. The property having been damaged in shipment, plaintiff brought suit against the carrier for damages. Held, that plaintiff could not recover, the sale being for more than $30, without proof of writing, or payment of the purchase price, or constructive delivery.—Law v. Hatcher, 4 Blackf. 364.

[b] (Sup. 1873)

Plaintiff alleged that defendant, as agent of plaintiff, sold certain real estate and received money therefor, but failed to account, and also charged him with a balance due for personal property sold by him. Held, that an answer that the contract for the sale of the land was not in writing was no defense.—Ferguson v. Ramsey, 41 Ind. 511.

[c] (Sup. 1880)

A creditor cannot attack a conveyance by his debtor on the ground that the debtor's obligation to convey arose out of an agreement which was void under the statute of frauds.—Brown v. Rawlings, 72 Ind. 505.

[d] (Sup. 1881)

Where a deed incorrectly describes the land intended to be conveyed, and a creditor of the grantor has levied thereon, he cannot interpose the statute of frauds in a suit against him and the grantor to correct the deed; the right to plead the statute being personal to the contracting parties.—Morrison v. Collier, 79 Ind. 417.

[e] (Sup. 1882)

A creditor seeking to subject to sale, property sold to another by the debtor in good faith cannot avoid the sale on the ground that the contract was not evidenced as required by the statute of frauds.—Dixon v. Duke, 85 Ind. 434.

[f] (Sup. 1882)

The statute of frauds is available as a defense only to the parties to the contract, and not to a stranger.—Cool v. Peters Box & Lumber Co., 87 Ind. 531.

[g] (Sup. 1883)

In an action by a lessee against a prior lessee of the same land, who has kept plaintiff out of possession, neither party can avail himself of the fact that the other party's lease is not in writing.—Royce v. Graham, 91 Ind. 420.

[h] (Sup. 1884)

A life insurance company, having been sued by a beneficiary who has procured insurance on the life of his debtor, cannot raise the question whether the contract by which the indebtedness was created was sufficient under the statute of frauds.—North Western Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Heimann, 93 Ind. 24.

[i] The defense of the statute of frauds is personal and can only be relied on by the parties or their privies.—(Sup. 1885) Savage v. Lee, 101 Ind. 514; (1885) Rodkin v. Merit, 102 Ind. 293, 1 N. E. 625; (1886) Burrow v. Terre Haute & L. R. Co., 107 Ind. 432, 8 N. E. 167.

[j] (Sup. 1886)

A creditor cannot compel his debtor to avoid an oral contract by pleading the defense of the statute of frauds, nor can a creditor plead such a defense for the debtor; and the fact that an agreement to take a life estate in lieu of that given by law, made by a husband with his wife, was an oral one does not destroy the rights of the children as against the husband's creditors.—Wright v. Jones, 105 Ind. 17, 4 N. E. 281.

[k] (Sup. 1888)

It does not lie in the mouth of a third person to set up the statute of frauds in order to defeat a contract which the parties themselves have fully executed.—Peck v. Williams, 15 N. E. 270, 113 Ind. 256.

[l] (Sup. 1892)

A creditor cannot take advantage of the statute of frauds in order to avoid a sale of lands made by the debtor, although the latter might have done so had he elected.—Old Nat. Bank of Evansville v. Findley, 31 N. E. 62, 131 Ind. 225.

[m] (Sup. 1894)

Parties to contracts and their privies can alone take advantage of the fact that a contract is invalid under the statute of frauds. A third person cannot make the statute of frauds available to overthrow a transaction between other persons. The defense of this statute is purely a personal one, and cannot be made by strangers.—Jackson v. Stanfield, 36 N. E. 345, 37 N. E. 14, 137 Ind. 592, 23 L. R. A. 588.

One who by conspiracy prevents another from carrying out a contract with a third person cannot plead that such contract was within the statute of frauds.—Id.

[n] (App. 1903)

Under the provisions of the statute of frauds (Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6036), a sale of personal property without delivery is presumptively void only as against creditors of the vendor and purchasers in good faith.—Warner v. Warner, 66 N. E. 760, 30 Ind. App. 578.

[o] (Sup. 1906)

A creditor cannot object to a conveyance as fraudulent merely because made in performance of a contract within the statute of frauds; such contract not being void, and the defense of the statute being personal to the party to the contract.—Cannon v. Castleman, 73 N. E. 689, 164 Ind. 343.

§ 144. Waiver of bar of statute.

Plaintiff, defendant, and a third person purchased real estate as tenants in common, and in consideration therefor verbally agreed to pay their vendor's certain note. When said note fell due, it was renewed by all said grantees, and upon a second renewal it was signed only by plaintiff and said third person. This note was afterwards paid, two-thirds by plaintiff and one-third by the third grantee. Plaintiff then brought action against defendant for a contribution. Held, that evidence was admissible to show the parol agreement to pay the vendor's note, as whatever objection defendant might have made under the statute of frauds was removed by his becoming a party to the first renewal note.—Boulden v. Scircle, 34 Ind. 60.

[b] (Sup. 1892)

Since under Rev. St. 1881, § 5117, a wife is under disability to enter into an executory contract for the sale of her land, except by written contract in which her husband joins, no acts or representations by her can estop her from asserting the invalidity of a parol contract for the sale of her land entered into by her husband as her agent.—Percifield v. Black, 31 N. E. 955, 132 Ind. 384.

[c] (App. 1908)

The repudiation of a contract, invalid under the statute of frauds, is sufficient whether a good reason, a wrong reason, or no reason be given therefor.—Porter v. Patterson, 42 Ind. App. 404, 85 N. E. 797.

Where a complaint for breach of a parol contract alleges that the contract was to continue for a reasonable time, the fact that such allegation is followed by the words, "that is to say, for the period of three years," does not render the complaint demurrable as showing a contract within the statute of frauds.—*Niagara Fire Ins. § 147. — As ground of defense.

[a] (Sup. 1873)

Where a contract for the sale of personal property of the value of over $50 is pleaded in defense, and the memorandum thereof is insufficient under the statute, and it is prayed by defendant that the memorandum be reformed so as to express the real agreement of the parties, it is not error to strike out such plea, where it is also alleged that a payment was made of a part of the purchase price, because the payment authorized parol proof of the contract, and reformation was not necessary.—Baker v. Farmbrough, 43 Ind. 240.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, §§ 352, 358.

§ 148. — Writing or other compliance with statute.

[a] (Sup. 1827)

The promise of an administrator to pay a debt of the intestate need not be averred in the declaration to be in writing; the statute of frauds applying to the proof, and not to the declaration.—Mills v. Kuykendall, 2 Blackf. 47.

[b] (Sup. 1846)

A sheriff's notice of an intended motion against a purchaser of land on execution to recover the purchase money need not state that the contract was in writing.—Hunt v. Gregg, 8 Blackf. 105.

[c] Where by the statute of frauds it is requisite that the contract sued on should be in writing, the declaration need not aver that it was so; the provisions of the statute affecting only the rules of evidence, and not those of pleading.—(Sup. 1853) Bailey v. Ricketts, 4 Ind. 488; (1854) Miller v. Upton, 6 Ind. 53.

[d] (Sup. 1861)

At common law, even where the statute of frauds required a contract to be in writing, and it actually was so, it was not necessary that a copy of the writing should be made a part of the declaration, nor that the declaration should aver that the contract was in writing.—Booker v. Ray, 17 Ind. 522.

[e] (Sup. 1862)

Where a pleading sets up an agreement which the statute of frauds requires to be in writing, either the agreement, a copy thereof, or an excuse for not furnishing either must be given.—Estep v. Burke, 19 Ind. 87.

[f] (Sup. 1866)

As the statute of frauds operates as a rule of evidence, and not as a rule of pleading, it is not necessary, in an action upon a contract for the sale of goods, which, though not in writing, has been rendered valid by a part payment or by delivery to aver in the complaint the receipt by the purchaser of the part of the property, or the giving by him of something in earnest or in part payment.—Harper v. Miller, 27 Ind. 277.

[g] (Sup. 1877)

A contract not alleged to be in writing will be presumed to be by parol, and, if to answer for the debt of another, to be within the statute of frauds.—Langford v. Freeman, 60 Ind. 46.

[h] It will be presumed, in the absence of any contrary allegation or showing in a pleading setting up an agreement which, if not in writing, would be within the statute of frauds, that such agreement rested in parol.—(Sup. 1879) Carlisle v. Brennan, 67 Ind. 12; (1879) Suman v. Springate, Id. 115; (1895) Waymire v. Waymire, 141 Ind. 164, 40 N. E. 523; (App. 1902) Crafton v. Carmichael, 64 N. E. 627, 29 Ind. App. 320; (1904) Yoe v. Newcomb, 33 Ind. App. 615, 71 N. E. 236.

[i] (Sup. 1879)

A complaint upon a parol contract for the sale of goods, which is within 1 Rev. St. 1876, § 7, must set out some of the exceptions, or it will be demurrable.—Krohn v. Bantz, 68 Ind. 277.

[j] Where a contract in relation to land is declared on, and not stated to have been in writing, it will be presumed to have been in parol.—(Sup. 1879) Baynes v. Chastain, 68 Ind. 376; (1882) Jarboe v. Severin, 85 Ind. 496.

[k] (Sup. 1881)

An instrument to secure performance of an agreement to convey land was sued upon as a contract. Its terms were not stated, and, for all that appeared, it might have been a parol agreement. Held, that the statute might be successfully pleaded.—Pulse v. Miller, 81 Ind. 190.

[l] (Sup. 1897)

Where plaintiff in an action to recover the value of land agreed to be conveyed by defendant to plaintiff in consideration for a deed of other land, executed by plaintiff to defendant, failed to allege that the agreement was in writing, it will be presumed to have been by parol, and therefore within the statute of frauds.—Lowe v. Turpie, 147 Ind. 652, 44 N. E. 25, 47 N. E. 150, 37 L. R. A. 233.

[m] (App. 1897)

Where a pleading does not allege whether a contract is in writing, and it is required to be in writing by the statute of frauds, it is presumed to be in writing.—Boos v. Hinkle, 48 N. E. 383, 18 Ind. App. 509.

[n] (Sup. 1902)

Where the complaint in a suit for the specific performance of a contract to convey land does not state whether the contract is in writing or oral, it will be presumed to be oral.—Horner v. McConnell, 63 N. E. 472, 158 Ind. 280.

[o] (App. 1903)

Where no written contract for a sale of land is pleaded, the presumption is that the contract was oral.—McCoy v. McCoy, 60 N. E. 193, 32 Ind. App. 38, 102 Am. St. Rep. 223.

[p] (Sup. 1906)

A complaint seeking to recover for the breach of a contract to convey land alleged that the land was described as "120 acres of land more or less, owned by H. of Dana, Ind., and located about three miles west of Winamac, Pulaski county, Ind., in sections 17, 18, township 30 N. of range 2 W." Held, that this description was prima facie sufficient, and the complaint need not allege that defendant, H., had only one tract answering such description; but if he in fact had more than one tract answering the description, thereby destroying the means of identifying the property, it was a matter of defense.—Howard v. Adkins, 167 Ind. 184, 78 N. E. 665.

[q] (App. 1908)

In an action to foreclose a mortgage against the mortgagor and his grantees, who were merely alleged to have "assumed to pay the mortgage," the contract by which the assumption was made not being alleged to have been in writing, it must not be presumed that it was a parol contract, and not a part of the deed to them.—Southern Indiana Loan & Savings Inst. v. Roberts, 42 Ind. App. 653, 86 N. E. 400.

[r] (App. 1910)

A complaint for the contract price of goods sold, exceeding the value of $50, should show that the contract was in writing, in compliance with the statute of frauds (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 74(6)).—Penn-American Plate Glass Co.

v. Harshaw, Fuller & Goodwin Co., 90 N. E. 1047.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, §§ 353, 354.

§ 149. — Matter in avoidance of bar of statute.

[a] (Sup. 1892)

A complaint on a contract which alleges that the secretary of a school board "willfully and purposely failed and refused" to reduce to writing a contract approved at a certain meeting, employing the plaintiff as teacher from a period commencing at a certain subsequent time, and continuing for a year, but without alleging that defendant fraudulently prevented the reduction of the said contract to writing, is insufficient to take the case out of Rev. St. 1881, § 4904, requiring such contracts, or some memorandum, to be in writing.—Caldwell v. School City of Huntington, 132 Ind. 92, 31 N. E. 566.

[b] (Sup. 1901)

Where plaintiffs contracted in writing to purchase land from defendants, and to make payments therefor from the proceeds of lots sold from the tract, and subsequently defendants by parol agreed as a part of the purchase price to receive lands which plaintiff had received in exchange for some of the lots, allegations of the complaint in an action by plaintiff for damages for defendant's failure to perform to the effect that plaintiffs had expended moneys in laying out the tract into lots, etc., did not show a partial performance, taking the case out of the statute of frauds, since it was apparent that whatever had been done in that direction had been done under the written agreement, not under the parol.—Bradley v. Harter, 60 N. E. 139, 156 Ind. 499.

[c] (Sup. 1901)

Under the statute of frauds (Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6035 [Rev. St. 1881, § 4910; Horner's Rev. St. 1901, § 4910]), providing that an oral contract for the sale of goods of the value of $50 or more shall be void unless the purchaser "shall receive part of such property," or shall give something in earnest to bind the bargain or in part payment, a complaint for the breach of an oral contract for the sale of corn of greater value than $50, which alleged that defendant had "delivered" to the plaintiff a part of the corn, but had refused and neglected to deliver any more, is insufficient, delivery not implying that the goods were "received" by the purchaser under the contract.—Goodwine v. Cadwallader, 61 N. E. 939, 158 Ind. 202.

Where the complainant in a suit for specific performance of an oral contract to convey land relies on a partial performance as removing the contract from the operation of the statute of frauds, the facts showing such performance must be distinctly averred.—Horner v. McConnell, 63 N. E. 472, 158 Ind. 280.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, § 359.

§ 150. Demurrer raising defense.

Necessity of raising defense by plea or demurrer, see post, § 152.

[a] Since, under the Code, a contract not shown to be in writing is presumed to be in parol, if the complaint shows a contract such as should be in writing objection may be made by demurrer.—(Sup. 1873) King v. Enterprise Ins. Co., 45 Ind. 43; (1874) Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hopkins, 49 Ind. 223.

[b] (Sup. 1874)

Where, upon the face of a pleading based upon a contract, it is shown that it was a parol contract, the question whether it was within the statute of frauds may be raised by demurrer or motion in arrest of judgment.—Fall v. Hazelrigg, 45 Ind. 576, 15 Am. Rep. 278.

[c] (Sup. 1879)

Where an agreement or contract set up in a pleading is such as is required by the statute of frauds to be in writing, the objection that it is not shown to have been in writing may be taken by demurrer for want of sufficient facts.—Carlisle v. Brennan, 67 Ind. 12.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 311-315.

§ 151. Pleading statute as defense.

Demurrer raising defense, see ante, § 150.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 311-316.

§ 152. — Necessity.

Issues, proof, and variance, see post, § 156.

[a] (Sup. 1855)

Where, to a bill for specific performance of a parol contract for the sale of land, the answer admitted the verbal contract, but the defendant pleaded the statute of frauds, it was held that the defense must prevail.—Ash v. Daggy, 6 Ind. 259.

[b] (Sup. 1864)

Where the contract sued on is void under the statute of frauds, the objection can be taken at the trial.—McMillen v. Terrell, 23 Ind. 163.

[c] (Sup. 1879)

In a suit for specific performance of a contract to convey land, the objection that the contract is void under the statute of frauds may be offered at the trial, although the statute was not pleaded.—Suman v. Springate, 67 Ind. 115.

[d] (Sup. 1908)

A party may rely on the statute of frauds under the general issue or a general denial.—Indiana Trust Co. v. Finitzer, 67 N. E. 520, 160 Ind. 647.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, §§ 363—366, 371, 372; 44 CENT. DIG. SPEC. PERF. § 110.

§ 155. — Demurrer or reply to plea or answer.

[a] (Sup. 1859)

Where the defense to an action on a verbal contract is that it was not to be performed within a year, it is not a sufficient replication to say that the defendant, for the purpose of committing a fraud on a third party, of which purpose the plaintiff was then ignorant, specially requested the plaintiff that the contract should not be reduced to writing.—Wilson v. Ray, 13 Ind. 1.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, § 369.
See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 315, 316.

§ 156. Issues, proof, and variance.

Defense of statute of frauds under general issue or general denial, see ante, § 152.

[a] (Sup. 1868)

In a suit for specific performance of a contract to convey real estate, where the complaint shows that the agreement to convey was not in writing, and there is no averment that possession of the land was given under the contract, the general denial does not raise the issue of the statute of frauds.—Livesey v. Livesey, 30 Ind. 398.

[b] (Sup. 1874)

In an action against a telegraph company for failure to transmit a dispatch, by reason of which the plaintiff lost the advantage of certain contracts made by him with other parties, the action is not founded on such contracts, but on the contract of the company to send and deliver the dispatch. Therefore said contracts with other parties may be proved, under the allegation of the complaint, to have been in writing.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hopkins, 40 Ind. 223.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, §§ 370—372.
See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 316.

§ 158. Evidence.

Presumption from failure to plead writing or other compliance with statute, see ante, § 148. Presumptions on appeal, see post, § 162.

[a] (Sup. 1863)

Where a certificate of deposit issued by a bank is indorsed in blank by an individual, the legal presumption is that the person placing his name on the back did so as an indorser, and parol evidence is not admissible to show that he signed as a guarantor, as that would have the effect to charge him with the debt of another without writing, in contravention of the statute of frauds.—Drake v. Markle, 21 Ind. 433, 83 Am. Dec. 358.

[b] (Sup. 1864)

If the signature is placed at the close of an instrument, the inference is that it was so placed at the final execution of the instrument. This inference does not necessarily arise where the name is found at the commencement or in the body.—McMillen v. Terrell, 23 Ind. 163.

[c] (Sup. 1864)

A mill was erected under a parol agreement that the owner of the land would satisfy a judgment that stood as a lien on the land, and convey an undivided half thereof to the person erecting the mill, and thereby become the owner of half the mill; the landowner failing to discharge the lien, the mill to remain the property of the person erecting it. Held, in a suit between the person erecting the mill and the purchaser at the sale under an execution levied on the judgment the landowner failed to discharge, that evidence of the parol contract was admissible, as, if acted upon, it would create the relation of landlord and tenant, and give the builder of the mill the right to claim it as a fixture erected for the purpose of manufacture.—Yater v. Mullen, 23 Ind. 562.

[d] (Sup. 1867)

A defendant, in order to avoid liability upon a promise on the ground that it was not reduced to writing, as required by the statute of frauds, must prove facts necessary to bring the engagement within the prohibition of the statute.—Solomon v. Walpole's Adm'r, 27 Ind. 464.

[e] (Sup. 1881)

The return of a sheriff indorsed on an execution being a sufficient memorandum to take the sale of land sold under such execution out of the statute of frauds, it will be presumed that the return was written out by the sheriff at the time of the sale; the date of the return corresponding with the date of the sale.—Jones v. Kokomo Bldg. Ass'n, 77 Ind. 340.

[f] (Sup. 1881)

Where a contract for the sale of lands does not appear to be in writing, it is to be presumed that it was not.—Pulse v. Miller, 81 Ind. 190.

[g] (Sup. 1881)

In a suit for specific performance of a contract to convey real estate, where the contract sued on is within the statute of frauds, the burden is on the plaintiff to show that such things have been done as take the case out of the statute.—Luzader v. Richmond, 27 N. E. 736, 128 Ind. 344.

[b] (App. 1899)

Parol evidence is inadmissible to supply anything which a written proposal needs to make it an agreement of sale so as to be sufficient under the statute.—Sprinkle v. Trulove, 54 N. E. 461, 22 Ind. App. 577.

[i] (Sup. 1902)

Under Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6630, declaring that the consideration of any promise, contract, or agreement within the statute of frauds need not be set forth in writing, but may be proved, where the contract states the consideration indefinitely, parol evidence is admissible to relieve the ambiguity.—Burke v. Mead, 64 N. E. 880, 150 Ind. 252.

[j] (Sup. 1906)

Parol evidence may be given of the situation and relation of the parties and the surrounding circumstances in the construction of a contract governed by the statute of frauds.—Howard v. Adkins, 167 Ind. 184, 78 N. E. 665.

Where the description of land in a contract governed by the statute of frauds is consistent, but incomplete, and its completion does not require contradiction or alteration, nor that a new description should be introduced, parol evidence is admissible to complete the description and identify the property.—Id.

[k] (App. 1906)

Parol evidence is not admissible to supply any essential element of the contract or memorandum so as to take it out of the statute of frauds.—Porter v. Patterson, 42 Ind. App. 404, 55 N. E. 797.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, §§ 373-376.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 316-320.

§ 160. Instructions.

[a] (Sup. 1871)

An instruction that, where one promised to guarantee or warrant the pay to a volunteer which had been promised to be paid by a public meeting, his promise was only collateral, and not binding on him unless in writing, is proper in a case where, if the evidence shows any contract, it has a tendency to show that it was thus collateral.—Drury v. Hunt, 35 Ind. 507.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, § 379.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 321.

§ 162. Review.

[a] (Sup. 1884)

Where it appears in a special finding that a sheriff, at the time of a sale of land by him on execution, wrote and signed a certificate of sale to the purchaser, it will be presumed on appeal that such certificate conformed to the statute, and was therefore sufficient to take the sale out of the statute of frauds.—Elston v. Castor, 101 Ind. 426, 51 Am. Rep. 754.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 23 CENT. DIG. FRDS., ST. OF, § 381.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

Scope-Note.

[INCLUDES transfers of property and other transactions or proceedings void as to creditors because intended or operating to delay, hinder, or defraud them, and conveyances void as to subsequent purchasers for inadequacy of consideration, reservation of power to revoke them, etc.; evidence relating thereto; rights, liabilities, and remedies in general of the parties and those claiming under them, and of creditors and subsequent purchasers, more particularly actions to set aside such transfers; and criminal responsibility for such fraudulent transfers.

[EXCLUDES transfers by husband or by wife fraudulent as to the other (see Husband and Wife); transfers by partners fraudulent as to partnership or individual creditors (see Partnership); mortgages of personal property invalid as to creditors on grounds other than fraud (see Chattel Mortgages); fraud in assignments for benefit of creditors (see Assignments for Benefit of Creditors); transfers fraudulent under insolvent or bankrupt laws (see Insolvency; Bankruptcy); fraud in disposing of property as ground for arrest (see Arrest) or attachment (see Attachment); and proceedings by judgment creditors to subject property to their judgments, either supplementary to execution (see Execution), or by action (see Creditors' Suit). For complete list of matters excluded, see cross-references, post.]

(A) GROUNDS OF INVALIDITY IN GENERAL.

§ 1. Nature of fraud in transfers of property.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

The character of a sale or transfer of property must be judged of by the circumstances existing at the time, and not by subsequent events having no actual connection with the transaction.—Ray v. Simons, 76 Ind. 150.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 461-465.

§ 8. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1849)

A conveyance, to be valid against creditors, must not only be founded on a valuable consideration, but must be also bona fide.—Basye v. Daniel, 1 Ind. 378, Smith, 252.

[b] (Sup. 1884)

A conveyance should not be set aside as in fraud of creditors unless the evidence shows that the debtor did not at the time thereof retain sufficient property to pay his other debts, and that the conveyance was without consideration, or that the grantee was aware of the debtor's intention of defrauding his creditors.—Andrews v. Flanagan, 94 Ind. 383.

Question for jury, see post, § 308.

Verdict and findings, see post, § 310.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence, see post, § 298.

[a] (Sup. 1855)

The inquiry in a suit to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance should always be whether the act done was a bona fide transaction or a mere trick or contrivance to defeat creditors.—Stewart v. English, 6 Ind. 176.

[b] Any sale, contract, or arrangement, whether founded on good consideration or not, if entered into with the intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors, is void as to them.—(Sup. 1859) Rufing v. Tilton, 12 Ind. 259; (1882) Flannagan v. Donaldson, 85 Ind. 517; (1894) Slagle v. Hoover, 137 Ind. 314, 36 N. E. 1099.

[c] (Sup. 1898)

Subsequent creditors can impeach a voluntary deed only by proving the existence of an actual intent in the minds of the parties at the time of the execution of the conveyance to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors by means thereof.—Barrow v. Barrow, 108 Ind. 345, 9 N. E. 371.

[d] (Sup. 1889)

To constitute a transfer of property fraudulent in fact as against creditors, it must be made with intent on the part of the debtor to defraud, delay, or hinder creditors.—Citizens' Bank v. Bolen, 121 Ind. 301, 23 N. E. 146.

[e] (Sup. 1893)

A voluntary conveyance in fraud of creditors may be set aside at the suit of a subsequent creditor, where he avers and proves that such conveyance was made for the purpose of defrauding subsequent, as well as existing, creditors.—Petree v. Brotherton, 133 Ind. 692, 32 N. E. 300.

[f] (Sup. 1895)

If a deed is made and accepted for the fraudulent purpose of cheating, hindering, or delaying creditors, it may be overthrown no matter what may have been the consideration paid therefor, or how pure the motive which induced it.—Gable v. Columbus Cigar Co., 34 N. E. 474, 140 Ind. 563.

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. FRAUD. CONV. §§ 10-14.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 461-465.

§ 11. — Effect of transaction to delay, hinder, or defraud.

[a] (Sup. 1859)

To avoid a transfer, on the ground that it operates to hinder and delay the creditors of the grantor therein, it is not necessary to show that the act of the grantor therein is corruptly fraudulent. If the conveyance hinders and delays creditors, it is fraudulent in law, irrespective of the motives of the grantor.—Ewing v. Gray, 12 Ind. 64.

§ 20. — Fraud as to one or more grantees.

[a] (Sup. 1902)

A mortgage in favor of its creditors by an insolvent corporation, in which it fraudulently preferred stockholders to unsecured creditors, is by such preference rendered void as an entirety unless the contract is such that the legal part thereof may be separated from the illegal.—Reagan v. First Nat. Bank of Chicago, 157 Ind. 623, 61 N. E. 575, 62 N. E. 701.

Where an insolvent corporation executed a mortgage in favor of creditors who accepted the same, and the mortgage was invalid as to preferences therein granted to stockholders over unsecured creditors, the mortgage will be deemed inseverable and invalid as a whole.—Id.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. FRAUD. CONV. § 26.

§ 21. — Fraud in one or more separate conveyances or transactions.

[a] (Sup. 1865)

Though the sale of chattels in part satisfaction of a debt and the transfer of notes at the same time as collateral to the remaining debt were in execution of one agreement, the transactions were nevertheless separable, and hence, if the transfer of the notes was fraudulent, it could not contaminate the sale, if bona fide, of the chattels.—Keen v. Preston, 24 Ind. 395.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

§ 22. Purging transaction of fraud.

[a] (Sup. 1834)

at the time of the first conveyance, is not itself fraudulent.—Second Nat. Bank of Lafayette v. Brady, 96 Ind. 498.

[b] (Sup. 1885)

A conveyance originally made on a secret trust in fraud of creditors may become valid by so modifying the terms of the trust as to give to creditors their rights in the proceeds of the sale to be made by the trustee.—Langdale v. Woollen, 99 Ind. 575.

§ 23. Elements or evidence of fraud in general.

[a] (Sup. 1866)

Upon a sale of personal property, the title passes to the purchaser by a delivery of the property sold, and no bill of sale or conveyance in writing is necessary; but such evidence of the purchase is not improper or illegal of itself, nor is the fact that a witness may be called to attest it. Such precautions are of frequent occurrence, and cannot be deemed badges of fraud.—Kane v. Drake, 27 Ind. 29.

[a] (Sup. 1830)

Where a debtor purchases property and has the conveyance taken in the name of a third person, such conveyance is fraudulent as to his creditors.—Kipper v. Glancey, 2 Blackf. 356.

[b] (Sup. 1880)

Where it appeared, in a suit by a judgment creditor against a debtor, that there had been an execution sale, at which a receipt was given by the sheriff for the amount of the bid, without receiving the money, the receipt will be set aside as void.—McCormick v. Walter A. Wood Mowing & Reaping Mach. Co., 72 Ind. 518.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

§ 26. Absolute transfers.

[a] (Sup. 1879)

A voluntary deed placed on record by the grantor, but never delivered to the grantee nor accepted by him, is inoperative to convey the grantor's title as against his creditors.—Tharp v. Jarrell, 66 Ind. 52.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. §§ 61-65.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 446.

§ 29. Collusive legal proceedings in general.

[a] (Sup. 1873)

The property of an insolvent debtor may be seized and sold on an execution issued on a judgment which was entered on proof of a bona fide debt, though the debtor voluntarily entered his appearance in the action wherein the judgment was rendered at a time when he contemplated an assignment.—McGoldrick v. Slevin, 43 Ind. 522.

[b] (Sup. 1884)

Where a debtor, 12 days before a voluntary assignment, conveyed $5,700 worth of property by mortgages to his sister, his uncle, and his attorney, to secure $1,400, and shortly after the assignment the mortgages were foreclosed, the assignee making voluntary appearance and the three mortgagees assenting to the sale of the goods in entirety, there was such evidence of collusion as justified the creditors in suing for conversion of the property.—Wright v. Mack, 95 Ind. 332; Mathews v. Same, Id. 431.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. §§ 72, 76-78, 81.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 397-403.

§ 31. Suffering levy of attachment or execution.

[a] (Sup. 1872)

That a judgment debtor suffered certain mortgaged premises to be sold on execution, subject to incumbrances, for a nominal sum, is not sufficient to constitute fraud on the part of the judgment debtor.—Lippperd v. Edwards, 39 Ind. 165.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. §§ 72, 79, 80, 82; 21 CENT. DIG. Execution, §§ 237, 738.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 402, 403.

§ 32. Suffering loss of property.

[a] (Sup. 1871)

A complaint alleging that the holder of a certificate of purchase of public lands combined and confederated with his wife for the fraudulent purpose of depriving a creditor of a lien on such land, and, in pursuance of such purpose, failed to pay the interest on his purchase, so as to cause a forfeiture to the state, whereupon he caused the officers of the sinking fund to offer the land for sale at public auction, when it was purchased by his wife, and that the wife took the conveyance with full knowledge of the creditor's rights, while the debtor, by false representations to the creditor that the interest on the purchase was paid, kept him in ignorance of the forfeiture and resale of the land, sufficiently alleges a fraudulent transaction, so as to entitle the creditor to relief against the wife's title.—Truitt v. Truitt, 87 Ind. 514.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

A surrender of notes and mortgage without consideration, and with an intent to defraud creditors, is void, under 1 Rev. St. 1876, p. 506, making void all conveyances or assignments "of any estate in land, or of goods or things in action, every charge upon lands, goods, or things in action, and all bonds, contracts, evidences of debt, judgments, decrees," etc., contrary to the common law, whereby the property must have been such as could have been taken on execution.—Johnson v. Jones, 79 Ind. 141.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. §§ 49, 50.

§ 33. Release of right to conveyance, or reconveyance.

[a] (Sup. 1858)

An agreement, by one entitled to a conveyance, that the grantor shall remain in possession and shall not convey, in order to cover the land from the grantee's creditors, amounts to a conveyance to defraud, under 2 Rev. St. p. 154, § 526.—Pennington v. Clifton, 11 Ind. 162.

As lands the legal title to which the debtor is entitled, but refuses to take in order to defraud creditors are subject to execution under 2 Rev. St. p. 154, § 526, enacting that "lands fraudulently conveyed with intent to delay or defraud creditors" shall be so subject, the creditors entitled to take the land on execution may proceed to settle the title by suit before levy and sale, or it may be settled and perfected in a suit brought by the purchaser at the execution sale.—Id.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. §§ 50, 51.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 406.

§ 39. Payment of premiums for insurance.

[a] (Sup. 1879)

A. took out a policy of insurance on his life, payable to his wife in trust for her and her children, paid the premiums for three years, and then made an assignment of his property for the benefit of his creditors. Soon after he surrendered this policy to the company, receiving in return the sum of $40 and a new policy, also payable to his wife, with annual premiums thereon paid up for two years. In the following year A. died, and the assignee brought suit for the amount of the policy, claiming that it was fraudulent as to creditors, and had passed to him by the assignment; that A. was insolvent at the time he took out the first policy; and that he remained so until his death. Held, that the new policy was certainly not fraudulent, and that, as the complaint did not allege that the first one had been obtained with any fraudulent intent, but simply that A. was then insolvent, and not that he knew or believed at the time that he was so, the court could not say, in view of the facts, that it was fraudulent as to creditors.—Foster v. Brown, 65 Ind. 234.

The law favors the making of a reasonable provision by a man for his family and those who are dependent upon him, and it is not a violation of the statute and in fraud of creditors for a debtor, though insolvent, to contribute and pay a reasonable amount for insurance for the benefit of his family.—Johnson v. Alexander, 25 N. E. 706, 125 Ind. 575, 9 L. R. A. 600.

A debtor took out a policy upon his life, and, after holding it a short time, in good faith, transferred it by indorsement to certain of his creditors, and took from them an agreement by which they were to pay the premiums, and, from the proceeds, when paid, retain the amount due, and pay any surplus to his heirs or to his order. He died without making any further order as to the proceeds of the policy. Held, that the transfer was not in fraud of creditors, but was complete and valid, and transferred the surplus to the heirs.—Id.

[c] (App. 1897)

Where the insured, prior to his death, by a written communication directed the general agent of the insurer to transfer his policy payable to his estate to his wife, and died before the transfer was actually made, such transfer of the policy was valid, and not in fraud of creditors.—State ex rel. Wright v. Tomlinson, 45 N. E. 1116, 16 Ind. App. 662, 59 Am. St. Rep. 335.

Where a husband took out a life policy in January, 1892, and assigned it to his wife in March, 1894, at which date he died, the transfer was valid, and not in fraud of creditors, except as to the amount of the premium paid for the two years.—Id.

§ 44. Interest of debtor in property in general.

[a] (Sup. 1854)

A debtor may sell his equitable interest, if it be done without fraud, before a bill is filed by a creditor to enforce the payment of his judgment out of such equitable estate.—Russell v. Houston, 5 Ind. 190.

[b] (Sup. 1835)

To a complaint to set aside an alleged fraudulent deed, an answer stating that the deed was drawn up in the debtor's name as grantee, that it was never delivered, that the grantor intended to give the land to his daughter, the debtor's wife, and that at his request he made another deed conveying the land to her, held good, if for no other reason than that the deed was never delivered to the husband, and hence he never had any title to the property which his creditors could reach.—Bremmerman v. Jennings, 101 Ind. 253.

[c] (Sup. 1906)

Husband and wife contracted for purchase of land to be conveyed to them as tenants by the entireties. Thereafter they paid for it, and at the request of the wife had it conveyed to the husband, under agreement between them that he should have the title quieted at his expense, and then have it conveyed so as to vest the title in them as tenants by the entireties, which he did. Held that, husband and wife having acquired the equitable title by their contract of purchase, and it having remained in them when the deed was made to him, the question of whether there was a conveyance in fraud of his creditors was to be determined as of the time of the purchase and the deed to him, and as though the deed had then been made to both.—Cannon v. Castleman, 73 N. E. 680, 164 Ind. 343.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. §§ 102-104.

§ 46. Personal property in general.

[a] (Sup. 1874)

Shares of stock in an incorporated company being liable by statute to levy and sale on execution, a judgment creditor may maintain an action against the judgment defendant and his assignee to set aside a fraudulent sale of such stock to the latter.—Scott v. Indianapolis Wagon Works, 48 Ind. 75.

[b] (Sup. 1885)

A creditor may maintain a bill against the debtor and his assignee, to set aside a fraudulent transfer of the capital stock of a corporation.—Quari v. Abbett, 102 Ind. 233, 1 N. E. 476, 52 Am. St. Rep. 662.

[c] (Sup. 1888)

Where a husband, having no property subject to execution, gives his wife a sum of money, with intent to defraud his creditors, which facts the wife knew, and the wife still holds the money, and has not accounted therefor, it may be reached in equity by the husband's judgment creditors.—Blair v. Smith, 114 Ind. 114, 15 N. E. 817, 5 Am. St. Rep. 503.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

§ 49. Particular estates and interests.

[a] (Sup. 1883)

Rev. St. 1881, §§ 2974, 2976, provide that where a conveyance for a valuable consideration is made to one person, and the consideration therefor is paid another, a resulting trust shall arise in favor of the latter individual, if it shall be made to appear that by agreement and without any fraudulent intent the party in whom the title is vested was to hold the land in trust for the one paying the purchase money. Held, in a suit by a creditor to set aside his debtor's conveyance as fraudulent, that the grantee's answer that the property in controversy was purchased with her own separate funds, and by mutual agreement and without fraudulent intent the deed was made to the debtor as her trustee, and that he so held the land as her trustee up to the time of the conveyance assailed as fraudulent, and her further answer that the grantee paid the purchase money, but that the title was, without her knowledge or consent, made to the debtor, who held as her trustee, stated good defenses under the above statute.—Robertson v. Huffman, 92 Ind. 247.

[b] (Sup. 1894)

An agreement by a husband with his wife to take a specified sum of money named in her will in lieu of his dower interest in her lands, provided that she allowed the will to stand as made, is valid as against creditors of the husband whose claims were in judgment prior to the agreement.—Huffman v. Copeland, 139 Ind. 221, 38 N. E. 861.

[c] (App. 1900)

A conveyance of land, held by the heir in trust for all the heirs, to another, in compliance with a parol agreement and upon a sufficient consideration, is valid as against the trustee's creditors.—Fraser v. Churchman, 43 Ind. App. 200, 86 N. E. 1029.

§ 50. Property or rights without pecuniary value.

Necessity of alleging value in action to set aside conveyance, see post, §§ 259, 263.

Verdict and findings as to value, see post, § 310.

[a] (App. 1903)

Where, in an action to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance of property, it appeared that the property was worth $1,200, and was mortgaged for $900; that defendant was entitled to an exemption of $600; and that his wife's interest, not subject to execution, amounted to $700,—there was nothing which could be applied on the judgment, even if the conveyance was vacated, and a judgment in favor of the creditor was erroneous.—Jackson v. Saylor, 63 N. E. 881, 30 Ind. App. 72.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

§ 51. Exempt property in general.

Mortgage pending execution, see EXECUTION, § 115.

Pleading, see post, §§ 266, 269.

Presumptions and burden of proof, see post, § 271.

[a] (Sup. 1848)

If, between the times of the rendition of judgment and the issuing of execution, an execution defendant fraudulently conveys all his property to a third person, and it is afterwards levied on to satisfy the execution, he is not entitled to hold $125 worth of the property exempt from execution.—Mandlove v. Burton, 1 Ind. 39, Smith, 3.

[b] As exempt property cannot be taken in satisfaction of debts, a conveyance thereof is not invalid because voluntary, nor because it was executed with intent to hinder and delay creditors.—(Sup. 1886) Burdge v. Bolin, 106 Ind. 175, 6 N. E. 140, 55 Am. Rep. 724; (1888) Phelps v. Smith, 116 Ind. 387, 17 N. E. 602, 19 N. E. 156; (1899) Goudy v. Werbe, 117 Ind.

154, 19 N. E. 764, 3 L. R. A. 114; (1889) Ray v. Yarnell, 118 Ind. 112, 20 N. E. 705; (1889) Citizens' Bank v. Bolen, 121 Ind. 301, 23 N. E. 146.

[c] (Sup. 1886)

As a general rule, a voluntary conveyance, made by an insolvent debtor who has not sufficient other property subject to execution to pay his debts, is constructively fraudulent as against existing creditors; but this is true only where the property so disposed of was not at the time exempt from execution, but such as the creditor might have reached in the hands of the debtor.—Faurote v. Carr, 108 Ind. 123, 9 N. E. 350.

[d] A debtor's conveyance of exempt property cannot be fraudulent as to creditors.—(Sup. 1888) Blair v. Smith, 15 N. E. 817, 114 Ind. 114, 5 Am. St. Rep. 593; (1897) Igrigg v. Pauley, 47 N. E. 821, 148 Ind. 436; (App. 1897) Kolb v. Raiser, 47 N. E. 177, 17 Ind. App. 551.

Where a conveyance of land is set aside as fraudulent, and the property sold, the debtor cannot claim a portion of the proceeds as exempt from execution.—Chandler v. Jessup, 132 Ind. 351, 31 N. E. 1109.

[f] (Sup. 1893)

A fraudulent grantor cannot set up an after-acquired right of exemption as a defense to an action to set aside a conveyance; his rights being determined by the conditions existing at the time of the conveyance.—Phenix Ins. Co. v. Fielder, 33 N. E. 270, 133 Ind. 557.

[g] (Sup. 1897)

The interest of a wife in her husband's land, to the extent of one-third its value, is not the subject of a fraudulent conveyance.—Igrigg v. Pauley, 47 N. E. 821, 148 Ind. 436.

[h] (Sup. 1898)

Property conveyed by a husband to his wife, though with intention, known to her, to defraud his creditors, cannot be reached by them, he being a householder, and the value of his wife's inchoate interest therein, and his exemption of $600, and liens on the property senior to such creditors, being equal to the value thereof.—Marimon v. White, 51 N. E. 930, 151 Ind. 445.

[i] (Sup. 1907)

The owner of exempt property has the absolute right to transfer the same, and in doing so cannot legally be charged with defrauding his creditors, or with intent to do so.—Stark v. Lamb, 167 Ind. 642, 78 N. E. 668, 79 N. E. 895.

§ 52. Homestead.

[a] (Sup. 1886)

As a general rule a voluntary conveyance made by an insolvent debtor who has not sufficient other property subject to execution to pay his debts, is constructively fraudulent, as against existing creditors; but this is true only where the property so disposed of was not at the time exempt from execution, but such as the creditor might have reached in the hands of the debtor.—Faurote v. Carr, 108 Ind. 123, 9 N. E. 350.

[b] (Sup. 1887)

As a debtor's homestead is not subject to the demands of his creditors, a conveyance thereof, whether made with or without consideration, and irrespective of the intent of the parties, cannot be set aside as fraudulent as to creditors.—Taylor v. Duesterberg, 109 Ind. 165, 9 N. E. 907.

[c] (Sup. 1891)

A conveyance is not fraudulent where the value of the property conveyed, after deducting valid liens, does not exceed the amount of the grantor's statutory exemption.—Nichols, Shepherd & Co. v. Burch, 128 Ind. 324, 27 N. E. 737.

[d] (Sup. 1893)

Where defendant seeks to defeat an action to set aside a conveyance by her as fraudulent by showing that the property conveyed was exempt, she must show that the right of exemption existed at the time the alleged fraudulent conveyance was made, and an allegation that such right existed at the time the answer was filed is not sufficient.—Phenix Ins. Co. v. Fielder, 133 Ind. 557, 33 N. E. 270.

[e] (Sup. 1900)

Where the value of an interest in land does not exceed $600, which is exempt from execution by statute, a conveyance thereof will not be held fraudulent as to the grantor's creditors.—Hedrick v. Hall, 58 N. E. 257, 155 Ind. 371.

§ 53. Property in other state or county.

[a] (Sup. 1875)

A conveyance by the judgment defendant, after the rendition of the judgment, of lands belonging to him in another county than that in which the judgment is rendered, is not a fraud on the judgment plaintiff as the judgment is not a lien on such lands.—Baker v. Chandler, 51 Ind. 85.

[a] (Sup. 1845)

That a person was deeply involved in debt when he executed a voluntary conveyance of land is strong evidence that the conveyance was made to defraud subsequent purchasers.—Paine v. Doe ex dem. Griffin, 7 Blackf. 485.

[b] (Sup. 1845)

A voluntary conveyance of real estate is not void as to subsequent creditors merely because the grantor was indebted $25 or $30 at the date of the deed.—Doe ex dem. Abbott v. Hurd, 7 Blackf. 510.

[c] (Sup. 1853)

A voluntary conveyance of lands made by father to son, to prevent their being subjected to the payment of his debts—whether he is indebted as principal or surety—may be set aside by his creditors, and the land may be subjected to the payment of their debts.—Law v. Smith, 4 Ind. 56.

[d] (Sup. 1853)

Mere indebtedness of the grantor at the time of making a voluntary conveyance will not render it fraudulent as to creditors.—Hubbs v. Bancroft, 4 Ind. 388.

Indebtedness on the part of a grantor at the time of the conveyance is a badge of fraud.—Id.

[e] (Sup. 1886)

Where the good faith of a sale or conveyance of property is in issue, it is competent to show that the vendor or grantor was embarrassed financially when the sale or conveyance was made.—Geisendorff v. Eagles, 106 Ind. 38, 5 N. E. 743.

[f] (Sup. 1889)

A conveyance by a surety on a guardian's bond may be set aside as fraudulent, though there was no breach of the bond when the conveyance was made.—Bowen v. State ex rel. Bradbury, 121 Ind. 235, 23 N. E. 75.

§ 55. Assumption of debts by grantee.

[a] (Sup. 1897)

§ 57. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1876)

Plaintiff's evidence established that the debtor, prior to his becoming indebted to plaintiff, had acquired title to land; that subsequent to the incurring of such debt the debtor and his wife conveyed the land to a third person, who conveyed the same to the debtor's wife; that, though both of said conveyances purported to be for a valuable consideration, yet no consideration for either passed between the parties thereto; that about two years afterward the plaintiff recovered a judgment against the debtor for the amount of said debt; and that, an execution on such judgment having been issued to the proper officer, the debtor had then no property subject to execution, and such writ was returned "unsatisfied." Held, that fraud in the execution of such conveyances was not deducible from such evidence, and could not be presumed in the absence of evidence that, at the time such alleged fraudulent conveyances were made, the debtor did not have sufficient property left to pay his debts, and the debtor had procured the making of such conveyances with the intent to defraud his creditors, that the wife had knowledge of such intent, and that no consideration had passed between her and her husband for the making of such conveyances.—Fagan v. Downing, 55 Ind. 65.

[b] (Sup. 1882)

If the grantor is solvent at the time the grant was made, his subsequent insolvency will not render it invalid.—Dunn v. Dunn, 82 Ind. 42; Barkley v. Tapp, 87 Ind. 25.

[c] (Sup. 1884)

Where the grantor is solvent when the conveyance is made, his subsequent insolvency does not affect the validity of the conveyance.—Masters v. Templeton, 92 Ind. 447.

[d] (Sup. 1888)

Where a husband whose remaining property subject to execution is amply sufficient to pay his debts makes a gift of money to his wife, immediately borrowing it from her, and securing its payment by note, and thereafter suffers judgment on the note, and seizure of his property on execution, with intent to defraud his creditors, the wife is not liable to a creditor of the husband for the goods seized, although she had notice of her husband's fraudulent intent in suffering judgment and seizure of the goods.—Phelps v. Smith, 116 Ind. 387, 17 N. E. 602, 19 N. E. 156.

[e] (Sup. 1892)

A solvent person is not guilty of fraud in making a voluntary conveyance of his property.—Bright v. Bright, 31 N. E. 470, 132 Ind. 56.

[f] (Sup. 1894)

Defendant's father-in-law paid part of the price of land bought by defendant, on condition that defendant should convey it, with other land, to his wife, and defendant conveyed it according to the agreement. At that time, defendant was surety on a note for $500, which had matured, but which was not put to judgment till several years later. At the time of the conveyance the principal debtor was worth over $15,000, and defendant was worth $1,000, besides the land conveyed. Held, that the conveyance was not fraudulent.—Boyd v. Vickery, 138 Ind. 276, 37 N. E. 972.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. §§ 138-142, 148, 150-158.

§ 58. — Retention of property sufficient to pay debts.

Element of fraud in general, see ante, § 8. Presumptions and burden of proof, see post, § 272.

[a] (Sup. 1871)

To sustain an action to set aside a conveyance alleged to be fraudulent and subject the property for payment of the creditor's claim, it must be alleged and proved that the judgment debtor does not possess other property subject to sale for the payment of the claim.—Ewing v. Patterson, 35 Ind. 326.

[aa] (Sup. 1872)

A voluntary conveyance to a wife cannot be impeached by the creditors of the grantor merely upon the ground of his indebtedness at the time of the conveyance, if he retains sufficient property with which to discharge his debts.—Brookbank v. Kennard, 41 Ind. 339.

[b] A creditor of a grantor attacking as fraudulent a conveyance by the latter must aver and prove that at the time of making the same, as well as when suit was brought, such grantor did not have sufficient other property subject to execution to pay all his debts.—(Sup. 1876) Sherman v. Hogland, 54 Ind. 578; (1883) Eve v. Louis, 91 Ind. 457; (1891) McConnell v. Citizens' State Bank of Petersburg, 27 N. E. 616, 130 Ind. 127; (1894) Nevers v. Hack, 37 N. E. 791, 138 Ind. 260, 46 Am. St. Rep. 380; (1894) Boyd v. Vickery, 37 N. E. 972, 138 Ind. 276.

[c] Courts will not interfere to set aside a conveyance, as fraudulent against creditors, if it appear that there is property other than that conveyed out of which their claims can be satisfied.—(Sup. 1877) Bentley v. Dunkle, 57 Ind. 374; (1894) Emerson v. Opp, 130 Ind. 27, 38 N. E. 330.

[d] (Sup. 1877)

The act of a debtor in surrendering a policy of insurance on his life payable to himself, and taking another payable to his mother, it not being shown that he did not have at the time sufficient property to pay all of his debts, is not fraudulent as to creditors on the part of either the debtor or the mother.—Langford v. Freeman, 60 Ind. 46.

[e] (Sup. 1878)

Where a debtor conveys property without consideration during the pendency of an action against him, and the property is afterwards levied on and sold under execution issued on the judgment recovered in such action, the purchaser cannot recover the possession of the property without showing that at the time of the conveyance the debtor had no other property subject to execution.—Holman v. Elliott, 65 Ind. 78.

[f] (Sup. 1880)

To entitle a creditor to set aside his debtor's conveyance as fraudulent, it must appear that the debtor did not have other property at the time of making the conveyance, sufficient to satisfy the creditors' claims, since a debtor has a right to make whatever disposition he pleases of property, so long as in doing so he works no injury to his creditors.—Noble v. Hines, 72 Ind. 12.

[g] (Sup. 1881)

A debtor's fraudulent conveyance cannot be set aside at the instance of creditors, unless it appears that at the time of making it he had no other property out of which creditors' claims could have been satisfied.—McCole v. Loehr, 79 Ind. 430.

[h] (Sup. 1881)

In a suit to set aside a conveyance by plaintiff's debtor on the ground that it was without consideration, it must be shown that the grantor had not enough property left subject to execution to pay all his debts.—Jennings v. Howard, 80 Ind. 214.

[i] (Sup. 1882)

A creditor must show that the grantor, when he made the conveyance attacked as fraudulent and at the time suit was brought, had no other property sufficient to set aside his debts.—Bishop v. State ex rel. Lord, 83 Ind. 67.

[j] (Sup. 1882)

Where a conveyance is charged to have been made with fraudulent intent as against creditors, it need not be shown that after the conveyance the debtor did not have sufficient property to pay his debts.—Flannagan v. Donaldson, 85 Ind. 517.

[k] (Sup. 1883)

Where a judgment creditor purchases lands fraudulently conveyed and then brings an action of ejectment or a suit to quiet title, he must show the fraudulent character of the conveyance, and show that at the time of the execution of the conveyance and sale on execution the judgment debtor did not have other property subject to execution sufficient to pay his debts.—Eve v. Louis, 91 Ind. 457.

When a debtor purchases property with money which might have been subjected to the payment of his debts, and takes title in the name of a volunteer for the purpose of defrauding his creditors, such creditors may subject it to the payment of their claims, unless at the time of the conveyance or the bringing of the suit, the debtor had other property subject to execution sufficient to enable the debt to be collected by ordinary process.—Eller v. Crull, 112 Ind. 318, 14 N. E. 79.

A conveyance in fraud of his creditors is subject to the payment of their claims, unless at the time of the conveyance, or the bringing of the suit, the debtor had other property sufficient to enable the debt to be collected by ordinary process; but if the debtor has other property which cannot be reached by execution and which he refuses to apply to the satisfaction of the debt, so that the creditor is required to resort to an extraordinary remedy, he may proceed against property fraudulently conveyed, and it is no defense for the debtor to show that he had property, not subject to execution, out of which he might have paid the debt, if he had chosen so to do.—Id.

[m] (Sup. 1888)

The complaint is fatally defective, unless it show, not only that the grantor had no other property subject to execution at the time of the conveyance, but also that he had no such property at the commencement of the action.—Taylor v. Johnson, 113 Ind. 104, 15 N. E. 238.

[n] (Sup. 1889)

Though a debtor's conveyance is made for the purpose of defeating creditors, yet if, after its execution, the debtor still has sufficient property to satisfy his liabilities, the conveyance will be sustained, since it has worked no injury to his creditors.—Sell v. Bailey, 119 Ind. 51, 21 N. E. 338.

[o] (Sup. 1885)

Plaintiff's debtor made a conveyance of property without consideration, and with the admitted intention of defrauding creditors other than plaintiff, and thereafter was without sufficient property to satisfy plaintiff's claim. Held, that plaintiff was within Rev. St. 1881, § 4920 (Rev. St. 1894, § 6645), providing that conveyances made in fraud of creditors are void as to the "person sought to be defrauded."—Personette v. Cronkhite, 140 Ind. 586, 40 N. E. 59.

[p] (App. 1905)

A suit to set aside a mortgage as fraudulent is governed by the same rules which obtain in actions to set aside fraudulent conveyances, and plaintiff therein must show that at the time of the execution of the mortgage and at the time suit was brought the mortgagor did not have enough property subject to execution to pay his debts, or to pay plaintiff's judgment, after satisfying the mortgage.—Dinius v. Lahr, 74 N. E. 1033, 36 Ind. App. 425.

[q] (App. 1905)

A distributee assigned his interest in the estate of his intestate without any valuable consideration. The assignment was made for the purpose of defrauding the distributee's creditors. There was nothing to show that the distributee did not have other property sufficient to satisfy a judgment against him, nor did it appear that any attempt had been made to collect the judgment by ordinary processes of law, nor that the distributee was insolvent. Held, that the assignee acquired the distributee's interest in the estate as against the judgment creditor.—Ritchey v. McKay, 75 N. E. 101, 1090, 36 Ind. App. 539.

The solvency of the sureties on a bond is immaterial to the right of the person secured thereby to have a fraudulent conveyance of land by the principal set aside, so as to subject such land to payment for the breach of the bond.—State ex rel. Little v. Parsons, 47 N. E. 17, 147 Ind. 579, 62 Am. St. Rep. 430.

[b] (Sup. 1860)

The insolvency of the owner does not invalidate a sale, if no liens have attached.—McTaggart v. Rose, 14 Ind. 230.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

In an action to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance, the mere fact that at the time of the conveyance the debtor had not enough unincumbered property to pay his debts held not to be conclusive evidence of fraud.—Wooters v. Osborn, 77 Ind. 513.

One who attacks a conveyance on the ground of fraud must prove the insolvency of the grantor.—Pennington v. Flock, 93 Ind. 378.

[a] (Sup. 1882)

Where land was given to a husband with which to buy land for his wife, and, without her knowledge, he placed the title in his own name, he became a trustee for his wife; and the fact that she delayed to enforce the trust for 20 years, during which time the husband paid the taxes on it and improved it, does not show that a deed made by him to her at the end of such time was fraudulent as to his creditors.—Bishop v. State ex rel. Lord, 83 Ind. 67.

[b] (Sup. 1885)

A joinder by a husband in a conveyance to a trustee for his wife, made for the purpose of clearing her title and correcting a mistake, is valid as against his creditors.—Bremnerman v. Jennings, 101 Ind. 253.

§ 66. — Pending actions or other proceedings.

[a] (Sup. 1849)

A conveyance made pending a suit against the grantor, for the purpose of preventing the collection of such damages as might be recovered, and with knowledge of the purchaser that it was so made, may be set aside at the instance of the plaintiff in such suit, after judgment for him therein, whether made with or without adequate consideration.—Wright v. Brandis, 1 Ind. 336.

[b] (Sup. 1853)

A conveyance made by a vendor during the pendency of a suit against him, by fraud with the vendee, to prevent the collection of a judgment, will be set aside in equity; and the fact that the vendee paid a full consideration for the land will make no difference. He must show, in addition, that he purchased in good faith, innocent of any knowledge of or participation in, the fraudulent designs of the vendor.—Rogers v. Evans, 3 Ind. 574, 56 Am. Dec. 537.

[c] (Sup. 1853)

A debtor who held title to land by title bond, and who had paid the purchase money, being sued at law for a debt, in order to prevent the land from being sold for the payment of the judgment, caused it to be conveyed without consideration during the pendency of the suit to his son, who had knowledge of the suit and received the conveyance in order to prevent a sale of the land to satisfy the expected judgment. The debtor continued in possession of the property. Held, that the land was subject to the claim of the judgment creditor.—Corwin v. Reddington, 4 Ind. 198.

[d] (Sup. 1871)

Where, at the time of a conveyance of a debtor's land, an attachment had been delivered to the sheriff, but had not been levied, of which the grantee had no knowledge, and the attachment was not levied, but was thereafter dismissed, the conveyance is not affected or rendered fraudulent by the pendency of the attachment.—Lowry v. Howard, 35 Ind. 170, 9 Am. Rep. 676.

Merely pendency of suit against him will not preclude a debtor from conveying his property in good faith for a good consideration.—Id.

[e] (Sup. 1873)

An action was commenced on November 26th for the recovery of damages for the speaking of slanderous words on August 1st preceding. The defendants, to avoid liability for damages, had on November 17th fraudulently conveyed their real estate to their children without valuable consideration; the grantees having notice of such fraudulent intent. Held, that these facts were sufficient to subject the property to the judgment against the defendants obtained in the action, and it was unimportant whether the deed was delivered before or after the commencement of the action.—Shean v. Shay, 42 Ind. 375, 13 Am. Rep. 366.

[f] (Sup. 1882)

The debt for costs in a cause adjudged to the defendant accrues at the time that the judgment is rendered, and not before.—Stevens v. Works, 81 Ind. 445.

§ 69. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1829)

A conveyance of real estate pending an action against the grantor does not of itself render such conveyance void as to a subsequent creditor.—Ray v. Roe ex dem. Brown, 2 Blackf. 258.

[b] An intent to defraud existing creditors also shows an intent to defraud future creditors.—(Sup. 1859) Rufing v. Tilton, 12 Ind. 259; (1861) Dart v. Stewart, 17 Ind. 221.

[c] (Sup. 1888)

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 4924, providing that "the question of fraudulent intent in all cases arising under the provisions of this act shall be deemed a question of fact, nor shall such a conveyance be adjudged fraudulent as against creditors or purchasers solely on the ground that it was not founded on a valuable consideration," where a husband whose remaining property subject to execution is amply sufficient to pay his debts conveys land without consideration so as to place it beyond the reach of creditors, the grantee immediately reconveying to him and his wife as tenants by entireties, such conveyances are not fraudulent as to subsequent creditors; no actual fraud on the part of either the husband or wife having been found.—Phelps v. Smith, 116 Ind. 387, 17 N. E. 602, 19 N. E. 156.

[d] (Sup. 1895)

A deed may be set aside as fraudulent where it was executed for the purpose of preventing the property from becoming subject to the payment of the grantor's debts whenever they may accrue.—(Gable v. Columbus Cigar Co., 38 N. E. 474, 140 Ind. 563.

§ 74. — As to creditors.

[a] A debtor may sell his property to pay his debts for such consideration as he may agree to accept, and, if there is nothing illegal in the transaction, it will be good as against his creditors.—(Sup. 1853) Hubbs v. Bancroft, 4 Ind. 388; (1857) Frank v. Peters, 9 Ind. 343; (1871) Lowry v. Howard, 35 Ind. 170, 9 Am. Rep. 676.

[b] (Sup. 1853)

Inadequacy of consideration is a badge of fraud.—Hubbs v. Bancroft, 4 Ind. 388.

[c] (Sup. 1856)

The payment of a full price for land does not purify a fraudulent transaction; but yet such payment is entitled to great weight, where the proof of fraud is not clear.—Kittering v. Parker, 8 Ind. 44.

[d] A conveyance without consideration is not necessarily fraudulent as to an existing creditor.—(Sup. 1872) Parton v. Yates, 41 Ind. 456; (1882) Dunn v. Dunn, 82 Ind. 42.

[e] (Sup. 1879)

A conveyance is not fraudulent merely because it is voluntary.—Hardy v. Mitchell, 67 Ind. 485.

[f] (Sup. 1881)

Fraud in the sale of goods will not be inferred from inadequacy of consideration, unless such inadequacy is so great as to impress every person with its grossness.—Cagney v. Cuson, 77 Ind. 494.

[g] (Sup. 1881)

A man cannot make a gift of his property, and thus take it from his creditors.—McCole v. Loehr, 79 Ind. 430.

[h] (Sup. 1882)

Want of a valuable consideration alone does not raise a presumption of fraud.—Bishop v. State ex rel. Lord, 83 Ind. 67.

[i] A conveyance made without consideration, for the purpose of defrauding creditors of the grantor, is void as to such creditors.—(Sup. 1882) Hes v. Cox, 83 Ind. 577; (1883) Meredith v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 92 Ind. 343; (1892) York v. Rockwood, 132 Ind. 358, 31 N. E. 1110; (1896) Gilliland v. Jones, 144 Ind. 662, 43 N. E. 939, 55 Am. St. Rep. 210.

[j] (Sup. 1882)

A voluntary conveyance of land is fraudulent in law, as against the mortgagor's creditors who are thereby prejudiced, even though there may have been no fraudulent motive on the part of the grantor or grantee, or they may have been ignorant of the claim of the defrauded creditor.—Cavanaugh v. Smith, 84 Ind. 380.

[k] (Sup. 1884)

A voluntary conveyance by a debtor, who at the time had no other property subject to execution, may be avoided by his creditors as fraudulent.—Williams v. Osborne, 95 Ind. 347.

[l] (Sup. 1886)

Subsequent creditors can impeach a voluntary deed only by proving the existence of an actual intent in the minds of the parties at the time of the execution of the conveyance to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors by means thereof.—Barrow v. Barrow, 108 Ind. 345, 9 N. E. 371.

[m] (Sup. 1888)

A voluntary conveyance is void as to existing creditors of a grantor, though there was no fraudulent intent in making it.—Heaton v. Shanklin, 115 Ind. 595, 18 N. E. 172.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. §§ 186-190.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 511-517; note, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 395; note, 14 Am. St. Rep. 739.

§ 75. — As to subsequent purchasers.

[a] (Sup. 1832)

A voluntary deed of conveyance, though not recorded, is valid against any subsequent voluntary conveyance of the same land by the grantor.—Way v. Lyon, 3 Blackf. 76.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. § 191.

§ 76. Nature and adequacy.

[a] (Sup. 1853)

A conveyance of land to a husband, in satisfaction of a claim for damages for the seduction of his wife, is valid; there being no fraud on the part of the grantee against the creditors of the grantor.—Carlisle v. Gaskill, 4 Ind. 219.

[b] (Sup. 1871)

Where it is charged that a conveyance is fraudulent as to the grantor's creditors, the nature and amount of the consideration are important evidence with reference to the good faith of the transaction.—Lowry v. Howard, 35 Ind. 170, 9 Am. Rep. 676.

[c] (Sup. 1875)

Under 1 Gav. & H. St. p. 353, § 21, a conveyance of real estate or charge on the same cannot be adjudged fraudulent as against creditors or purchasers solely on the ground of there having been no valuable consideration for the same.—Pence v. Croan, 51 Ind. 336.

[d] (Sup. 1886)

Where there is an equitable consideration, a debtor may, notwithstanding the objections of his creditors, perform his contract.—Wright v. Jones, 4 N. E. 281, 105 Ind. 17.

[e] (App. 1901)

To render a conveyance subject to attack by creditors of the grantor, where it is shown that it was made with intent to defraud them, it will not be necessary to show that there was no consideration of value whatever, but it will avail the attacking creditors to show that the consideration, though valuable was so inadequate that the conveyance, if permitted to stand in full force, will manifestly result in appreciable injury to the creditors, and that they will be appreciably benefited by subjecting it to the payment of their claims without material injury to the innocent purchaser.—Jameson v. Dille, 61 N. E. 601, 27 Ind. App. 429.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. §§ 192-196; 9 CENT. DIG. Chat. Mtg. § 193.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 489-508.

§ 77. Sufficiency in general.

[a] (Sup. 1849)

The seduction of an innocent woman by a pretended marriage, the seducer having a wife at the time living, entitles the injured woman to compensation, and will be deemed a valuable consideration for a grant; and so though the intention of the grantor in making the grant for such consideration was to defraud his creditors.—Doe ex dem. Hutchinson v. Horn, 1 Ind. 363, Smith, 242, 50 Am. Dec. 470.

[b] (Sup. 1888)

A member of an insolvent firm conveyed individual land in consideration of the grantee assuming and paying the individual creditors of the grantor, who accepted the grantee as their debtor. The highest value put on the land by any witness was $4,600, while $3,500 was paid by the grantee, who had no actual knowledge of fraud on the part of the grantor in making the conveyance. Held, that the conveyance was on sufficient consideration.—Smith v. Sels, 114 Ind. 229, 16 N. E. 524.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. §§ 197-199, 202; 11 CENT. DIG. Contracts, § 235.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 489.

§ 80. Future support.

[a] (Sup. 1868)

A. assigned to B. a judgment recovered by him, payable in annual installments, in consideration that B. should support him for a certain number of years, and pay a certain judgment theretofore recovered against him. Soon afterwards another judgment was recovered against A. Held, that the facts were not sufficient to show that the assignment of the judgment was fraudulent.—Mahony v. Hunter's Ex'r, 30 Ind. 246.

[b] (Sup. 1839)

Where a conveyance is made in consideration of the future support of the grantor, and is fully executed, the consideration becomes a valuable one, and the conveyance cannot be set aside as fraudulent and void as to creditors, unless it was made with the actual intent to delay and defraud creditors, and the grantee at the time of the conveyance had notice of such intent.—Hays v. Montgomery, 118 Ind. 91, 20 N. E. 646.

[c] (App. 1901)

A conveyance upon the nominal consideration of one dollar and an agreement for the support of the grantor for life, burial, etc., is fraudulent as against creditors.—Spiers v. Whitesell, 61 N. E. 28, 27 Ind. App. 204.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. FRAUD. CONV. §§ 206-209.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 493.

§ 84. Assumption of liability.

[a] (Sup. 1840)

A conveyance by an insolvent debtor in consideration of the grantee's assumption of certain debts is valid.—Anderson v. Smith, 5 Blackf. 395.

[b] (Sup. 1883)

Where trustees of a lodge sold its property to a stranger on his agreeing to pay their notes given for its debt, the fact that they afterwards repurchased the property as individuals, agreeing, as the sole consideration, to pay the notes assumed by the stranger, does not render the sale fraudulent as to creditors of the lodge.—Miller v. Lebanon Lodge No. 48, 1 O. O. F., 88 Ind. 286.

[c] (Sup. 1882)

Where, in consideration of the assumption by a surety of his principal's debt and the mortgaging of the surety's land to secure it, the principal transfers personal property to the surety, the sale is upon a valuable consideration.—Powell v. Stickney, 88 Ind. 310.

[d] (App. 1901)

Defendant conveyed land to his mother, she assuming to pay a certain mortgage thereon. She conveyed to defendant's brother, reserving a life interest, he assuming a mortgage thereon given for borrowed money, with which the mortgage assumed by the mother had been paid. The mother paid defendant no cash at the time of the conveyance to her, and he continued to reside on the property with her, paying her for his board. Her grantee lived in another state, visiting his mother occasionally. After the conveyance to the mother, she invested no money in the property. Held, that the conveyances would be set aside, subject to the lien of the mortgage assumed in the second conveyance.—Jameson v. Dilley, 61 N. E. 601, 27 Ind. App. 429.

§ 86. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1858)

A pre-existing debt is good consideration for a conveyance by a debtor.—Jones v. Gott, 10 Ind. 240.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 497.

§ 87. — Payment or satisfaction.

[a] (Sup. 1858)

Where a debtor who held property as trustee under a will appropriates the proceeds thereof to his own use, he may, when in failing circumstances, lawfully prefer the beneficiary by a conveyance of his property in trust for her; the beneficiary's claim being a good consideration for the transfer.—Jones v. Gott, 10 Ind. 240.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. FRAUD. CONV. §§ 221-229.

See, also, note, 36 L. R. A. 335.

§ 88. — Security.

[a] A conveyance by a debtor to secure a pre-existing debt is on good consideration, both as against creditors and purchasers.—(Sup. 1863) Aiken v. Bruen, 21 Ind. 137; (1881) McLaughlin v. Ward, 77 Ind. 383.

[b] The mere fact that a mortgage given by an insolvent secures a greater sum than is actually due is not conclusive of fraud.—(Sup. 1880) Goff v. Rogers, 71 Ind. 459; (1896) Adams v. Laugel, 144 Ind. 608, 42 N. E. 1017.

§ 90. — Invalidity of original transaction.

[a] (Sup. 1884)

On complaint to set aside a deed as fraudulent, defendant answered that he took the deed in satisfaction of a bona fide mortgage, and plaintiff replied by general denial and allegation that the mortgage was in fraud of creditors, and both these and the issues on the complaint were found for plaintiff. Held, that a decree setting aside the deed and ordering a sale free from any claim of the grantee was proper.—Hadley v. Hood, 94 Ind. 119.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. § 234.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 491.

§ 94. Marriage and marriage settlements.

Marriage of daughter as consideration of conveyance by parent, see post, § 96.

[a] (Sup. 1831)

The rule that marriage constitutes a good and valuable consideration does not apply where a father makes a voluntary conveyance to his daughters, who afterwards marry,—the father continuing in possession of the property after the conveyance, contracting debts, and dying insolvent,—so as to enable the daughters to hold the property against creditors of the father.—O'Brien v. Coulter, 2 Blackf. 421.

[b] (Sup. 1867)

A promise of marriage is regarded as a valuable consideration, and will support a grant. Such contracts are favored in law.—Bunnell v. Witherow, 29 Ind. 123.

Where B., pending the suit of W. against him for a breach of a promise of marriage, conveyed to C. certain real and personal estate in consideration of a contract that she (C.) would marry him, after which marriage of C. and B. W. obtained a judgment against him on which an execution was returned nulla bona, in a proceeding by W. against B. and wife to set aside said conveyance, it was held to be valid; it not appearing that C., prior to the marriage, had any notice of B.'s fraudulent intent.—Id.

[c] (Sup. 1896)

Marriage is a valuable consideration, sufficient to sustain a conveyance made with intent on the part of the grantor to defraud his creditors, unless knowledge on the part of the grantee of such fraudulent intent is alleged and proven.—State ex rel. Harrison v. Osborn, 143 Ind. 671, 42 N. E. 921.

[d] (Sup. 1898)

A conveyance of property to one's wife, pursuant to agreement, made before marriage, to convey it to her in consideration of her marrying him, has a valuable consideration to support it against attacks of his creditors.—Marmon v. White, 51 N. E. 930, 151 Ind. 445.

[e] (App. 1904)

Where an antenuptial contract between husband and wife provided that the parties mutually agreed to renounce any and all rights of inheritance which each might have by reason of the marriage in the property of the other, and that, if the affianced wife should survive her affianced husband, on his death she should be paid the sum of $10,000 in consideration of her waiver of all interest in his estate, the wife's subsequent consent to the abrogation of such contract as an inducement to the execution of a postnuptial conveyance to her by her husband constituted a sufficient consideration for such conveyance, as against the husband's creditors.—Clow v. Brown, 72 N. E. 534, 37 Ind. App. 172.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. §§ 230-242; 23 CENT. DIG. Frds., St. of, §§ 4, 5.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 504-507.

§ 95. Transactions between husband and wife.

Presumptions and burden of proof, see post, § 277.

[a] (Sup. 1861)

In suit to set aside a conveyance of real estate made to A. & B. and their wives, by creditors of A. & B., A. and his wife answered that he had managed and made divers investments of $900 received by him from his wife's estate; that he had invested it in goods for the firm of A. & B., where it had remained, as his wife's separate money, until these goods were sold to the grantor of the lands in question, the conveyance of which was made and accepted in payment and discharge of said debt. B. and his wife answered that her father had advanced to them $1,500, for which he held their joint note; that, when the goods aforementioned were sold, B. and his father-in-law agreed that the latter should take one-half of the land to be conveyed in discharge of said note; and that it was by his (the father-in-law's) direction that the conveyance of this half was made to his daughter, as an advancement. Held, that in each case a sufficient and valid consideration for the conveyance to the wives was shown.—Schaeffer v. Fithian, 17 Ind. 463.

[b] (Sup. 1863)

A relinquishment of her contingent interest in her husband's real estate, by the wife, her husband being alive, is a valuable and sufficient consideration for a conveyance by her husband, or procured by him, to her, of property which may be considered but a fair equivalent for such interest; and such conveyance will be deemed valid or invalid, as it may be shown to be fair or fraudulent, and the comparative value of the respective estates may be taken into consideration.—Hollowell v. Simmonson, 21 Ind. 398.

[c] (Sup. 1870)

Where a married woman loaned her husband a sum of money belonging to her in her own right, and three years later her husband traded a stock of goods to a third person in part payment for a tract of land, and the deed was taken in the wife's name, who executed notes and a mortgage for the residue of the purchase money, the conveyance being procured for her, and received by her, in payment of the original loan, the wife will be regarded as a purchaser for valuable consideration, in the absence of actual fraud, and will be entitled to hold the land as against the husband's attaching creditors.—Kyger v. F. Hull Skirt Co., 34 Ind. 249.

[d] (Sup. 1872)

A deed by a husband directly to his wife, in good faith, in consideration of money of the separate estate used by the husband in the purchase of the land, is valid.—Thompson v. Mills, 39 Ind. 528.

[e] (Sup. 1872)

Where a husband has, with property belonging to his wife, partly paid for property conveyed to him, giving his note for a remaining one-third of the entire consideration, such note being secured by mortgage on the property conveyed, it is not fraudulent for the husband and wife, while the note is unpaid, to convey the property to a third person, who reconveys it to the wife, in order to vest the title in her; she never having consented to the title being vested in her husband.—Parton v. Yates, 41 Ind. 456.

[f] (Sup. 1873)

A husband, at the time of purchasing certain real estate, arranged with his wife's father to pay the purchase money, agreeing to convey the land to the wife. In pursuance of this agreement, the father paid for the land, but, without his consent or that of the wife, the deed was taken in the husband's name. Subsequently, being in failing circumstances, the husband, in pursuance of his previous promise, conveyed the land to the wife through the father as her trustee. Held, that the conveyance was founded on good consideration, and was not fraudulent.—Summers v. Hoover, 42 Ind. 153.

[g] Where a conveyance is obtained in the wife's name by fraud on the part of the husband, she having paid no consideration therefor, although not a party to the fraud, is nevertheless affected by all the equities which the vendor might enforce against her husband, and both will be compelled to reconvey the land.—(Sup. 1873) Mendenhall v. Treadway, 44 Ind. 131, distinguishing Lippperd v. Edwards (1872) 39 Ind. 165.

[h] (Sup. 1875)

A conveyance from the husband to the wife, without consideration, is a fraud upon the creditors of the husband, even in the absence of an actual fraudulent intention.—Spinner v. Weick, 50 Ind. 213.

[i] (Sup. 1876)

Where a husband and wife united in conveying real estate, which was the separate property of the latter, in exchange for other real estate, under an agreement that the title to that received should be taken in her name, and, without her knowledge or consent, the title was taken in the name of the husband, and the real estate so received was exchanged by the husband and wife, with money belonging to the husband, or other real estate, the title of which was taken in the names of the husband and wife jointly, held, that the real estate last transferred by them could not be regarded as the property of the husband, in considering the question whether or not the title of the real estate for which it was exchanged was taken in the names of the husband and wife for the purpose of defrauding creditors of the husband.—McConnell v. Martin, 52 Ind. 434; Snyder v. Same, Id. 439.

[j] (Sup. 1876)

To a complaint by a judgment creditor to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance of the lands of his judgment debtor to the wife of the latter, and to subject the same to execution, it is a sufficient answer by the wife to allege that such lands had been purchased from a third person, and wholly paid for, by her, through her husband as her agent, out of her own separate estate, but that, without her knowledge or consent, said lands had been conveyed to her husband, such judgment debtor, who had, on her demand, made the conveyance sought to be set aside.—Eagan v. Downing, 55 Ind. 65.

[k] (Sup. 1876)

Lands purchased with the means of a judgment debtor having no property subject to execution, and by him procured to be conveyed to himself and wife jointly, with the right of survivorship, for the purpose of defrauding his creditors, or where such conveyance has first been so procured and made to the debtor himself, and afterwards changed by inserting the name of his wife, with a clause of survivorship, may be subjected to an execution upon such judgment, in an action for that purpose against such grantees.—Wilds v. Bogan, 55 Ind. 331.

Where a man purchases land with the separate means of his wife, and takes the title in his own name, without her consent, his subsequent conveyance of the land to his wife cannot be assailed by his creditors.—Leonard v. Barnett, 70 Ind. 367.

[m] The relinquishment by a wife of her inchoate interest in the lands of her husband is a sufficient consideration to support a conveyance to her by him of a part of his lands.—(Sup. 1880) Brown v. Rawlings, 72 Ind. 505; (1889) Citizens' Bank v. Bolen, 121 Ind. 301, 23 N. E. 146.

[n] (Sup. 1881)

Where property is in the possession of the husband, and he and his wife agree to buy an outstanding title, the consideration for which is to be paid out of her separate estate and the title conveyed to her, and the title is conveyed to him instead, an instruction that he holds the property simply as a trustee for her, and that it is not subject to the payment of his debts, is properly refused.—Sherman v. Hogland, 73 Ind. 472.

[o] (Sup. 1881)

A husband, being indebted to his wife for money received by him from her father's estate under circumstances which created an obligation on his part to repay it, gave her a deed of real estate for a consideration not inadequate, intending to create a preference in her favor. Held, that as the wife had no knowledge of such intention on his part, or of his indebtedness, the conveyance would be upheld, though the debt was an old one, and the wife had made no effort to collect it.—Brookville Nat. Bank v. Kimble, 76 Ind. 195.

[oo] (Sup. 1882)

Where, in an action to set aside a conveyance to the wife as in fraud of the husband's creditors, on the ground that the wife paid nothing for the property, it appears that the wife paid part of the price with her own money, plaintiffs are entitled to no relief.—Bragg v. Stanford, 82 Ind. 234.

[p] (Sup. 1882)

A's wife paid most of the purchase money for a tract of land. The title was taken by A., who verbally agreed to hold the land as trustee for his wife. This land was sold, and with the proceeds was purchased another tract, which the husband verbally agreed to hold upon a similar trust. He was not then in debt, but afterwards, when in debt, he conveyed the land through a third person to his wife, who had expended her own money in improving it. Held, that A.'s creditors could not subject the land to the satisfaction of their debts.—Heaton v. White, 85 Ind. 376.

[pp] (Sup. 1882)

Where a partnership consisted of three persons, two of whom were husband and wife, and the husband overdrew his account, and the wife, in order to restore the equality of the distribution of the profits of the firm, permitted her husband to be credited with the amount of his overdraft and her own account to be charged therewith, in consideration of which the husband transferred property to the wife for the benefit of herself and a daughter, the conveyance was based on a sufficient consideration as against a creditor of the husband.—Huffman v. Copeland, 86 Ind. 224.

[q] (Sup. 1883)

A wife released her inchoate interest in valuable lands belonging to her husband in consideration of his promise to pay her. Afterwards, when he was insolvent, his share of certain lands was conveyed, at his request, by his co-heirs, to himself and his wife, in entirety. Held, that such conveyance, as to the wife, was valid, and that her interest was beyond the reach of his creditors.—Sedgwick v. Tucker, 90 Ind. 271.

[qq] (Sup. 1883)

The fact that a wife destroyed a note given her by her father, which had been given him by her husband for money advanced him by her father to pay for certain land, does not create such an indebtedness from her husband to her as to justify his conveying the land to her as against his creditors.—Meredith v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 92 Ind. 343.

[r] (Sup. 1884)

A conveyance by a debtor to his wife for full value of money borrowed from her, with no knowledge by her of fraudulent intent on his part, is good against other creditors.—Hogan v. Robinson, 94 Ind. 138.

[rr] (Sup. 1884)

The redemption by a husband of lands from foreclosure against his wife of a mortgage existing at the time of the marriage is a sufficient consideration for a conveyance to him.—Secor v. Souder, 95 Ind. 95.

[s] (Sup. 1886)

Although a husband, with fraudulent intent, shared in by both grantor and grantee, obtains a conveyance of property to his wife, joining her in a note therefor, such conveyance cannot be set aside by his other creditors as fraudulent, nor the property subjected to their claims, where none of his money or property goes to pay for it, but only that of the wife.—McLean v. Hess, 106 Ind. 555, 7 N. E. 567.

[ss] (Sup. 1887)

Where a husband who has taken the title to property in his own name, without the consent of his wife and children, who furnished the entire purchase money, borrows money thereon to improve it, without using any of his own funds, and afterwards voluntarily, and without other consideration, transfers it to his wife, his creditors cannot have such conveyance set aside as fraudulent.—Taylor v. Duesterberg, 109 Ind. 165, 9 N. E. 907.

[t] (Sup. 1887)

Neither the statute of limitations nor the presumption of payment arising from lapse of time applies to a loan made by a wife to her husband, so as to render fraudulent a conveyance by the husband preferring her.—Dice v. Irvin, 110 Ind. 561, 11 N. E. 488.

[tt] (Sup. 1888)

In an action to subject lands conveyed by a husband to his wife to the payment of a debt of the husband, where the uncontradicted testimony is that the conveyance was made to the wife in consideration of a pre-existing debt due her from the husband, and there is no evidence that the conveyance was for the purpose of defrauding plaintiff, or any of the husband's creditors, a verdict for plaintiff should be set aside, and a new trial granted.—Cornell v. Gibson, 114 Ind. 144, 16 N. E. 130, 5 Am. St. Rep. 605.

[u] (Sup. 1888)

To ascertain how much property was attempted to be placed beyond reach of his creditors by a conveyance from husband to wife, the value of the wife's one-third interest in the property, and the value of the husband's exemption, should be deducted from the total value; and where the value thus reduced does not exceed the price paid by the wife, the conveyance will not be set aside.—Brigham v. Hubbard, 115 Ind. 474, 17 N. E. 920.

[uu] (Sup. 1889)

Rev. St. 1881, § 2975, providing that every conveyance, the consideration of which is paid by a third person, shall be presumed fraudulent as against his creditors, does not apply where the evidence shows that the consideration was in effect paid by the grantee, the wife of the debtor, he having used her money under an agreement to restore it, and that the deed was given in pursuance of that agreement.—Jones v. Snyder, 117 Ind. 229, 20 N. E. 140.

[v] (Sup. 1889)

In an action to set aside, as fraudulent, conveyances of land by an insolvent debtor to one who reconveys to the debtor's wife, it is not necessary to allege fraud, or knowledge of the fraud, or knowledge that the debtor was insolvent, on the part of those taking the voluntary conveyances without consideration.—McAninch v. Dennis, 123 Ind. 21, 22 N. E. 881.

[vv] (Sup. 1890)

Property purchased by a husband in the name of the wife, but paid for with his money, is subject to levy and sale under execution against him.—Laird v. Davidson, 124 Ind. 412, 25 N. E. 7.

[w] (Sup. 1892)

A husband gave his wife $1,000 when he was solvent, which she kept in her possession for months, and finally loaned the same to her husband, under an agreement that he would repay it. He afterwards invested the money in a farm, taking the title in his wife's name, and became insolvent. Held, in an action by his creditors to subject the farm to the payment of his debts, that the wife was entitled to protection to the extent of her interest therein.—Dillen v. Johnson, 132 Ind. 75, 30 N. E. 786.

[ww] (Sup. 1894)

A conveyance of land by a husband to his wife, in consideration of money loaned to him by her many years before, part of which she received from her father, and part of which she earned in keeping boarders, and with which he purchased the land so conveyed, is supported by a sufficient consideration as against his creditors.—Fulp v. Beaver, 136 Ind. 319, 36 N. E. 250.

[x] (Sup. 1894)

The fact that a wife was indebted to her husband does not show that a conveyance by her to him was not fraudulent.—Bunch v. Hart, 138 Ind. 1, 37 N. E. 537.

[xx] (Sup. 1894)

A mere joinder by the wife, for the purpose of conveying her inchoate interest, in a fraudulent conveyance of real property by the husband, through a trustee, to himself and wife to hold by entireties, does not form such a consideration as will support the conveyance.—Phillips v. Kennedy, 139 Ind. 419, 38 N. E. 410, 39 N. E. 147.

[y] (Sup. 1895)

A husband, soon after engaging in business and contracting debts, deeded land worth $4,300 to his wife, to satisfy a pretended debt of $1,000. He then had no other property subject to execution. He also gave her a mortgage for $1,000, which she claimed she loaned him, and most of which was money saved from funds he let her have for housekeeping purposes. Held, that such deed was fraudulent as to existing and subsequent creditors of the husband.—Gable v. Columbus Cigar Co., 140 Ind. 563, 38 N. E. 474.

[yy] (Sup. 1896)

The furnishing of money by a wife to her husband by way of gift, or which was not treated or considered by the parties as creating an indebtedness, will not constitute a consideration for a subsequent conveyance of property by the husband to the wife, as against the husband's creditors.—Hoffman v. Henderson, 145 Ind. 613, 44 N. E. 629.

[z] (Sup. 1899)

An agreement between a farmer and his wife that she should have for her own the proceeds of dairy and poultry products sold, under which she received such proceeds, a portion of which was expended for groceries and clothing for the family, and a part used by the husband, did not constitute the production and sale of such articles the sole and separate business of the wife, within the meaning of Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 6975, so as to render the husband her debtor for the sums so used by him; and notes and mortgages executed by him to his wife for such sums 27 years after the arrangement was made are without consideration, and void as against his creditors.—Kedey v. Petty, 54 N. E. 708, 153 Ind. 179.

[zz] (Sup. 1900)

In an action by creditors to set aside a transfer of land to defendant's wife as fraudulent, where such land had been received by defendant in exchange for other realty, and the title taken in her name as compensation for her inchoate dower interest in the original tract, the value of her interest should be determined on the basis of the real value of the property, and not on the fictitious value at which the exchange was made.—Baldwin v. Heil, 58 N. E. 200, 155 Ind. 682.

Defendant, who was insolvent, exchanged land in which his wife had an inchoate dower interest, worth $9,320, subject to a mortgage of $4,500, for other realty worth $3,100, and the deed was executed to defendant's wife in consideration that she release her dower interest in the original tract. Held, that such conveyance was not fraudulent as to defendant's creditors, since her inchoate dower constituted a valuable interest, which she had a right to protect, and also because creditors were not damaged by the transaction.—Id.

§ 96. Transactions between parent and child.

[a] (Sup. 1831)

The rule that marriage constitutes a good and valuable consideration does not apply where a father makes a voluntary conveyance to his daughters, who afterwards marry, the father continuing in possession of the property after the conveyance, contracting debts, and dying insolvent, so as to enable the daughters to hold the property against creditors of the father.—O'Brien v. Coulter, 2 Blackf. 421.

[b] Where one purchases real estate with his own money, and to defraud his creditors causes the conveyance to be made to his son, it is a fraudulent transfer.—(Sup. 1832) Demaree v. Driskill, 3 Blackf. 115; (1882) Bushnell v. Bushnell, 88 Ind. 403.

[c] (Sup. 1848)

A conveyance by a father to his son, in consideration of an agreement by the latter to support his father and mother, is invalid as to creditors.—Tyner v. Somerville, 1 Ind. 175, Smith, 149.

[d] (Sup. 1851)

A conveyance of land by a father to his son without consideration and for the purpose of defrauding his creditors is void as to the creditors.—Burtch v. Elliott, 3 Ind. 99.

[e] (Sup. 1880)

In a suit against a party, charging him with mortgaging his land to his children for the purpose of defrauding his creditors, he answered, setting up a contract between himself and wife that he would pay to his children, and secure to them the payment of, money advanced by her to him for the purchase of land. Held a good answer, and also that he had a right to pay interest to the children on such advancements, in preference to the claims of creditors.—Goff v. Rogers, 71 Ind. 459.

[f] (Sup. 1886)

A son may, without being guilty of maintenance, assist his father in conducting an action, and the promise of the father to repay the sum advanced is a valid one, and the creditors of the father cannot set aside the assignment of a note founded upon the contract of the father without showing that the father and son were both guilty of fraud.—Proctor v. Cole, 104 Ind. 373, 3 N. E. 106, 4 N. E. 303.

[g] (Sup. 1889)

A conveyance is not fraudulent because the purchaser, in addition to consideration paid in money and notes to a third person, agreed to support his father and mother during their lifetime.—Scott v. Davis, 20 N. E. 139, 117 Ind. 232.

[h] (Sup. 1890)

Where a father advances money with which to purchase land in the name of his son, without any contemporaneous understanding or agreement as to repayment of the purchase money, a mortgage afterwards given by the son to the father, to secure the repayment of the purchase money, is void as to the son's creditors, for want of consideration.—Iligham v. Vanosdol, 125 Ind. 74, 25 N. E. 140.

[i] (Sup. 1891)

In an action to set aside a deed as fraudulent, an answer stating that the deed was given in pursuance of an agreement to support the grantor, which agreement was made before the grantor became indebted, and had been partly performed, and that the deed was given without fraudulent intent, at a time when it was supposed that the indebtedness to plaintiff was amply secured by mortgage, is good.—Nichols, Shepard & Co. v. Burch, 128 Ind. 324, 27 N. E. 737.

[j] (App. 1903)

A conveyance made by a husband, while heavily indebted, to his wife, without consideration, and a subsequent conveyance of the same land from the husband and wife to their son without consideration, were fraudulent as to creditors of the husband.—Farmers' Bank of Frankfort v. First Nat. Bank, 60 N. E. 503, 30 Ind. App. 520.

[k] (App. 1904)

Where a father executed a deed of certain land to his daughter as security for a bona fide pre-existing debt, such conveyance was not fraudulent as against the father's creditors, and constituted a prior lien on the land.—Clow v. Brown, 72 N. E. 534, 37 Ind. App. 172.

[a] (Sup. 1842)

If a father with his own money purchase real estate in the name of his children, and the purchase is an advancement to the children, it is not within the statute against fraudulent conveyances, but valid as against subsequent purchasers from the father.—Stanley v. Bran-non, 6 Blackf. 103.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. §§ 320-322.

§ 99. Partial insufficiency or failure.

[a] (Sup. 1857)

R., T., and C. were partners, and dissolved partnership. T. and C. sued R., and M. as co-defendant, alleging that R. had got possession of the effects of the firm, and had assigned a large amount thereof to M., ostensibly to secure payment of a pretended debt of the firm, evidenced by notes executed by R., but really in pursuance of a conspiracy between him and M. to cheat, and defraud T. and C. The court instructed, "If the jury find that the whole or any part of M.'s claim against R. & Co. is not sustained by evidence, you should find the assignments of the notes, &c., of R. & Co. to M. fraudulent; and the defendants are responsible in this action for the amount thus assigned." Held, that the instruction was erroneous. Held, also, that an instruction "that, if they found any part of the claim of M. against R. & Co. correct, and that R. assigned the notes, &c., as collateral security, and the amount of the security was not excessive, they might find said assignment to be bona fide, notwithstanding some part of M.'s claim had not been fully proven," was correct, if the addition, "if the assignment were not otherwise fraudulent," were added.—Reed v. Thayer, 9 Ind. 157.

[b] (Sup. 1892)

Where a chattel mortgage is executed to secure the notes of several creditors, given for separate and divisible claims, the mortgage is not invalid as a whole because one of the notes was executed for a fraudulent consideration; and the security under such mortgage is valid as to a bona fide creditor, who does not participate in, or is not cognizant of, the fraudulent intent of the debtor.—Morgan v. Worden, 145 Ind. 600, 32 N. E. 783.

§ 104. — Transactions in general.

[a] (Sup. 1859)

If, at a sheriff's sale, the defendant's wife buy the land with her own and her husband's money, for the purpose of defrauding his creditors, this fraudulent intent being proved, the creditors will take the whole, and she lose what she had put in of her own.—Ewing v. Gray, 12 Ind. 64.

[b] (Sup. 1871)

A conveyance from a husband to his wife will not be sustained, in equity, when it interferes with the rights of creditors.—Sims v. Ricketts, 35 Ind. 181, 9 Am. Rep. 679.

[c] (Sup. 1876)

A. bought certain real estate with a mill thereon of B., and caused it to be conveyed to the wife of A. Certain real estate of the wife of A. was given in part payment to B., and the notes of A. and wife secured by mortgage were given for the residue of the purchase money. Before the notes were paid, the mill was burned, and thereafter the real estate was reconveyed to B., who accepted it as part payment of the notes. A. and wife had no money or property wherewith to pay the balance. C., a brother of A., had assisted him in running the mill before it was burned, and on contingencies was to have become the owner of a part of it. The citizens and neighbors raised some money to aid in starting another mill. C. procured another tract of real estate on his own credit, and, on the suggestion of those proposing to aid in the erection of the mill, conveyed one-half of it to the wife of A., and the two brothers, with the assistance given them and on their credit, erected a mill, each of them working in the erection and running of the same. Held, that B. could not subject the latter real estate to the payment of the balance due on his notes.—Cooper v. Ham, 49 Ind. 393.

A wife may employ her husband to act as her agent in operating a mill owned by her, and such employment is not proof of an attempt on her part to defraud his creditors.—Id.

[d] (Sup. 1881)

In an action to set aside a conveyance by a husband to the wife as in fraud of the husband's creditors, the existence of the confidential relationship between grantor and grantee, and the pendency of an action against the former by a creditor, may be considered by the jury on the issue of fraud.—Sherman v. Hogland, 73 Ind. 472.

[e] (Sup. 1893)

Where a wife allows the title to land paid for by her to be taken in the name of her husband, persons who give him credit without notice of the wife's claim may subject the land to their debts.—Minnich v. Shaffer, 135 Ind. 634, 34 N. E. 987.

§ 105. — Procuring conveyances from third persons.

[a] (Sup. 1883)

A debtor conveyed land incumbered to the full value to B., who had furnished money for redeeming a part from execution, and who agreed to reconvey on payment by a day named, the agreement to be otherwise void. After forfeiture the debtor's mother paid B. a large sum, and caused him to convey to the debtor's wife, who, in consideration thereof, agreed to support the mother for life. A part was afterwards sold on foreclosure, and the purchaser conveyed to the wife. By means of money furnished by the wife's father, and of mortgages, and crops raised by the joint labor of the debtor, his wife, and children, the title became vested in the wife, without depriving creditors of anything available for the payment of their debts. Held, that the wife's title was good as against the husband's creditors even though the purpose was to place the property beyond their reach.—Stone v. Brown, 116 Ind. 78, 18 N. E. 392.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

It seems that even the active participation by a wife in accomplishing her husband's attempt to defraud his creditors by expending his means in the improvement of her property will furnish his creditors no ground of relief either against her or her property.—Moore v. Lampton, 80 Ind. 301.

[a] (Sup. 1893)

The owner of a farm of 160 acres, being in debt at the time, conveyed the same to his son for an expressed consideration of $5,000. The son was worth at the time about $400, but claimed the transfer was in payment of a debt due from the father. The son had never filed with the assessor any statement of such debt. After the conveyance he allowed the property to be sold for taxes. The father also continued to rent the farm and collect the rent, and exercise acts of ownership. Held, that the conveyance was in fraud of creditors.—Milburn v. Phillips, 136 Ind. 690, 34 N. E. 983, 36 N. E. 360.

[b] (Sup. 1894)

A father had sold and conveyed land to his son for $8,000, not as advancement, but to be paid on request, $300 a year to be paid meantime as rent. The son also owed his father $2,000, and interest, for money lent to build a house, and back rent and other debts, the whole amounting to $11,000. The son having killed a man and been arrested, desiring to secure his father, reconveyed him the land. The father had no idea that deceased's estate had any claim for damages for the homicide. Held, that the conveyance was not in fraud of said estate.—Snyder v. Jetton, 137 Ind. 449, 37 N. E. 143.

[b] (Sup. 1890)

A conveyance of land by an insolvent debtor to trustees for the benefit of certain creditors, to the exclusion of others, with a reservation of the surplus to the debtor's wife, is not fraudulent.—Hays v. Hostetter, 125 Ind. 60, 25 N. E. 134.

[c] (Sup. 1900)

Where a deed conveying realty in fee and reserving a life estate is held fraudulent as to creditors, it cannot be upheld as to the reservation of the life estate to the extent of requiring that the land be sold subject to the life interest as an incumbrance.—*McNally v. A conveyance on secret trust is a continuing fraud, and therefore void in favor of all creditors during its continuance.—Pennington v. Clifton, 11 Ind. 162.

[b] (Sup. 1889)

Where a purchaser, in addition to the consideration paid in money to a third person, agreed to support his father and mother during their lifetime, such an agreement did not constitute a secret trust invalidating the conveyance which was otherwise supported by a valid consideration, and the grantee was not guilty of fraud.—Scott v. Davis, 20 N. E. 139, 117 Ind. 232.

[c] (App. 1900)

A debtor cannot convey property to another to be held either wholly or in part upon secret trust for his own benefit.—Stout v. Price, 24 Ind. App. 360, 55 N. E. 964, 56 N. E. 857.

[b] (Sup. 1882)

A failing debtor may use property bought on credit of one to pay another.—O'Donald v. Constant, 82 Ind. 212.

[c] (Sup. 1888)

In an action by a creditor to recover the amount of a note due the insolvent, it having been fraudulently transferred, a cross-complaint by another creditor, alleging a loan to the insolvent, and that, when the note in question was executed, it was agreed that complainant should have an interest therein to the amount of her loan, is good so far as the creditors of the insolvent are concerned.—Cooper v. Perdue, 114 Ind. 207, 16 N. E. 140.

[d] A debtor in failing circumstances, or insolvent, may bona fide prefer one creditor to another.—(Sup. 1889) Harshman v. Armstrong, 21 N. E. 662, 119 Ind. 224; (1894) Rockland Co.

[a] (Sup. 1861)

A debtor in failing circumstances has a right to prefer his creditors. He may assign all his property for the benefit of a single one only, or he may distribute it in unequal proportions among some or all of them; but he must act in good faith, with no purpose of defrauding those who are not preferred.—Wynne v. Glidewell, 17 Ind. 446.

[a] A husband may, on becoming insolvent, by conveying his property still under his control, prefer his wife the same as any other creditor.—(1882) Bragg v. Stanford, 82 Ind. 234; (1886) Hoes v. Boyer, 108 Ind. 494, 9 N. E. 427; (1887) Dice v. Irvin, 110 Ind. 561, 11 N. E. 488.

[b] (Sup. 1887)

A debtor, where there is no fraud, may lawfully prefer his wife as a creditor; and neither the statute of limitations, nor the presumption of payment arising from lapse of time, applies to a loan made by the wife to the husband, so as to render a preference of such debt by him fraudulent.—Dice v. Irvin, 110 Ind. 561, 11 N. E. 488.

[c] (Sup. 1888)

An insolvent debtor has a right to give a preference to some of his creditors, including his wife, as against others, and such preferences will be upheld if untainted with fraud.—Brigham v. Hubbard, 17 N. E. 920, 115 Ind. 474.

A husband, at the time he conveyed property to his wife, was indebted in the sum of $8,700, excluding his debt to her, which was $700. The value of his property, above incumbrances, was $8,000. In the conveyance to his wife, and in other conveyances, he preferred some of his creditors, but he was attempting to pay his debts, and was not shown to have done anything dishonest. His wife supposed he had ample means to pay his debts. Held, that the conveyance was not fraudulent.—Id.

[d] (Sup. 1890)

Money given by the husband to the wife is her property, and if she lends it to him, and takes his note therefor, it is valid; and he may, when in failing circumstances pay it in preference to his other debts.—Laird v. Davidson, 124 Ind. 412, 25 N. E. 7.

[e] (Sup. 1890)

Where a son owed his father a bona fide debt, he was entitled to prefer his father and secure such debt by the execution of a chattel mortgage without a demand therefor on the part of his father; he having in good faith accepted and had the mortgage recorded when informed thereof.—McFadden v. Ross, 26 N. E. 78, 126 Ind. 341.

Where a son was bona fide indebted to his father, the fact that he secured an extension of time on such indebtedness by giving a chattel mortgage to secure the same in preference over debts owed by him to other creditors did not render such mortgage fraudulent.—Id.

A son was indebted to his father, and executed a note payable in three years, and a mortgage on a retail stock of liquors, and other property. The father lived in another state, and had not demanded payment, and knew nothing of the note and mortgage until notified that they had been executed. He accepted the note, and had the mortgage recorded. The property included all the son had not exempt from execution, and most of it had been bought on credit, and had not been paid for. The mortgage provided that the son should retain possession until the note became due, and that he should not remove, sell, or assign the goods without the father's consent. The son sold part of the property, and did not apply the proceeds on the debt. He intended to use the mortgage to cover up his property, so as to delay creditors. The father accepted it as written, extended the time of payment of his debt, and permitted the son to retain possession without supervision. The property was seized on execution against the son, and the father's administrator replevied it within three months after the mortgage was executed. These facts having been found specially, held, that the mortgage was valid against creditors, and that a conclusion of law from the facts found that the mortgage was fraudulent and void could not be sustained.—Id.

[f] (Sup. 1897)

Where an insolvent husband conveyed lands to his wife on an adequate consideration in satisfaction of her debt, no inference of fraud arises.—Heiney v. Lontz, 46 N. E. 685, 147 Ind. 417.

[g] (App. 1904)

A husband's obligation to pay his wife $10,000 in case she survived him, as provided by an antenuptial contract, though a contingent liability, is one which may be preferred by the husband in failing circumstances.—Clow v. Brown, 72 N. E. 534, 37 Ind. App. 172.

[h] (App. 1905)

A debtor in failing circumstances may prefer his wife as a creditor, if there is a bona fide debt and the conveyance is in good faith.—Schreeder v. Werry, 73 N. E. 832, 35 Ind. App. 84.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. FRAUD. CONV. §§ 379-381.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 597-599.

§ 121. Payment or satisfaction of debts.

[a] (Sup. 1864)

Where a creditor buys goods of his debtor, who is in failing circumstances, and pays full value for them, and the consideration is applied or secured to the payment of the debts of the vendor, with no purpose to delay other creditors, there can be no fraud in the transaction; and the fact that the creditor, by purchasing the goods and assuming liabilities which he is pecuniarily able to meet, in securing his debt, as an incident, pays also debts of creditors, preferred by the vendor above other creditors, cannot impeach the contract.—Wilcoxon v. Annesley, 23 Ind. 285.

Our assignment law does not change the rule allowing a debtor in failing circumstances to make an actual bona fide sale of his property, and apply the proceeds in payment of his debts, or any portion of them.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1894)

A preferential conveyance by plaintiff's judgment debtor to another bona fide judgment creditor, of land of less value than either judgment, is not fraudulent as against plaintiff.—Thomas v. Johnson, 137 Ind. 244, 36 N. E. 803.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. FRAUD. CONV. §§ 385-391.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 596.

§ 122. Mortgages and other transfers as security.

[a] (Sup. 1882)

A failing debtor may prefer one creditor to another by giving him a mortgage to secure an existing indebtedness, where it is accepted in good faith by the creditor for the sole purpose of such security.—Ayers v. Adams, 82 Ind. 100.

[b] (Sup. 1897)

Where security is given for an honest debt and is in a bona fide manner accepted for that purpose, the fact that it may result in defeating the claims of other creditors of the mortgagor affords no grounds for complaint on their part.—Levering v. Bimel, 146 Ind. 545, 45 N. E. 775.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. FRAUD. CONV. §§ 392-398.

§ 123. Confession of judgment.

[a] (Sup. 1868)

D. and S. were indebted to the defendant, and, being in failing circumstances, contemplated an assignment. The defendant, knowing these facts, procured an arrangement by which D. and S. confessed judgment in his favor, on which execution issued and was levied on property of D. and S., who, "a few days afterwards" voluntarily assigned their property in trust to pay their debts. No fraudulent intent was charged. Held, that the transaction was legal, and the defendant's execution lien valid.—Lord v. Fisher, 19 Ind. 7.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. FRAUD. CONV. §§ 399, 400.

§ 124. Suffering judgment by default.

[a] (Sup. 1880)

Default judgments taken against an insolvent on notes executed by him while insolvent are not void as to creditors of the insolvent in the absence of evidence that the acts of the insolvent in the premises were done with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors.—Luce v. Shoff, 70 Ind. 152.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. FRAUD. CONV. § 401.

§ 125. Preference of sureties.

[a] (Sup. 1900)

An insolvent may prefer his surety on a note by executing a bill of sale to him of a portion of his property, unless such sale is made with intent to defraud, hinder, or delay his creditors, and the vendee has knowledge thereof.—Owens v. Gascho, 56 N. E. 224, 154 Ind. 225.

§ 132. — As to creditors.

[a] A transfer of personal property, not accompanied by a change of possession of the property transferred, is prima facie fraudulent and void as against creditors.—(Sup. 1857) Blystone v. Burgett, 10 Ind. 28, 68 Am. Dec. 658; (1866) Kane v. Drake, 27 Ind. 29; (1881) Rose v. Colter, 76 Ind. 590.

[b] (Sup. 1864)

When a purchase from a debtor in failing circumstances is of a stock of goods in a store and an established trade, the fact that the debtor is hired at a fair salary to continue in charge of the business does not of itself prove the transaction fraudulent.—Wilcoxon v. Annesley, 23 Ind. 285.

[c] (Sup. 1877)

The continued possession of real estate by the grantor after a transfer thereof is evidence of fraud.—Tedrowe v. Esher, 56 Ind. 443.

[d] (Sup. 1881)

Payment of an adequate and valuable consideration renders a change of possession of property transferred unnecessary.—Rose v. Colter, 76 Ind. 590.

[e] (Sup. 1882)

Ordinarily, to establish fraud as to subsequent creditors, it must appear that the grantor held himself out as the owner of the property, or that he occupied the same apparently as such owner, and that the credit was given upon such supposed ownership.—Stevens v. Works, 81 Ind. 445.

[f] (Sup. 1882)

A transfer of personal property, unaccompanied by a corresponding change of possession, is not fraudulent per se, and void as to creditors.—Powell v. Stickney, 88 Ind. 310.

[g] (App. 1884)

On an issue as to whether there was a change in the possession of goods alleged to have been conveyed in fraud of creditors, testimony of the vendor that he remained in possession only as an employé of his vendee is admissible.—Benjamin v. McElwaine-Richards Co., 10 Ind. App. 76, 37 N. E. 302.

§ 134. Statutory provisions.FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. FRAUD. CONV. §§ 426-431.

§ 136. — Record or filing of written instrument.[a] (Sup. 1884)

Rev. St. 1881, § 2931, which provides that every conveyance of land shall be recorded in the recorder's office within 45 days from the execution thereof or the same shall be fraudulent as against subsequent purchasers, lessees, or mortgagees in good faith and for valuable consideration, does not render an unrecorded conveyance for value void as against any one other than a subsequent purchaser, lessee, or mortgagee, and, so far as this statute applies, an unrecorded conveyance for value is valid, not only against the vendor, but also against his subsequent judgment-creditors, but it is invalid as against bona fide purchasers under execution, whether such purchaser be the execution creditor or a third person.—Pierce v. Spear, 94 Ind. 127.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. FRAUD. CONV. §§ 428-431.

§ 137. Nature of property transferred.[a] (Sup. 1877)

The fact that a grantor, after executing a conveyance of land, remains in possession, is a circumstance proper to be considered as tending to show fraud.—Tedrowe v. Esher, 56 Ind. 443.

[b] (Sup. 1884)

A debtor's conveyance of real estate, duly executed and recorded, is not fraudulent per se against his creditors, because he remained in possession of the lands conveyed.—Pennington v. Flock, 93 Ind. 378.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. FRAUD. CONV. §§ 432-437.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 545, 546.

§ 138. Nature and form of transaction in general.

[a] Where a vendor of personal property remains in possession, the sale is presumptively fraudulent as to creditors, unless such possession be explained.—(Sup. 1866) Kane v. Drake, 27 Ind. 29; (1881) Rose v. Colter, 76 Ind. 590.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. FRAUD. CONV. §§ 438, 443, 448-452.

§ 139. Absolute sales and conveyances.[a] (Sup. 1880)

The presumption of fraud as against creditors which arises under 1 Rev. St. 1876, p. 505, by the sale of goods, unaccompanied by immediate delivery and actual change of possession thereof, is sufficient to sustain a finding that the sale, made without the required change of possession, was void.—Geisendorff v. Eagles, 70 Ind. 418.

[b] (Sup. 1882)

A sale of personal property, unaccompanied with a change of possession, is not per se fraudulent as against the seller's creditors.—Powell v. Stickney, 88 Ind. 310.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. FRAUD. CONV. §§ 439-442, 445-447.

§ 142. Reservation of power of disposition or use.

[a] (Sup. 1874)

A mortgage executed to indemnify the mortgagees provided that, whenever any part of the land should be sold by the mortgagor for adequate consideration, the mortgagees should release that part, reserving sufficient to secure them for any amount of actual loss they might sustain. One-half of the land was subject to elder liens, and the amount for which the mortgagees were liable was not ascertained at the time the mortgage was made. Held, there being nothing to show that the mortgagees attempted to hold a lien for more than might be justly due them, or that the mortgagor ever attempted to derive any benefit from the right to sell, or that any of the parties intended that the proceeds of such sale, if any, should be applied to any other purpose than the payment of the mortgage debts, that the mortgage could not be held to be fraudulent by reason of the clause in reference to the sale of the land.—O'Brien v. O'Brien, Wils. 558.

[b] (Sup. 1879)

Where security is given upon a safe, show-cases, and other fixtures in a store, and also upon merchandise, and it is provided that the debtor may remain in possession until default in payment, and enjoy the use of the property, held to be void, so far as it covered the merchandise, against creditors.—Davenport v. Foulke, 68 Ind. 382, 34 Am. Rep. 265.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. FRAUD. CONV. §§ 449, 450.

§ 145. Possession as agent or employé.

[a] (Sup. 1852)

A sold B. corn at a fixed price with a warranty that there were in the cribs 2,500 bushels. The cribs were left with A. as agent of B. to take care of for him. Held, that if there was no such change of possession as contemplated by the statute providing that a sale if not followed by change of possession will be presumed fraudulent as to subsequent bona fide holders, unless it appears that the sale was not made with fraudulent intent, that the sale and delivery as between B. and a subsequent purchaser from A. was valid.—Sloan v. Kingore, 3 Ind. 549.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 544.

§ 146. Possession by husband, wife, or other relatives.

[a] (Sup. 1853)

Where a debtor in failing circumstances conveyed property by an absolute bill of sale to his sister, who resided in his family, in trust for a creditor, and after the conveyance departed from home, leaving his wife and the sister in the occupancy of his house and possession of the property conveyed, there was not such a retention of possession by the debtor as would render the transfer fraudulent as to other creditors, under 1 Rev. St. p. 301, § 8, providing that every sale of goods in possession, not accompanied by immediate delivery and followed by actual change of possession, shall be presumed fraudulent as against creditors.—Jones v. Gott, 10 Ind. 240.

[b] (Sup. 1884)

The fact that property purchased by a wife from her husband in good faith is allowed to remain in his possession as her agent to sell it does not invalidate the sale.—Rinn v. Rhoads, 93 Ind. 389.

[c] (Sup. 1896)

A prima facie case of a sale in fraud of creditors is shown by proof that a husband, after selling property to his wife, continued in full possession and management thereof, as her agent.—Higgins v. Spahr, 145 Ind. 167, 43 N. E. 11.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

§ 147. Sufficiency of transfer of possession.

[a] (Sup. 1896)

Authority given to an employé of a vendor to take possession and control of the goods sold in the name of the vendee amounts to no more than a constructive change of possession, which, as against creditors, is not a sufficient compliance with Rev. St. 1881, § 4911, requiring an immediate delivery and actual change of possession, as against creditors of the vendor and others.—Seavey v. Walker, 108 Ind. 78, 9 N. E. 347.

§ 150. — Actual and substantial change of possession.

[a] (Sup. 1857)

To prevent a sale from being fraudulent as to creditors, the change of possession required by the statute must be an actual and substantial change of possession.—Nutter v. Harris, 9 Ind. 88.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. FRAUD. CONV. § 464.

§ 151. — Visible and notorious possession.

[a] (Sup. 1857)

The change of possession required to uphold a transfer of a debtor's property as against creditors must be open and notorious, rendering such change of possession evident and visible.—Nutter v. Harris, 9 Ind. 88.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. § 473.

§ 153. — Continued change of possession.

[a] (Sup. 1857)

In order to make a sale or mortgage of chattels valid as against creditors of the vendor or mortgagor, the change of possession must be continued.—Nutter v. Harris, 9 Ind. 88.

[b] (Sup. 1872)

The mere delay in filing or recording a conveyance will not render it void as to creditors, but is a circumstance which may be considered in determining the question of fraud.—Brookbank v. Kennard, 41 Ind. 339.

[c] (Sup. 1886)

On demurrer to a bill by a mortgagee of chattels, whose mortgage was not recorded within 10 days after its execution, for equitable relief against a subsequent fraudulent mortgage on the chattels, which was recorded within 10 days, and a judgment foreclosing the same, it cannot be objected, on the theory that the diligent and not the negligent are entitled to equitable relief, that because of plaintiff's failure to have his mortgage first recorded within 10 days his bill was without equity.—McCormick v. Hartley, 107 Ind. 248, 6 N. E. 357.

[d] (Sup. 1892)

The mere fact that a mortgagee withholds the mortgage from record under an agreement with the mortgagor, though a badge of fraud, does not make such mortgage fraudulent as to existing or subsequent creditors.—Hutchinson v. First Nat. Bank of Michigan City, 133 Ind. 271, 30 N. E. 952, 36 Am. St. Rep. 537.

[e] (Sup. 1894)

Where a conveyance from husband to wife was kept unrecorded for several months, during which time he used his apparent title to the land for the purpose of obtaining credit, a decree finding the conveyance fraudulent as to creditors whose claims accrued during that time will not be reversed, though the wife swears that the land was originally bought by the husband for her, and paid for with her own money.—Adams v. Curtis, 137 Ind. 175, 36 N. E. 1005.

Concealing and keeping a mortgage from the records, under an agreement, for some definite time, or till the happening of a contingency, for the purpose, or which has the effect, of giving the debtor a fictitious financial standing, is fraudulent as to persons giving credit to the debtor in ignorance of the mortgage.—*National State Bank of Terre Haute v. Proof, see post, §§ 281, 292.

§ 155. Elements of fraud in general.

[a] A sale by a debtor with intent to defraud his creditors is not fraudulent, where the purchaser pays a valuable consideration, unless the purchaser has notice of such intent, or has knowledge which would put an ordinarily prudent man upon inquiry.—(Sup. 1849) Doe ex dem. Hutchinson v. Horn, 1 Ind. 363, Smith, 242, 50 Am. Dec. 470; (1870) McCormick v. Hyatt, 33 Ind. 546; (1870) Kyger v. F. Hull Skirt Co., 34 Ind. 249; (1878) Spaulding v. Myers, 64 Ind. 264; (1880) Brown v. Rawlings, 72 Ind. 505.

[b] In order to vitiate a conveyance based upon a valuable consideration, it must be shown that the grantee participated in the fraudulent intent.—(Sup. 1855) Stewart v. English, 6 Ind. 176; (1878) Johnston v. Field, 42 Ind. 377; (1890) Straight v. Roberts, 126 Ind. 383, 29 N. E. 73.

[c] (Sup. 1867)

In order to avoid a sale or conveyance on the ground of fraud, the vendee must have had notice of the vendor's fraudulent design.—Bunuel v. Witherow, 29 Ind. 123.

[d] (Sup. 1872)

In a complaint to subject real estate held by a wife to the payment of a debt of the husband, it must be clearly shown that the wife knew of the alleged fraudulent intent of the husband in causing the real estate to be conveyed to her, and that she took the conveyance in order to cheat, delay, or defraud the creditors.—Lippard v. Edwards, 39 Ind. 165.

[e] (Sup. 1877)

In an action to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance, it was in evidence that at the time it was made the grantor was indebted to plaintiff and insolvent, and there was also evidence of fraud on the part of the grantor. Held, on demurrer to the evidence, that, in absence of anything tending to show fraud on the part of the grantee, the demurrer should be sustained.—Pinnell v. Stringer, 59 Ind. 555.

(f) (Sup. 1889)

To render a conveyance void as to creditors, on the ground that it was made with intent to defraud them, the grantee must have knowledge of, and participate in, the fraud of the grantor.—Scott v. Davis, 117 Ind. 232, 20 N. E. 139.

§ 157. Knowledge or notice implied from relation between parties.

(a) (Sup. 1894)

Where a wife, for the purpose of conveying her inchoate interest in her husband's land, joins in a fraudulent conveyance thereof, made by him through a trustee and without consideration, to himself and wife, to hold by entireties, the wife is affected by the fraud of her husband, whether she had knowledge of it or not.—Phillips v. Kennedy, 130 Ind. 419, 38 N. E. 410, 39 N. E. 147.

§ 158. Constructive notice, and facts putting on inquiry.

(a) (Sup. 1829)

The pendency of an action is constructive notice of the matter involved therein as to one who purchases property from the defendant in such action.—Ray v. Roe ex dem. Brown, 2 Blackf. 238, 18 Am. Dec. 159.

(b) (Sup. 1902)

A corporation executed a mortgage in favor of its creditors at a time when none of them were pressing their claims for payment. Its attorney immediately went to the domicile of a foreign corporation, arrived there at night, and at once informed the president thereof of the mortgage, securing its acceptance. Another attorney went to a second foreign creditor, and performed like services. Other beneficiaries were present at the execution of the mortgage, and knew the circumstances thereof. The mortgage was not recorded. Held, that these facts were sufficient to put such individual creditors on inquiry as to the solvency of the mortgagor.—Reagan v. First Nat. Bank of Chicago, 157 Ind. 623, 61 N. E. 575, 62 N. E. 701.

§ 159. Operation and effect of knowledge or notice.

(a) (Sup. 1833)

A judgment creditor may, by bill, subject to the satisfaction of his debt land sold on an execution against the debtor, which was issued on a judgment confessed by the debtor for the purpose of defrauding his creditors, where the purchaser had notice of the fraud.—Platt v. Judson, 3 Blackf. 235.

(b) (Sup. 1835)

Where the grantee knew of the indebtedness of the grantor, and therefore took the transfer for the purpose of defrauding grantor's creditors, the conveyance being without consideration, it should be set aside as fraudulent.—Ewing v. Harris, 4 Blackf. 71.

(c) (Sup. 1848)

A conveyance made by a debtor with the intention of delaying, hindering, or defrauding creditors, such intention being known to the party taking such conveyance, is void.—Tyner v. Somerville, 1 Ind. 175, Smith, 149.

(d) (Sup. 1849)

A sale of real or personal property made to hinder or delay creditors, though an adequate consideration be paid, is void if the purchaser has knowledge of the intention of the seller in making the sale.—Johnson v. Brandis Smith, 263.

(e) (Sup. 1856)

The fact that the vendee knew at the time of the conveyance that a suit was pending against the grantor to recover judgment for a debt is not of itself proof of the vendee's fraudulent intent.—Stewart v. English, 6 Ind. 176.

(f) (Sup. 1865)

A sale of land for a little over half its value to a brother-in-law who knows that a suit is pending against the grantor, and is told by the latter that he does not intend to pay any judgment that may be obtained in such suit, may be set aside as fraudulent at the suit of the judgment creditor.—Bray v. Hussey, 24 Ind. 228.

(g) (Sup. 1890)

A creditor has a right to obtain a preference from his debtor, and knowledge that a verdict had been returned against the latter, which he was unable to pay, is not of itself sufficient to avoid a mortgage taken by the creditor, though he is the debtor's brother.—Straight v. Roberts, 126 Ind. 383, 26 N. E. 73.

(h) (Sup. 1894)

A complaint in an action to set aside a conveyance by a debtor through a third person to his wife alleged that the conveyances were made to defraud creditors, and that the wife was party to that fraud with full notice and knowledge thereof. Held to show that the conveyance was fraudulent and would be set aside, even if there was a valuable consideration.—Roberts v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Attica, 36 N. E. 129, 136 Ind. 154.

[I] (Sup. 1904)

The fact that a seller is known by the buyer to be deeply indebted or insolvent is not of itself enough to charge the buyer with a want of good faith in making the purchase.—Sellers v. Hayes, 72 N. E. 119, 163 Ind. 422.

[J] (App. 1904)

Where land was conveyed without consideration in fraud of creditors, the conveyance may be set aside as against the grantee, who had knowledge of the fraudulent intent.—Trent v. Edmonds, 70 N. E. 169, 32 Ind. App. 482.

§ 160. Payment of consideration after notice.

[a] (Sup. 1845)

A conveyance of real estate made to defraud creditors will, on their application, be set aside in chancery, if the grantee, before payment of the purchase money, have notice of the fraud.—Parkinson v. Hanna, 7 Blackf. 400.

[b] (Sup. 1871)

An action may be brought by creditors to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent, and subject lands to the payment of debts to the extent of the unpaid purchase money, where they have been conveyed to an innocent purchaser, who has, however, notice of the fraud, while the purchase money or a part thereof still remains due and unpaid. The creditors are not limited to proceedings supplemental to execution.—Rhodes v. Green, 36 Ind. 7.

[c] (Sup. 1884)

Where a vendor fraudulently conveys his property for value, and notice of such fraudulent intent is given the purchaser before payment of the purchase money, such purchaser is chargeable with the fraudulent intent of his vendor, and such transaction is deemed fraudulent at least to the extent of the unpaid purchase money.—Seager v. Aughe, 97 Ind. 285.

[d] (Sup. 1887)

A person who pays the purchase money after knowledge of his grantor's fraudulent purpose is not a bona fide purchaser.—Hunsinger v. Hofer, 110 Ind. 390, 11 N. E. 463.

§ 162. — In general.

[a] In order to establish fraud on the part of the purchaser, participation, on his part, in the fraudulent design must be shown.—(Sup. 1855) Stewart v. English, 6 Ind. 176; (1878) Johnston v. Field, 62 Ind. 377.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

To sustain an action by a creditor to charge the land of his debtor's wife to the extent of improvements made thereon by the debtor, as made in fraud of creditors, it is essential that the wife should participate, or at least voluntarily acquiesce, in the fraudulent purpose of her husband.—Moore v. Lampton, 80 Ind. 301.

[c] (Sup. 1888)

A wife purchased the interest of plaintiff, her husband's partner, in the firm property, knowing that the property was incumbered, but did not assume the mortgage. The husband acted as her agent in the transaction, and agreed to pay the firm debts. The same day he assigned his interest to his wife, in consideration of a former debt, leaving himself without property, as the wife knew. She continued the business through her husband, and, the property having been burned, invested the insurance money with other money of her own, in real estate. All the firm debts except the mortgage were paid, but no firm property remained to satisfy that, and plaintiff was obliged to pay part of it. Held, that as fraud in taking title to the real estate in the wife was not found, and as by Rev. St. 1881, § 4924, the question of fraud is one of fact, which cannot be presumed, plaintiff could not subject the real estate to his claim.—Neisler v. Harris, 115 Ind. 560, 18 N. E. 39.

[d] (Sup. 1886)

Where a vendor testified that he had received from the vendee several items of cash and personal property; that these had not supplied the consideration for the conveyance, but had been paid for or secured by the assignment of a judgment; that the vendee "gave nothing for the deed"; that he told vendee of his debt to plaintiffs, but he "said he would do them up,"—the evidence is sufficient to justify a setting aside of the conveyance as fraudulent as to creditors.—Hay v. Marsh, 51 N. E. 1053, 152 Ind. 651.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. §§ 504, 505.

§ 163. — Operation and effect.

[a] A sale of either real or personal property, made with the intention of hindering or preventing creditors from collecting their demands of the vendor, if the vendee participate in the fraudulent intent, is voidable at the suit of such creditors, notwithstanding the vendee may have paid a valuable and adequate consideration.—(Sup. 1849) Johnson v. Brandis, Smith, 263;

(1882) Bishop v. Redmond, 83 Ind. 157; (1883) Buck v. Voreis, 89 Ind. 116.

[b] (Sup. 1867)

Where a conveyance was made with intent to defraud the grantor's creditors, and the grantee participated in the fraud, the fact that he paid a full consideration for the property was not sufficient to sustain the same as against the grantor's creditors defrauded.—Harrison v. Jaquess, 29 Ind. 208.

[c] (Sup. 1894)

Where it appears, in an action to set aside a conveyance by a debtor through a third person to his wife, that the wife was a party to the fraud, it is immaterial that the conveyance to her was without consideration.—Roberts v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Attica, 136 Ind. 154, 36 N. E. 128; Id., 137 Ind. 697, 36 N. E. 1091.

[d] (Sup. 1894)

In an action to set aside a conveyance made by a woman to a trustee, who then conveyed it to herself and her husband as an estate by entirety, the husband testified that during eight years in which his wife was in business he had given her over $6,000, and it appeared that the profits of her business probably amounted to $8,000. Both were insolvent, and the husband had been so for 15 years; what business he had done having been done in his wife's name, and he had long known that an estate by entirety placed the property beyond the reach of creditors. Held, that a finding that the conveyance was fraudulent was sustained.—Bunch v. Hart, 138 Ind. 1, 37 N. E. 537.

[e] (Sup. 1895)

An allegation, in a complaint to set aside a deed from a husband to his wife, that, at the time of the conveyance, the wife knew of her husband's indebtedness, and of his purpose to defraud his creditors, and that she received the deed with such knowledge, and with the purpose to aid him in the perpetration of the fraud, is sufficient, without averring want of consideration.—Pierce v. Hower, 142 Ind. 626, 42 N. E. 223.

[f] (Sup. 1896)

Where a wife has knowledge that a conveyance made to her by her husband is intended to defraud his creditors, and accept it for the purpose of protecting the property from their demands, the conveyance will not be protected, though a full consideration is paid.—Hoffman v. Henderson, 44 N. E. 629, 145 Ind. 613.

[g] (Sup. 1896)

Where one of two sureties secured from his principal notes and a mortgage to both sureties jointly, either knowing that the mortgage was intended to defraud creditors, or participating in such fraudulent intent, the other surety, in accepting the same, takes the mortgage with all the infirmities affecting it in the hands of his co-surety, though he might, by paying the debt for which they were sureties, alone maintain an action against their principal.—Rownd v. State, 51 N. E. 914, 52 N. E. 395, 152 Ind. 119.

§ 165. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1869)

A. purchased at a sheriff's sale against B., and conveyed to B.'s wife. There was evidence that A. purchased with B.'s money. Held, however, that B.'s wife's title was good unless she were proved to be a party to the transaction, which was fraudulent as against B.'s creditors.—Ewing v. Gray, 12 Ind. 64.

[b] Where the grantee has shown good faith, the validity of the conveyance is not affected by the fraudulent intent of the grantor.—(Sup. 1863) Palmer v. Henderson, 20 Ind. 297; (1870) McCormick v. Hyatt, 33 Ind. 546; (1880) Brown v. Rawlings, 72 Ind. 505; (1889) Scott v. Davis, 117 Ind. 232, 20 N. E. 139.

[c] (Sup. 1876)

In an action by a judgment plaintiff to set aside as fraudulent a conveyance of certain real estate, made by the judgment defendant to a trustee in trust for the grantor, after the accruing of the indebtedness and before judgment, and a conveyance by the trustee to the wife of the judgment defendant, executed after the rendition of the judgment, and to subject the real estate to sale, etc., an answer admitting the conveyances as alleged, but alleging that the first conveyance was in trust for the wife, and averring the payment of a consideration by the wife by the conveyance of her separate real estate, and denying notice of the indebtedness of her husband to plaintiff, and denying fraud, is sufficient.—Wynne v. Cornelison, 52 Ind. 312.

[d] (Sup. 1881)

In an action to set aside a conveyance for fraud, where there was evidence that the grantee paid no consideration for the property, it was proper to refuse to charge that, unless the grantee had notice of the fraudulent intent of the grantor, plaintiff could not recover.—Sherman v. Hogland, 73 Ind. 472.

[e] In order to avoid a voluntary conveyance as fraudulent against creditors it is not necessary that the grantee should have been cognizant of the fraud.—(Sup. 1881) McCole v. Loehr, 79 Ind. 430; (1883) Wright v. Nipple, 92 Ind. 310; (1892) York v. Rockwood, 132 Ind.

358, 31 N. E. 1110; (1896) Gilleland v. Jones, 144 Ind. 662, 48 N. E. 939, 35 Am. St. Rep. 210.

[f] (Sup. 1882)

Where the conveyance is voluntary, it is not necessary that the grantee should actually participate with the grantor in his fraudulent purpose, or the privy to it.—Cavanaugh v. Smith, 84 Ind. 380.

[g] (Sup. 1882)

A. and B., partners, were in debt. A. sold his interest to B., who agreed to pay the debts. B. sold the interest thus bought from A. to C., who bought the same in good faith, and without fraudulent intent, though B., in selling it, intended to defraud the creditors of the firm. Held, that the creditors of the firm could not take the property from C.,—that they had no lien thereon.—Trentman v. Swartzell, 85 Ind. 443.

[h] (Sup. 1883)

Creditors of an insolvent husband who, with intent to defraud his creditors, induced his wife's uncle to buy his land, worth $12,000, at a sale under an execution against him for $1,000, cannot subject the land to the payment of their demands as against the wife, where the uncle, in ignorance of the husband's fraudulent design, made it a condition that the land should be conveyed by him to the debtor's wife, who, as well as the uncle, acted throughout in good faith.—First Nat. Bank of Crawfordsville v. Carter, 89 Ind. 317.

[i] (Sup. 1883)

In an action to set aside a sale of property as in fraud of the seller's creditors, an instruction which requires plaintiff to prove that the purchaser had notice of the seller's fraudulent design is properly refused, where there is evidence that the purchaser was a mere volunteer, and paid no valuable consideration.—Meredith v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 92 Ind. 343.

[j] (App. 1891)

A merchant's stock having been seized on execution, the plaintiffs, one of whom was his brother-in-law, agreed with him to purchase the stock and assume certain debts. They had no knowledge of the business, and the sale was made after a day's negotiation. No price was then fixed. Two days afterwards the merchant conveyed to them a house and lot, in payment for which, and for the goods they gave him their notes for equal sums, payable in one, two, three, four, five, and six years. This was all the property the merchant had, and the price was a fair one. The plaintiffs paid the debts they assumed, and he had assured them that there were no others. Held, that a judgment that the conveyance was not fraudulent as to creditors should not be disturbed, as against the evidence.—Wilson v. Clark, 1 Ind. App. 182, 27 N. E. 310; South Bend Iron-Works Co. v. Dudleyson, 27 N. E. 312.

[k] (Sup. 1892)

A conveyance of realty as in fraud of creditors cannot be set aside without any evidence of fraud of the grantee.—Old Nat. Bank of Evansville v. Findley, 31 N. E. 62, 131 Ind. 225.

[l] (Sup. 1900)

Where land is conveyed by a debtor for a valuable consideration, and the grantee has no knowledge of any intended fraud, the conveyance will not be set aside as being in fraud of creditors.—Hedrick v. Hall, 58 N. E. 257, 155 Ind. 371.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. §§ 494, 518; 48 CENT. DIG. Ven. & Pur. § 588.

§ 168. — Nature and amount of consideration.

[a] A conveyance by a debtor to his wife, with intent to defraud his creditors and without consideration, will be set aside, though she had no knowledge of the fraudulent intent.—(Sup. 1875) Spinner v. Weick, 50 Ind. 213; (1881) McCole v. Loehr, 79 Ind. 430.

[b] (Sup. 1898)

When one, to defraud his creditors, divested himself of all his property, and, among other deeds, executed a deed to his wife of certain land, for a grossly inadequate consideration, though there was no evidence that the wife participated in or was aware of her husband's fraud, the conveyance to the wife will be set aside, upon such conditions as will protect her equities in the land.—First Nat. Bank of Frankfort v. Smith, 49 N. E. 376, 149 Ind. 443.

[c] (App. 1901)

Burns' Rev. St. 1901, §§ 6645, 6648 (Horners' Rev. St. 1897, §§ 4920, 4923), provide that a conveyance to defraud creditors is void as to the latter if the conveyance be without a valuable consideration, but the title of a purchaser for a valuable consideration is not invalid unless he had notice of his grantor's fraudulent intent. A complaint did not allege notice of fraud on the part of the grantee, but did allege an absence of consideration. The proof showed that the conveyance was partially voluntary, and that the consideration was inadequate. Held, that a recovery was not precluded, notwithstanding the grantee had no notice of fraud, where the creditors would be benefited by subjecting the property, subject to the lien of a valid mortgage assumed by the grantee, to the payment of their claims.—Jameson v. Dilley, 61 N. E. 601, 27 Ind. App. 429.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. §§ 494, 520.

§ 169. — Voluntary conveyances.

[a] Where the conveyance is voluntary, the good faith of the grantee does not render it valid.—(Sup. 1892) York v. Rockwood, 132 Ind. 358, 31 N. E. 110; (1896) Gilliland v. Jones, 144 Ind. 662, 43 N. E. 939, 55 Am. St. Rep. 210.

[b] A conveyance by husband to wife in fraud of creditors may be set aside, where no consideration was paid, whether the wife had knowledge of the fraud or not.—(Sup. 1894) Roberts v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Attica, 36 N. E. 123, 136 Ind. 154; (1905) Borror v. Carrier, 73 N. E. 123, 34 Ind. App. 353.

[c] (Sup. 1896)

In an action to set aside, as fraudulent against creditors, a voluntary grant of land, since it is the intent of the grantor, and not the knowledge of the intent by the grantee, which determines the fraud, it is immaterial whether the creditors as to whom the fraudulent character of the conveyance is alleged became such prior or subsequent to the grant.—Gilliland v. Jones, 144 Ind. 662, 43 N. E. 939, 55 Am. St. Rep. 210.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. §§ 494, 520.

§ 170. — Confidential relations of parties.

[a] (Sup. 1894)

There can be no reversal of a finding for the grantee on the facts, where he has testified that the grantor, his brother-in-law, owed him a certain amount for money loaned; that, when grantee first learned that grantor was neglecting his farm and was speculating in produce, he tried to obtain payment; that he accepted the deed in payment; that then he did not know of the other claims against grantor; that the deed was absolute, without reservation in grantor's favor; that grantee, in taking it, purposed merely to collect his claim, not to defraud or assist grantor to defraud other creditors, and did not know or believe that grantor so intended.—Fleming v. Yost, 137 Ind. 95, 36 N. E. 705.

A note and mortgage made for the purpose of cheating and defrauding creditors are obligatory upon the parties, and are only voidable at the instance of the creditors.—Van Wy v. Clark, 50 Ind. 259.

[h] (Sup. 1876)

A written instrument giving one creditor a lien is not invalidated between the parties by the facts that the creditor intended, by obtaining it, to gain a preference over other creditors, and that the debtor executed it negligently, and in reliance on the creditor's assurance that it was "all right."—Steele v. Moore, 54 Ind. 52.

[i] A voluntary conveyance, though fraudulent as to existing creditors, is valid between the parties and their privies.—(Sup. 1881) Sharpe v. Davis, 76 Ind. 17; (1885) Anderson v. Etter, 102 Ind. 115, 26 N. E. 218.

[a] (Sup. 1845)

A transfer of property will convey the legal title, though made to defraud creditors.—Doe ex dem. Abbott v. Hurd, 7 Blackf. 510.

[b] (Sup. 1851)

Where a conveyance of land is made by a father to his son without consideration and for the purpose of defrauding his creditors, and the lands have descended to the heirs of the grantee, the court will, upon the application of creditors, set aside the sale as to them; and decree the land to be sold to pay their claims and costs, and the heirs of the grantee will be entitled to any surplus remaining.—Burch v. Elliott, 3 Ind. 99.

[c] (Sup. 1864)

A. owned a tract of land, and, with intent to defraud his creditors, conveyed it, without consideration, to B., who, to aid A. in accomplishing his fraud, conveyed it, without consideration, to C. C. mortgaged the land to the sinking fund for a loan of $500, which he received. C. was a party to the purpose of A. to defraud his creditors. The state received the mortgage made to the sinking fund, and made the loan in good faith. All of said conveyances, except the mortgage to the sinking fund, were set aside by a decree of the proper court, and the land ordered to be sold, subject to said mortgage, for the benefit of the creditors of A. The land did not sell for enough to pay them. Suit was then brought against C. to compel him to account for and pay over to A.'s creditors the $500 obtained by the said mortgage. Held, that C. was entitled to the money as against A., but held it in trust for the creditors of A., to whom he was liable to account and pay it over.—Jones v. Reeder, 22 Ind. 111.

In an action for rent accruing on a lease, and a defense of want of title in the lessor, a reply by the lessor that a deed of lessor to lessee was void because in fraud of creditors, and that no title passed thereby, is not good as a denial of the title set up by the lessee, since, as between the parties to such a deed, the conveyance is valid.—Henry v. Stevens, 108 Ind. 231, 9 N. E. 356.

[e] (Sup. 1891)

Where a debtor executes an absolute conveyance of lands to his creditor to secure a debt to the latter, and at the same time to hinder and delay other creditors, an oral agreement of the grantee to reconvey the land to the grantor on payment of the debt will not be enforced in equity.—Kitts v. Willson, 130 Ind. 402, 29 N. E. 401.

[f] (Sup. 1906)

That a husband had a dishonest purpose in changing the style of his bank account, which he maintained from the proceeds of his business from his own name to that of his wife, followed by the word "special," without intending to give the wife any interest therein and without parting with the right to the money, did not create a right in the wife to the account, and on her death the husband might establish a claim against her estate for the amount of such deposits.—*Leimgruber v. [a] (Sup. 1823)

The maker of a note given as consideration of a bill of sale executed to defraud the creditors of the vendor cannot set up the alleged fraud as a defense to the note.—Findley v. Cooley, 1 Blackf. 262.

[b] (Sup. 1860)

Where A. gives his note to B. for property bought of C., he is estopped from setting up as a defense to a suit on the note that the note really belongs to C. and is fraudulent as against the latter's creditors.—Stevens v. Songer, 14 Ind. 342.

§ 179. Rights and liabilities as to third persons in general.

[a] (Sup. 1863)

A conveyance, fraudulent as to creditors, may be valid between the parties, and enforced as to them, and especially in favor of a third person, to whom a promise growing out of such transaction had been made.—Moore v. Meek, 20 Ind. 484.

[b] Third persons cannot take advantage of a conveyance as fraudulent against creditors.—(Sup. 1876) Edwards v. Haverstick, 53 Ind. 348.

[c] A conveyance in fraud of creditors can be attacked only by creditors. It is valid as to all others.—(Sup. 1873) O'Neil v. Chandler, 42 Ind. 471; (1877) Bentley v. Dunkle, 57 Ind. 374; (1882) Etter v. Anderson, 84 Ind. 333.

[d] (Sup. 1876)

Where real estate has been conveyed for the purpose of hindering and delaying creditors of the grantor, the property is subject to levy and sale under an execution against the grantee, and a subsequent conveyance thereof, made by the grantor, passes no title.—Edwards v. Haverstick, 53 Ind. 348.

A conveyance of real estate in fraud of the grantor's creditors, being valid as between the parties and as to all others than creditors, the land is subject to levy and sale under an execution against the grantee.—Id.

[e] (Sup. 1889)

In a suit to enjoin trespass on land, defendant alleged that E. obtained judgment against C., who was then the owner of the land; that execution was by mistake levied on an entirely different tract of land, which was conveyed by the purchasers to defendant; that while the judgment was a lien on the land in controversy, C. conveyed the same to his wife, and she to plaintiff, without consideration, and for the purpose of defrauding creditors; and that plaintiff had notice of defendant's claim. Held that, it not appearing that defendant was at any time a creditor of C., defendant had no standing to question the intent with which the deeds to C.'s wife and to plaintiff were made.—Clendening v. Ohl, 118 Ind. 46, 20 N. E. 639.

[f] (Sup. 1889)

An agreement whereby a father gives lands to his son, who takes possession and subsequently claims by prescription, cannot be attacked by other heirs as in fraud of creditors.—Wilson v. Campbell, 21 N. E. 893, 119 Ind. 286.

[g] (App. 1904)

Where plaintiff extended credit to the defendant's son, relying on a representation, made with defendant's consent, that the son owned a certain tract of land, the validity of a subsequent conveyance of the land without consideration to the defendant cannot, as against plaintiff, be sustained on the ground that a previous conveyance of it by defendant to his son was without consideration, to defraud creditors.—Trent v. Edmonds, 70 N. E. 169, 32 Ind. App. 432.

§ 181. — Property and proceeds thereof.

[a] (Sup. 1888)

Where a husband, having no property subject to execution, invests his funds in his wife's land, colluding with her to defraud his creditors thereby, and his wife afterwards sells the land, and retains the proceeds, she will be regarded in equity as trustee for the husband's judgment creditors.—Blair v. Smith, 114 Ind. 114, 15 N. E. 817, 5 Am. St. Rep. 593.

[b] (Sup. 1888)

Where one gives a note without consideration and suffers judgment and execution thereon in fraud of his creditors, the payee, knowing of such fraud, is liable to the creditors for the property seized.—Phelps v. Smith, 116 Ind. 387, 17 N. E. 602, 19 N. E. 156.

One who enters into a conspiracy to defraud the creditors of a co-conspirator, and, pursuant to such purpose, obtains a judgment, and a sale under an execution thereon, may be compelled to account for the proceeds of the sale to the creditors of the co-conspirator.—Id.

[c] (Sup. 1886)

Where, in a suit by a judgment creditor to set aside a sale of the debtor's land for value, as in fraud of his judgment, the court decrees the sale "void as to the judgment," and renders judgment for the creditor for the amount due, the grantee, by paying such amount, frees his title as against the decree.—Kitts v. Willson, 140 Ind. 604, 39 N. E. 313.

[d] (Sup. 1900)

In an action by an executor to set aside a conveyance of 80 acres of land by his testator, and for a decree that the land be sold to pay testator's debts, defendant's cross complaint alleged that the 80 acres was part of 241 acres owned by the testator, which testator conveyed in different parcels, at the same time and without consideration to several beneficiaries, of which defendant was one. Held sufficient to entitle defendant to a decree that the testator's indebtedness was chargeable ratably, according to value, against all the parcels conveyed.—Kaufman v. Elder, 56 N. E. 215, 154 Ind. 157.

§ 182. — Personal liabilities.

[a] (Sup. 1831)

Where a third person has placed goods of a judgment debtor out of the reach of execution, he may be compelled to account for them to the plaintiff in equity.—Jenison v. Graves, 2 Blackf. 440.

[b] (Sup. 1864)

A. owned a tract of land, and, with intent to defraud his creditors, conveyed it, without consideration, to B., who, to aid A. in accomplishing his fraud, conveyed it without consideration to C. C. mortgaged the land to the sinking fund for a loan of $500, which he received. C. was a party to the purpose of A. to defraud his creditors. The state received the mortgage made to the sinking fund, and made the loan in good faith. All of said conveyances, except the mortgage to the sinking fund, were set aside by a decree of the proper court, and the land ordered to be sold, subject to said mortgage, for the benefit of the creditors of A. The land did not sell for enough to pay them. Suit was then brought against C. to compel him to account for and pay over to A.'s creditors the $500 obtained by the said mortgage. Held, that C., though entitled to the money as against A., held it in trust for the creditors of A., to whom he was liable to account and pay it over.—Jones v. Reeder, 22 Ind. 111.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

Under a conveyance of property made with intent to defraud creditors of the grantor, the grantee will be treated as a trustee for the creditors.—Stout v. Stout, 77 Ind. 537.

[d] (Sup. 1882)

Where the purchaser of land causes a conveyance to be made to his wife with an intent to defraud his creditors, the land is subject to the execution of any creditor under Rev. St. 1881, §§ 752, 2974, 2975, providing that, where a conveyance is made to one person and the consideration paid by another, "a trust shall result in favor of prior creditors."—Hanna v. Aebker, 84 Ind. 411.

[e] (Sup. 1883)

When a conveyance for a valuable consideration is made to one person and the consideration therefor is paid by another, and the conveyance is made with the consent of the person paying the consideration and at his instance, and not upon an agreement, without any fraudulent intent that the land, or some interest therein, shall be held in trust for the person paying the consideration, but it is for the purpose of defrauding his creditors, a trust results not in his favor, but in favor of his creditors.—Eve v. Louis, 91 Ind. 457.

[f] (Sup. 1887)

Where property was purchased and the consideration paid by a debtor out of money a portion of which might have been subjected to the payment of his debt, and the conveyance was taken in the name of another, the transaction was presumptively fraudulent as to prior creditors of such debtor and a trust resulted in their favor under Rev. St. 1881, § 2975, providing that every conveyance taken in the name of a third person shall be deemed fraudulent as against creditors of the person paying the consideration, and that, unless a fraudulent intent is disproved, a trust shall result in favor of the prior creditors.—Eiler v. Crull, 14 N. E. 79, 112 Ind. 318.

[g] (Sup. 1888)

Where specific property which a creditor might have subjected to the payment of his claim is transferred by a debtor for the purpose of delaying and defrauding his creditors, the person accepting the transfer with knowledge of and participating in the fraud takes no title as against creditors, but the transfer is void at common law, as well as under the statute, and he holds the property in trust, and, like any other trustee, is liable to be called to account in a court of equity.—Chamberlin v. Jones, 16 N. E. 178, 114 Ind. 458.

[h] (Sup. 1889)

In an action by judgment creditors to set aside a mortgage as fraudulent, and subject the mortgagor's property to plaintiffs' judgment, a personal judgment cannot be rendered against the mortgagee; nor can the property conveyed be ordered to be sold without relief from valuation or appraisalment law, under

Rev. St. 1881, § 743, where there is no finding of fraud.—Levy v. Chittenden, 120 Ind. 37, 22 N. E. 92.

[I] (Sup. 1888)

A fraudulent vendee, who paid the full price for the property sold, is not thereby rendered liable to garnishment, as he is not indebted to the debtor.—Jaseph v. Kronenberger, 120 Ind. 495, 22 N. E. 301.

[J] (Sup. 1894)

A grantee of property, conveyed by a debtor to defraud creditors, on accepting a conveyance, becomes a trustee for the creditor, and is directly liable for the value of the property so conveyed, where he actively participates in the fraud, and subsequently disposes of the property.—Doherty v. Holliday, 137 Ind. 282, 32 N. E. 315, 36 N. E. 907.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. FRAUD. CONV. §§ 578-582, 695.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 636-638.

§ 184. — Claims and liens acquired by grantee.

[a] (Sup. 1870)

A vendee bought mortgaged land for the purpose of delaying the creditors of his vendor, under an agreement to reconvey, whenever such vendor's relations with his creditors would permit him to hold title with safety, on being reimbursed for interest paid on the mortgage. Held, that the creditors were entitled to subject the land to the payment of their claims, without accounting to the vendee for interest paid by him.—Musselman v. Kent, 33 Ind. 452.

[b] (Sup. 1882)

Where a mortgagor conveys property to the mortgagee to defraud other creditors, and the conveyance is set aside as fraudulent at the instance of creditors, the mortgage is not lost.—First Nat. Bank of Lebanon v. Essex, 84 Ind. 144.

[c] (Sup. 1888)

A wife who has expended money on the house of her husband, on his agreement to have it conveyed through a trustee to himself and her, as tenants by entirety, not knowing that such conveyance was to defraud creditors, is entitled, as against them, to a lien for such sum.—Marmon v. White, 51 N. E. 930, 151 Ind. 445.

§ 186. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1849)

A bona fide grantee of land for a valuable and adequate consideration will obtain a good title, through the intention of the grantor in making the conveyance was to defraud his creditors.—Doe ex dem. Hutchinson v. Horn, 1 Ind. 363, Smith, 242, 50 Am. Dec. 470.

[b] The owner of property can sell it and give a good title to a bona fide purchaser without regard to creditors until they obtain some lien upon it.—(Sup. 1861) McMahan v. Morrison, 16 Ind. 172, 79 Am. Dec. 418; (1862) Dillon v. Dorne, 19 Ind. 203.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

Where, after a new trial was awarded to a grantor and refused to the grantee in an alleged fraudulent conveyance, a general verdict having been obtained against both of them in a suit by a creditor of the grantor to set such conveyance aside, and at a subsequent term the cause was heard by the court and judgment rendered in favor of the grantor, held error to render a judgment against the grantee upon the verdict obtained against him.—Love v. Geyer, 74 Ind. 12.

(B) PURCHASERS FROM GRANTOR.

Rights and liabilities of purchasers from grantee as to purchasers from grantor, see post, § 204.

§ 189. Subsequent purchasers in general.

[a] (Sup. 1832)

Where a father made a voluntary conveyance of land to his son, which deed was not recorded, and afterwards conveyed the same land voluntarily to the children of the son, it was held that a purchaser of the land at a sale on execution issued on a judgment rendered against the son after the second voluntary conveyance by the father was entitled to hold the same against the grandchildren.—Way v. Lyon, 3 Blackf. 76.

[b] (Sup. 1843)

A subsequent purchaser with notice cannot impeach a prior conveyance as fraudulent, though he paid consideration.—McNeely v. Rucker, 6 Blackf. 391.

[c] (Sup. 1845)

A subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer with notice cannot defeat a voluntary conveyance made in good faith.—Paine v. Doe ex dem. Griffin, 7 Blackf. 485.

[d] (Sup. 1885)

A voluntary conveyance was made to S., and by him to plaintiff, in pursuance of a scheme to defraud the creditors of S.'s grantor. There was no actual intent to defraud subsequent purchasers. S. conveyed to defendant, who purchased for value, and without notice of the conveyance to plaintiff, which had not been recorded. The grantor of S. was then in possession under a lease from S. The deed to defendant misdescribed the land, and he obtained a decree reforming his deed, and quieting his title against S. and plaintiff, which decree was afterwards reversed on appeal. Pending the appeal, defendant recovered the land from plaintiff in ejectment. A mortgage, which was prior to the conveyance to S., was foreclosed, and the land bid in by defendant. The time for redemption expired before the reversal of the decree quieting defendant's title. Plaintiff then sued to quiet his title, and to be relieved from the judgment in ejectment, and admitted to redeem from the sale on foreclosure. Held, that plaintiff's participation in the scheme to defraud creditors precluded him from obtaining the relief asked.—Anderson v. Etter, 102 Ind. 115, 26 N. E. 218.

§ 191. Mortgagees and pledgees.

[a] (Sup. 1883)

A judgment creditor became the purchaser on execution of land fraudulently conveyed by the debtor, before the return of the execution was made, and the return recorded in the execution docket, as required by statute. Before the time of redemption expired, the purchaser, holding the legal title mortgaged the land for a loan of money; the mortgagee having no actual notice of the fact that the conveyance to the mortgagor was made to defraud creditors. Held, that the record on the execution docket was constructive notice to the mortgagee.—Sanders v. Muegge, 91 Ind. 214.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. FRAUD. CONV. § 601.

§ 192. Bona fide purchasers.

[a] (Sup. 1843)

The record of a voluntary conveyance is sufficient notice to a subsequent purchaser, so as to preclude him from attacking it as fraudulent.—McNeely v. Rucker, 6 Blackf. 391.

[b] (Sup. 1885)

A volunteer who has taken a conveyance to defraud creditors cannot be heard in a court of equity to say, as against a purchaser in good faith and without notice, that the fraud intended was aimed at creditors, and not at purchasers; Rev. St. 1881, § 4924, providing that no conveyance shall be adjudged fraudulent, as against subsequent purchasers, "solely on the ground that it was not founded on a valuable consideration," and sections 4915, 4916, that a conveyance made to defraud purchasers shall be void as against a purchaser for value, and without actual or legal notice, and that, if the grantee was privy to the fraud intended, the conveyance shall be void as to purchasers for value with notice.—Anderson v. Etter, 102 Ind. 115, 26 N. E. 218.

(C) PURCHASERS FROM GRANTEE IN GENERAL.

§ 194. Rights and liabilities as to creditors of original grantor.

[a] (Sup. 1853)

Where a debtor, holding title to land by title bond, fraudulently caused the legal title to be conveyed to his son, in order to defeat a judgment against him expected in a pending litigation, and the son thereupon conveyed to a third person, both of the successive grantees taking the conveyance with the knowledge of the suit against the debtor and to prevent a sale of the land to satisfy the expected judgment, the land was liable in equity for the payment of the judgment.—Corwin v. Reddington, 4 Ind. 198.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

One who, as a bona fide purchaser, has acquired as against the grantor's creditors a good title to land, could convey a good title to one who had notice, and hence the fact that the latter purchased after an execution against the debtor had been levied would not defeat his title.—Studabaker v. Langard, 79 Ind. 320.

(D) BONA FIDE PURCHASERS FROM GRANTEE.

§ 198. Good faith in general.

[a] (Sup. 1879)

The grantee of real estate, who purchased for a valuable consideration and in good faith, conveyed the same to the wife of the grantor. Held, that she took title thereto freed from the claims of her husband's creditors, although she might have notice of the fraud charged against him; there being no evidence that any of his money went into the purchase.—Evans v. Nealis, 69 Ind. 148.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. § 612.

§ 199. Notice.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

A purchaser of land conveyed by his vendor's grantor in fraud of creditors is not affected with notice of the fraud by the levy of an execution, previous to the purchase, under a judgment rendered after the sale to his grantor, who was himself an innocent purchaser for value.—Studabaker v. Langard, 79 Ind. 320.

[b] (App. 1903)

A husband conveyed land to his wife, and she conveyed it to their son. Pending appeal from a decision that the conveyances were not in fraud of creditors, a third party took a conveyance of the land from the son. Held, that knowledge of the fraud on the part of such third party was shown by proof that he had formerly prosecuted an action similar to this against the husband, wife, and son, in which the same fraud was directly charged in his complaint.—Farmers' Bank of Frankfort v. First Nat. Bank, 66 N. E. 503, 30 Ind. App. 520.

§ 203. — As to creditors of original grantor.

[a] A bona fide purchaser from a fraudulent vendee takes a good title.—(Sup. 1833) Dugan v. Vattier, 3 Blackf. 245, 25 Am. Dec. 105; (1843) Scott v. Purcell, 7 Blackf. 66, 39 Am. Dec. 453.

[b] (Sup. 1838)

Where a deed absolute in form is given as security, it is a mortgage; but the debtor may waive his right to redeem, and authorize the mortgagee to sell; and, if he does, a bona fide purchaser will be protected in his title, though the conveyance was in fact made to hinder and delay creditors of the mortgagor.—Blair v. Bass, 4 Blackf. 539.

[c] (Sup. 1843)

The title of bona fide purchasers from a fraudulent grantee, acquired before a sheriff's sale of the land under a judgment against the fraudulent grantor, is superior to that of the purchaser at the sheriff's sale.—Scott v. Purcell, 7 Blackf. 66, 39 Am. Dec. 453.

[d] (Sup. 1862)

The vendee of a fraudulent seller may have the legal and beneficial ownership, and may pass the same to a bona fide purchaser under him at any time before the seller's creditors seek to divest him of the property.—Sharp v. Jones, 18 Ind. 314, 81 Am. Dec. 359.

[e] (Sup. 1881)

A. purchased land of B. for $7,000 of which he paid $1,000, and subsequently, to avoid certain of his debts, he and his wife re-conveyed to B., who gave the wife a title bond conditioned to convey to her on payment of the original purchase price, and credited her with the $1,000, but paid nothing for the conveyance to himself, and A. furnished his wife $300 with which to make payments, but all other payments made by her, amounting to $500, were out of her own money. Held, that she was a bona fide purchaser as against a judgment creditor who did not obtain judgment till after the giving of the title bond.—Studabaker v. Langard, 79 Ind. 320.

[f] (Sup. 1883)

If, before the creditor of a fraudulent grantor takes proper steps to avoid the fraudulent conveyance, the rights of innocent grantees or mortgagees intervene, they are to be protected.—Sanders v. Muegge, 91 Ind. 214.

[g] (Sup. 1888)

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 2970, declaring that no trust shall defeat the title of a purchaser for value without notice, where a debtor procures the conveyance of land to his wife in exchange for lands owned by him, and, after judgment recovered against him, the wife conveys to an innocent purchaser for value without notice, the latter's title cannot be subjected to the claims of the husband's creditors. Section 2975, providing that a conveyance to one, for a consideration paid by another, shall be presumed fraudulent as against the latter's creditors, and that, where a fraudulent intent is not disproved, a trust shall result in their favor, does not apply.—Carnahan v. McCord, 116 Ind. 67, 18 N. E. 177.

[a] A conveyance actually intended as a fraud on existing creditors may be impeached by a subsequent creditor.—(Sup. 1859) Ruffing v. Tilton, 12 Ind. 239; (1861) Dart v. Stewart, 17 Ind. 221.

[b] (Sup. 1883)

Subsequent creditors cannot set aside a conveyance made for the purpose of defrauding existing creditors, under Rev. St. 1881, § 2975, if there was no secret trust or intent to defraud subsequent creditors.—Stumph v. Bruner, 80 Ind. 556.

[c] (Sup. 1888)

A divorced wife's judgment for alimony makes her a subsequent creditor of her divorced husband within the legal meaning of that term.—Plunkett v. Plunkett, 16 N. E. 612, 17 N. E. 562, 114 Ind. 484.

§ 210. — Knowledge or notice of fraudulent transaction.

[a] (Sup. 1891)

The holders of paid-up stock of a corporation conveyed their stock and deed to the corporate property to the president thereof, who assumed all liabilities, and executed mortgages on the corporate property to secure the purchase price of the stock, and borrowed money, which mortgages and the deed were duly recorded. Stockholders who had full knowledge of the transaction were also stockholders in another corporation, which subsequently became a creditor of the former one. Held, that the conveyances and mortgages were not fraudulent as against such creditor corporation.—Parke County Coal Co. v. Terre Haute Paper Co., 129 Ind. 73, 26 N. E. 884.

§ 213. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1868)

Officers of court holding claims for costs are such creditors as may set aside their debtor's conveyance as fraudulent.—Chapman v. Chapman, 13 Ind. 306.

[b] (Sup. 1891)

A creditor cannot sue to set aside a fraudulent conveyance made by his debtor, where the latter has afterwards assigned all his property for the benefit of his creditors, where the trust has been executed and the assignee discharged, though neither the assignee nor the creditor had any knowledge of the fraudulent conveyance till after the assignee's discharge.—Voorhees v. Carpenter, 127 Ind. 300, 26 N. E. 838.

[c] (App. 1906)

A conveyance to the grantor's sister, made without consideration, to prevent a husband whose money the grantor had won at gambling from recovering his money, is fraudulent as to the wife, who is the beneficiary of a judgment in an action by the state for the recovery of such money.—Tyler v. Davis, 37 Ind. App. 557, 75 N. E. 3.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

§ 215. — For torts.

[a] (Sup. 1858)

One having a right to damages for a tort is a creditor, within 2 Rev. St. p. 154, § 526, enacting that lands fraudulently conveyed with intent to delay creditors shall be subject to execution.—Pennington v. Clifton, 11 Ind. 162.

[b] (Sup. 1873)

One having a cause of action for slander is a creditor within the intent of the statute against fraudulent conveyances.—Shean v. Shay, 42 Ind. 375, 13 Am. Rep. 306.

[c] (Sup. 1882)

One who has a legal claim to damages, capable of enforcement by judicial process, is such a creditor as may attack a debtor's fraudulent conveyance; and a claim for the maintenance of an illegitimate child, or for seduction, will constitute the holder thereof such a creditor.—Bishop v. Redmond, 83 Ind. 157.

[d] (Sup. 1887)

In determining whether a conveyance is in fraud of creditors, one who has a legal right to damages for the seduction of his wife is to be held a creditor, whether he has instituted a suit or not.—Hunsinger v. Hofer, 110 Ind. 390, 11 N. E. 463.

[e] (Sup. 1893)

A person having a cause of action against another for damages for a tort becomes a creditor of such person when the cause of action accrues, and can maintain an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance by such person.—Petree v. Brotherton, 133 Ind. 692, 32 N. E. 300.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

§ 217. — On demands not matured.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

The holders of a promissory note not due cannot subject to its payment land fraudulently conveyed by the maker, which they fear may pass into the hands of an innocent third person.—Evans v. Thornburg, 77 Ind. 106.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

Suit attacking a conveyance as in fraud of creditors cannot be maintained by creditors whose claims are not due.—Collins v. Nelson, 81 Ind. 75.

[c] (Sup. 1886)

A mortgagee of chattels may sue for equitable relief against a subsequent fraudulent mortgage of the chattels, and a judgment foreclosing the same, although the debt secured is not yet due him.—McCormick v. Hartley, 107 Ind. 248, 6 N. E. 357.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 430.

§ 218. — On contingent liabilities.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

An administrator of a surety had an equitable right to have the property of the principal exhausted before resort was had to her intestate's estate; and hence could maintain an action to set aside fraudulent conveyances for that purpose, notwithstanding she had paid nothing on the claim growing out of the principal's default, and which had been allowed against the estate.—Strong v. Taylor School Tp., 79 Ind. 208.

[b] (Sup. 1883)

A grantee with covenant of warranty, who is ejected, has a sufficient claim against the grantor to maintain an action to set aside a fraudulent deed made by him, though, at the time the deed was executed, the grantee had not been evicted.—Wright v. Nipple, 92 Ind. 310.

[c] (Sup. 1889)

A conveyance of real estate by the surety on a guardian's bond may be set aside as fraudulent, though there was no breach of the conditions of the bond at the time conveyance was made.—Bowen v. State ex rel. Bradbury, 121 Ind. 235, 23 N. E. 75.

[d] (Sup. 1891)

The surety who has not yet been compelled to pay the debt cannot maintain a suit in equity to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of land by the maker, and have the land declared subject to the payment of the debt.—Barnes v. Sammons, 128 Ind. 596, 27 N. E. 747.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. §§ 643-645, 650.

§ 223. Creditors purchasing at execution sales.

[a] (Sup. 1830)

A purchaser at a judicial sale has the right to attack a prior conveyance made by the judgment debtor as being fraudulent as against creditors.—Frakes v. Brown, 2 Blackf. 295.

[b] (Sup. 1846)

After a conveyance, the grantor contracted a debt, for which judgment was obtained before the conveyance was recorded. Subsequent to recording the conveyance, which was not recorded in time, the land was sold under an execution on said judgment. Held, that the purchaser, having notice by the record of the prior deed, took nothing by his purchase.—Doe ex dem. Abbott v. Hurd, 7 Blackf. 510.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

Where a creditor is estopped, by participation in a fraudulent conveyance, from afterwards questioning it, a purchaser at execution sale under such creditor's judgment is likewise precluded from doing so.—Sharpe v. Davis, 76 Ind. 17.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. § 651.

§ 225. Estoppel and waiver.

Estoppel of purchaser at execution sale, see ante, § 223.

[a] (Sup. 1871)

A complainant, in an action to set aside a conveyance of land as fraudulent, is not estopped, as to the grantee in such a conveyance, from subjecting the land to the payment of his judgment by the fact that he had already executed a conveyance of it, since his purpose in subjecting it to sale may be to perfect the title of his grantees.—New v. New, 127 Ind. 576, 27 N. E. 154.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

A. and B., as tenants in common by descent from their father, owned two farms, one in X. county, the other in Y. county; and it was agreed that A. should take one of the farms and B. the other. A's mother was a judgment creditor of his, and had filed a transcript of her judgment in X. county. A. and his wife gave B. a deed of an undivided half of the Y. farm, while at the same time B. and his wife gave to A's wife and daughter C. a deed for all the X. land, at the request of A's mother; and all the deeds were duly recorded. Held, that A's mother could not question C's title.—Sharpe v. Davis, 76 Ind. 17.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

A creditor, joining in a deed of partition after his debtor had made a fraudulent conveyance of his interest in the land partitioned, does not thereby waive his right to maintain a bill to subject his debtor's interest in the land to the payment of his debt, where the partition deed recited that it should in nowise prejudice the creditor from maintaining such bill.—Stout v. Stout, 77 Ind. 537.

[d] (Sup. 1882)

In an action to set aside conveyances as fraudulent to creditors, plaintiff alleged that he recovered a judgment against one of the defendants; that, prior to incurring the indebtedness on which the judgment was based, defendant owned certain real estate and conveyed the same by mesne conveyances to defendant's wife; that the conveyances were made without consideration, and with intent to defraud creditors; that thereafter said husband and wife conveyed the property to another of the defendants who had previously been notified by plaintiff of the fraudulent character of the prior conveyance. The last-named defendant answered that, after the land was conveyed to defendant's wife, plaintiff, with full knowledge of the conveyance, demanded of her that she sign certain notes, which she did; that the reason therefor was her receipt of the conveyances of the land; and that plaintiff then and there accepted her promise to pay the debt because of her ownership. Held insufficient to show a confirmation of the fraudulent conveyances by plaintiff; it failing to allege that plaintiff at the time of taking the notes had knowledge that the conveyances were fraudulent.—Heaton v. White, 85 Ind. 376.

[e] (Sup. 1897)

A creditor who, knowing of the failing circumstances of the debtor, agrees to the giving of a mortgage by the debtor to another creditor on condition of the other extending time on his claim, he to receive no security till a certain part of the other's claim was paid, cannot attack it on the ground that it was intended to hinder and delay him in the collection of his claim.—Smith v. Wells Mfg. Co., 148 Ind. 333, 46 N. E. 1000.

[f] (Sup. 1897)

Where a creditor learns that a first mortgage was fraudulent as to creditors, after he has accepted a second mortgage subject thereto, he may abandon his mortgage, and assail the first mortgage for the fraud.—Old Nat. Bank of Evansville v. Heckman, 47 N. E. 953, 148 Ind. 490.

Fraudulent conveyances as ground for attachment, see ATTACHMENT, §§ 39-45.

[a] (App. 1904)

Under the express provisions of Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 925, a creditor may attach land fraudulently conveyed, whether the debt is due or not.—Trent v. Edmonds, 70 N. E. 169, 32 Ind. App. 432.

In an action of attachment and to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, the attachment properly issued against the grantee with notice of the fraud.—Id.

As notice to purchaser from fraudulent grantee, see ante, § 199.

[a] (Sup. 1851)

Rev. St. 1843, p. 453, § 1, enacts that lands, tenements, etc., fraudulently conveyed with intent to defeat, delay, or defraud creditors, and such as are holden by any one in trust for or to the use of another, shall be liable to be sold on execution. Held, that land procured by a judgment debtor to be conveyed to a third person, who colludes with the debtor to defraud the latter's creditors, may be seized and sold on execution on the creditors' judgments.—Tewis v. Doe, 3 Ind. 129.

[b] (Sup. 1882)

If a conveyance is fraudulent and void as to creditors of the grantor, a judgment creditor may levy an execution upon the property as if the conveyance did not exist.—Stevens v. Works, 81 Ind. 445.

[c] (Sup. 1882)

Where a purchaser of land fraudulently combines with the vendor and holder of the legal title for the purpose of the purchaser's having the possession and use of the premises with the intention to cheat, hinder, and delay the purchaser's creditors, or where the purchaser causes the land to be fraudulently conveyed to another with like intent, equity will treat the lands as having been conveyed to the purchaser and make it subject to the lien of the judgment and liable to be sold under execution without first resorting to a court of equity to have the lien declared.—Hanna v. Aebker, 84 Ind. 411.

[d] (Sup. 1883)

Whether land be fraudulently conveyed by the debtor himself or purchased and paid for by him, the conveyance being made to another for the purpose of defrauding the creditors of the person paying the consideration, the land may be sold on execution in favor of the defrauded creditors.—Eve v. Louis, 91 Ind. 457.

(C) RIGHT OF ACTION TO SET ASIDE TRANSFER, AND DEFENSES.

Joinder of causes of action as affected by parties, see ACTION, § 50.

Joinder of causes of action under code, see ACTION, § 45.

Joinder of legal and equitable causes, see ACTION, § 46.

Right of receiver to sue, see RECEIVERS, § 167.

§ 237. Nature and form of remedy.

[a] (Sup. 1877)

A mortgage upon real estate executed fraudulently or without consideration by the owner in favor of another, prior in point of time and lien to that of a judgment rendered against such owner in favor of a third person, may, in an action by the mortgagee against such owner and such judgment creditor to foreclose such mortgage, be subjected to the priority of such judgment.—Kelly v. Lenihan, 56 Ind. 448.

[b] (Sup. 1889)

A complaint alleged that defendant, for the purpose of assisting a certain firm in delaying and defrauding its creditors, took possession of its stock of goods, and agreed to pay 25 per cent. of the amount due each of its creditors; that defendant, knowing the firm's indebtedness to plaintiffs, agreed in consideration of such transfer to pay plaintiffs a certain sum; that he had not paid any part thereof,—and asked for a money judgment. Held, that the action was to recover the amount which defendant agreed to pay plaintiffs, and not to set aside a fraudulent conveyance.—Goldman v. Biddle, 118 Ind. 492, 21 N. E. 43.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. FRAUD. CONV. §§ 674-680, 684-686.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 672-682.

§ 239. Existence of other remedy.

Pleading want or exhaustion of other remedy, see post, § 264.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

Where, in a creditors' suit for the application of the property of an alleged absconding debtor to their claims and for the appointment of a receiver, it was alleged that such property had been fraudulently conveyed, but none of the creditors had any lien on the property, the bill was not maintainable, since complainants had a plain and adequate remedy at law by attachment against the debtor and by garnishment against his transferee.—May v. Greenhill, 80 Ind. 124.

[b] (Sup. 1883)

Rev. St. § 2342, provides that any creditor of a decedent, whose claim shall have been filed and allowed by the court, may file his petition showing the insufficiency of the personal estate of the decedent to pay the liabilities, and that the deceased died owning real estate liable to be made assets for the payment of his debts, and praying an order requiring the executor or administrator to proceed to sell it for the payment of such debts. Held, that such statute does not prevent a creditor from maintaining an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance made by the decedent.—Bottorff v. Covert, 90 Ind. 508.

[c] (Sup. 1885)

A creditor is not precluded from suing to set aside a conveyance by his insolvent debtor as fraudulent by the fact that he has obtained a judgment against the debtor and had it levied upon part of the property conveyed.—Fitch v. First Nat. Bank of Rising Sun, 99 Ind. 443.

[d] (Sup. 1898)

Suit to set aside a conveyance made when the grantor was insolvent is an available remedy, even where proceedings supplemental to execution would have reached the notes for the purchase money for the land conveyed.—Van-sickle v. Shenk, 50 N. E. 381, 150 Ind. 413.

[e] (Sup. 1906)

Where one of two debtors executing a joint note to plaintiff was solvent at that time, but afterwards became insolvent, plaintiff could come into equity to set aside a conveyance of land by the other debtor; the rule that equity would not extend relief to set aside a conveyance of one joint debtor so long as a remedy existed against another debtor not applying.—Stark v. Lamb, 167 Ind. 642, 78 N. E. 668, 79 N. E. 895.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. FRAUD. CONV. §§ 681-688.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 677, 680.

§ 240. Grounds of action in general.

[a] (Sup. 1891)

The fact that the grantor was of unsound mind when she conveyed away the land, and that the grantee took advantage of her weakness with the intent of defrauding her creditor, does not enable the latter to set aside the conveyance, unless he shows that he has been injured thereby.—Brumbaugh v. Richcreek, 127 Ind. 240, 26 N. E. 664, 22 Am. St. Rep. 649.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. FRAUD. CONV. § 687.

§ 241. Conditions precedent.

To suit by personal representative of grantor, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, § 431.

[a] Creditors who seek to reach property of their debtor fraudulently held by third persons must have obtained a lien thereon.—(Sup. 1836) West v. McCarty, 4 Blackf. 244; (1882) Tasker v. Moss, 82 Ind. 62.

[b] (Sup. 1846)

A suit by a creditor to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance by his debtor cannot be sustained, unless the indebtedness has previously been established by a judgment at law.—Shirley v. Shields, 8 Blackf. 273.

[c] If the debtor has other property which can be reached at law, suit cannot be maintained in behalf of a creditor to set aside a conveyance as being fraudulent as against him.—(Sup. 1853) Law v. Smith, 4 Ind. 56; (1871) Baugh v. Boles, 35 Ind. 524; (1876) Morgan v. Olvey, 53 Ind. 6; (1881) Lee v. Lee, 77 Ind. 251.

[d] (Sup. 1876)

In an action to set aside as fraudulent a conveyance of real estate, and to subject the real estate to sale to satisfy a judgment against the grantor, the necessity of resorting to such real estate should be proved.—Morgan v. Olvey, 53 Ind. 6.

[e] (Sup. 1876)

The fact that another person indebted with the debtor as his partner, residing in another state and having no property in this state, owns property in the other state out of which the creditor could make his demand, will not prevent him from proceeding to reach property fraudulently conveyed, though he may reside in the other state and the debt may have been contracted there.—Alford v. Baker, 53 Ind. 279.

[f] Conveyance by a debtor to defraud his creditors cannot be attacked by them until they have first exhausted all his other property subject to execution.—(Sup. 1876) Sherman v. Hogland, 54 Ind. 578; (1881) Same v. Same, 73 Ind. 472.

[g] (Sup. 1881)

Since the adoption of the Code, a creditor may obtain judgment for his debt, and in the same suit may have that judgment enforced against property fraudulently conveyed by the debtor with intent to hinder and delay creditors, and consequently judgment and execution are no longer necessary prerequisites to an action to reach personal property so conveyed.—Carr v. Huette, 73 Ind. 378.

[h] The fact that the debtor has some other property subject to execution will not preclude the creditor's resort to equity to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, where such other property is insufficient to satisfy the creditor's claim.—(Sup. 1881) Lee v. Lee, 77 Ind. 251; (1891) McConnell v. Citizens' State Bank of Petersburg, 130 Ind. 127, 27 N. E. 616.

[i] (Sup. 1881)

A return on an execution of "No property found" is prima facie evidence that the debtor has no other property aside from what he has fraudulently conveyed, and justifies the bringing of a bill to set aside such conveyance.—Lee v. Lee, 77 Ind. 251.

[j] (Sup. 1885)

The rule that a creditor must have obtained judgment before he can maintain a bill attacking his debtor's conveyance as fraudulent does not apply where the debtor is a nonresident of the state.—Quarl v. Abbett, 102 Ind. 233, 1 N. E. 476, 52 Am. Rep. 662.

When an attachment has been issued as authorized by the Code, the plaintiff in the action obtains such lien on the property attached as will entitle him to the intervention of the equitable jurisdiction of the court to remove or set aside all alleged fraudulent claims or transfers, or other fraudulent obstacles in the way of the realization of the lien in case he shall recover a judgment.—Id.

[k] An administrator d. b. n., who has obtained a judgment on the bond of his predecessor, may bring suit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of land by such predecessor, without issuing execution against his sureties, or alleging that they were insolvent.—(Sup. 1888) Duffy v. State ex rel. Rogers, 115 Ind. 351, 17 N. E. 615; (1890) Harvey v. Same, 123 Ind. 260, 24 N. E. 239.

In the absence of a specific lien on the property transferred, a conveyance cannot be set aside as a fraud on creditors, without proof of the grantor's insolvency.—Townes v. Smith, 115 Ind. 480, 16 N. E. 811.

Where it appears that a judgment debtor has no property which can be levied upon under execution, it is not necessary, in an action to subject the property conveyed by him in fraud of creditors to sale under the judgment, to show that execution was first issued and returned nulla bona.—Id.

[m] (Sup. 1888)

A suit by a creditor to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance by his debtor can be sustained, though the indebtedness has not previously been established by a judgment at law.—Phelps v. Smith, 116 Ind. 387, 17 N. E. 602, 19 N. E. 156.

[n] (Sup. 1889)

The general debts of a party conveying land without consideration do not constitute a lien on such land.—Hays v. Montgomery, 20 N. E. 646, 118 Ind. 91.

[o] (Sup. 1890)

In an action by judgment creditors to set aside a conveyance of their debtor's property, proof of the issuing of an execution by plaintiffs upon their judgment, and its return by the sheriff nulla bona, is prima facie evidence that the debtor was at that time insolvent.—War-moth v. Dryden, 125 Ind. 355, 25 N. E. 433.

[p] (Sup. 1891)

A creditor whose debt is secured by a mortgage on property insufficient to pay the debt need not foreclose and sell the property before bringing an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance by his debtor.—McConnell v. Citizens' State Bank of Petersburg, 27 N. E. 616, 130 Ind. 127.

[q] (Sup. 1894)

A fraudulent conveyance by a joint obligor will not be set aside as long as there is a legal remedy against the other joint obligors.—Eller v. Lacy, 137 Ind. 436, 36 N. E. 1088.

[r] (Sup. 1898)

Under Rev. St. 1894, § 736 (Rev. St. 1881, § 724), making notes subject to execution where given up, it is not necessary, before bringing suit to set aside a conveyance by an insolvent debtor, to take out execution, make a demand upon it, and prove a refusal to turn out notes, in order to maintain that the debtor had no property subject to execution.—Vansickle v. Shenk, 50 N. E. 381, 150 Ind. 413.

[s] (App. 1902)

An action by a judgment creditor to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance cannot be maintained unless the defendant has no other property subject to execution, except that sought to be reached.—Jackson v. Saylor, 63 N. E. 881, 30 Ind. App. 72.

[t] (App. 1903)

In order to entitle the holder of joint and several notes, on which he brings a joint action, to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of land by one of the makers, he must show that the other co-obligors are insolvent.—Geiser Mfg. Co. v. Lee, 66 N. E. 701, 33 Ind. App. 38.

§ 242. Defenses.

[a] (Super. 1878)

An alleged fraudulent grantee of a debtor cannot attack the judgment of a creditor, except for fraud.—Reid v. Brown, Wils. 312.

[b] (Sup. 1874)

In a suit by a judgment creditor to set aside a fraudulent sale of property by the debtor, the vendee of the latter cannot call in question the judgment by setting up matters which might have been a defense to the action in which the judgment was rendered. The only question which interests him is whether the property he has purchased shall be subjected to the payment of the judgment.—Scott v. Indianapolis Wagon Works, 48 Ind. 75.

Jurisdiction of courts of original jurisdiction in general, see COURTS, § 132 (2).

§ 245. Jurisdiction of cause of action.

[a] (Sup. 1863)

The circuit court and court of common pleas have jurisdiction to set aside a conveyance, fraudulent as to creditors, made by a decedent.—Tyler v. Wilkerson, 20 Ind. 473.

[b] (Sup. 1868)

The court of common pleas has no jurisdiction to try the title of the wife to real estate which it is alleged in the complaint is held in her name for the purpose of assisting the husband to defraud his creditors.—Mason v. Weston, 29 Ind. 561.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. FRAUD. CONV. § 727.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 709.

§ 246. Jurisdiction of persons and property involved.

[a] (Sup. 1885)

In an attachment suit of the property of a nonresident, in which service on defendant is had by publication, the court thereby acquires sufficient jurisdiction of the attached property to set aside a conveyance thereof as fraudulent, though no personal judgment can be rendered against the defendant in the action.—Quarl v. Abbett, 102 Ind. 233, 1 N. E. 476, 52 Am. Rep. 662.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. FRAUD. CONV. § 728.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 711.

§ 252. — Suing in behalf of all creditors.

[a] (Sup. 1860)

A single creditor, or a few creditors, of a deceased debtor, cannot, by suit in chancery, have a conveyance made by the debtor in his lifetime set aside as fraudulent, the property sold, and the proceeds applied to the payment of their own demands, without any inquiry as to the rights of other creditors.—Barton v. Bryant, 2 Ind. 189.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

Where a creditor sues to obtain judgment on his claim, and also to subject to the payment of such judgment property fraudulently conveyed by his debtor, he may maintain such action without regard to the claims of other creditors.—Carr v. Huette, 73 Ind. 378.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. § 739.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 711.

§ 253. — Joinder.

[a] Several judgment creditors may join in an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance from their common debtor.—(Sup. 1833) Dugan v. Vattier, 3 Blackf. 245, 25 Am. Dec. 105; (1859) Rufing v. Tilton, 12 Ind. 259.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

An administrator of a surety on an official bond may join in an action to set aside fraudulent conveyances of the principal, as he has a right to have the principal's property exhausted before resort is had to that of the surety.—Strong v. Taylor School Tp., 79 Ind. 208.

[c] (Sup. 1896)

Where a complaint by several plaintiffs against several defendants, alleging and asking to have set aside separate conveyances by defendants as in fraud of creditors, shows that one of defendants is indebted on different debts to each of plaintiffs, due when he made his alleged fraudulent conveyance, a demurrer for want of sufficient facts is properly overruled.—Armstrong v. Dunn, 41 N. E. 540, 143 Ind. 433.

Separate creditors may maintain a joint action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance made by their common debtor and to subject the property thus conveyed to the satisfaction of their several debts, since the joint interest they have in obtaining relief from the fraud and in subjecting the fraudulently conveyed property to the payment of the debts of the defendants gives them such a joint interest as entitles them to sue, though their claims are separate.—Id.

§ 255. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1864)

On a bill by a creditor to reach property held by the debtor's wife for the purpose of defeating creditors, the holder of a mortgage made by the debtor after the conveyance to the wife is a necessary party.—Fletcher v. Mansur, 5 Ind. 267.

[b] (Sup. 1877)

Under 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 492, a creditor seeking to set aside a fraudulent conveyance alleged to have been made by a deceased debtor must have the estate represented by an administrator or executor as defendant.—Allen v. Vestal, 60 Ind. 245.

[c] (Sup. 1884)

Where a bill is filed by creditors to avoid the conveyance of a deceased debtor, his executor or administrator is a necessary party.—Willis v. Thompson, 93 Ind. 62; Vestal v. Allen, 94 Ind. 268.

[d] (Sup. 1889)

The administrator of a deceased debtor is an indispensable party defendant to a suit by a general creditor attacking the debtor's conveyance as fraudulent, since it is only through the personal representative of the deceased that plaintiff can collect his claim; and hence, if no administrator has been appointed, plaintiff must procure such appointment.—Hays v. Montgomery, 118 Ind. 91, 20 N. E. 646.

[e] (Sup. 1894)

One who colludes with a debtor to defraud creditors is a proper party to a suit to set aside fraudulent conveyances made by the debtor in furtherance of such collusion.—Doherty v. Holliday, 137 Ind. 282, 32 N. E. 315, 36 N. E. 907.

[f] (Sup. 1902)

On an averment in a complaint by a creditor to set aside a fraudulent conveyance that third persons named claimed some interest in or lien on the real estate which plaintiff was seeking to reach in the hands of the debtor's wife, such third persons were properly made defendants; and there was no error in sustaining a demurrer to a plea in abatement to their cross complaint, setting up that at the date of the transaction and at the commencement of the original action the original defendants resided in another county, and that by collusion between the original plaintiff and the cross complainants the latter were made parties to the action.—Davis v. Chase, 64 N. E. 88, 853, 130 Ind. 242, 95 Am. St. Rep. 294.

§ 259. — Form and requisites in general.

[a] (Sup. 1865)

The complaint in an action to set aside a conveyance of land as fraudulent, and to subject the same to a sale on execution to satisfy a judgment, need not contain a copy of such judgment; the foundation of the action being the fraud alleged and not the judgment.—Bray v. Hussey, 24 Ind. 228.

[b] (Sup. 1867)

In a proceeding to set aside an assignment, the complaint is not defective for not alleging that the assignment was in fraud of the plaintiff, if it alleges that it was made without consideration and to defraud creditors, and the fact appears that the plaintiff was a creditor at the date of the assignment.—Harrison v. Jaquess, 29 Ind. 208.

[c] (Sup. 1880)

A complaint to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance should affirmatively show a complete right to resort to the land for satisfaction of the debt, and that cannot be, unless the conveyance, when made, was fraudulent as against creditors, and unless the right of action which then accrued is shown to continue.—Braker v. Kelsey, 72 Ind. 51.

[d] (Sup. 1881)

In a complaint by a creditor to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, a copy of the deed need not be set out.—Stout v. Stout, 77 Ind. 537.

[e] (Sup. 1881)

In an action to set aside fraudulent conveyances, made on the same day to the same parties, and constituting one cause of action, each conveyance being a part of the general purpose and action to hinder, delay, and defraud, defendant's motion to paragraph the complaint so as to set out each one of the alleged conveyances in a separate paragraph was properly overruled.—Strong v. Taylor School Tp., 79 Ind. 208.

[f] (Sup. 1886)

In a bill by a mortgagee of chattels for equitable relief against a subsequent fraudulent mortgage on the chattels and a judgment foreclosing the same, the manner in which plaintiff will be injured by a sale of the chattels under the judgment of foreclosure sufficiently appears where it is alleged that the property is about to be sold on a judgment obtained to defraud and hinder plaintiff, and under circumstances which may and probably will result in an ultimate loss to him of his interest in the property.—McCormick v. Hartley, 107 Ind. 248, 6 N. E. 357.

[g] (Sup. 1889)

In a suit by a judgment creditor to set aside as fraudulent a conveyance made by his debtor, an allegation that the latter was mentally incapable of executing the conveyance will not, though irrelevant, vitiate the complaint.—Rollet v. Heiman, 22 N. E. 666, 120 Ind. 511, 16 Am. St. Rep. 340.

[h] (Sup. 1894)

A complaint seeking to set aside a fraudulent conveyance to satisfy a judgment, which merely alleges the recovery of judgment against defendant, without stating any facts to show the character and validity thereof, is insufficient.—Eller v. Lacy, 137 Ind. 436, 36 N. E. 1088.

[i] (App. 1905)

In an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance and subject land to a vendor's lien, failure of the complaint to allege the value of the land is not prejudicial to defendant.—Borror v. Carrier, 34 Ind. App. 353, 73 N. E. 123.

In an action to declare fraudulent and void a conveyance of land and to subject the land to a vendor's lien, an allegation that defendant "had not nor has he since, nor has he now, sufficient other property subject to execution to pay his debts, and especially to pay the said amount due this plaintiff," sufficiently shows that the land described was subject to execution.—Id.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. §§ 756-757, 764-770.

§ 260. — Indebtedness.

[a] (Sup. 1877)

The complaint in a suit by a creditor, attacking his debtor's conveyance as fraudulent, must allege that debtor was indebted to plaintiff at the time of the conveyance.—Bentley v. Dunkle, 57 Ind. 374.

[b] (Sup. 1882)

A complaint to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance by the surety on a guardian's bond, which failed to show that he was then indebted or that his principal had failed to discharge his duties, held bad on demurrer.—Robinson v. Rogers, 84 Ind. 539.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. §§ 765, 766, 775.

§ 261. — Insolvency.

[a] (Sup. 1861)

On a bill to set aside a conveyance as in fraud of creditors, made in 1855 and 1856, judgment was recovered in 1858. When the debt was created did not appear, nor was it shown that any debts then existed against the defrauding party, nor that his estate was insufficient to pay his debts without resorting to the lands. Held, that a demurrer would lie to the complaint.—Komblith v. Collins, 17 Ind. 56.

[b] (Sup. 1871)

A complaint by a surety to compel a voluntary grantee of the principal to repay money the surety has been compelled to pay by misconduct of the principal must show that the plaintiff has exhausted his remedy against the principal, and that there is no property of the principal to which he can resort. To show that the principal is greatly involved in debt and has not sufficient means to pay the same, and that he has absconded, is not enough.—Baugh v. Boles, 35 Ind. 524.

[c] (Sup. 1876)

Where a creditor seeks to recover judgment for the amount of his claim, and to subject property fraudulently conveyed by his debtor, an allegation in the complaint that the debtor has no property left subject to execution is a sufficient allegation of the debtor's insolvency, and shows a sufficient reason for seeking to reach the property so fraudulently conveyed.—Alford v. Baker, 53 Ind. 279.

[d] (Sup. 1877)

The complaint, in an action by a creditor to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance of property by his debtor and to subject such property to execution, must allege that at the time of the conveyance the debtor did not have sufficient other property to pay all his debts; and an allegation that he did not have, at the time of filing the complaint, sufficient property to pay his debts, is insufficient.—Evans v. Hamilton, 56 Ind. 34.

[e] A complaint attacking a conveyance as intended to defraud creditors is bad, if it does not allege that the debtor did not retain sufficient property to pay his debts.—(Sup. 1877) Bentley v. Dunkle, 57 Ind. 374; (1878) Wede-kind v. Parsons, 64 Ind. 290; (1889) Sell v. Bailey, 119 Ind. 51, 21 N. E. 338; (1894) Wilson v. Boone, 136 Ind. 142, 35 N. E. 1096.

[f] (Sup. 1877)

A complaint to set aside fraudulent conveyance by a debtor of his real estate, and to subject the same to execution, must allege that at the date of such conveyance the debtor had not sufficient other property left to satisfy his debts.—Romine v. Romine, 59 Ind. 346; Deutsch v. Korsmeier, Id. 373.

[g] (Sup. 1877)

An averment that the debtor has left the state, leaving no property out of which the complaining creditor can collect his debt, and that the debtor is wholly insolvent, unless the conveyance attacked is held fraudulent and void, is not a sufficient allegation that at the date of the conveyance the debtor had no other property left sufficient to pay all his debts.—Deutsch v. Korsmeier, 59 Ind. 373.

[h] (Sup. 1878)

A complaint alleging that the debtor had fraudulently conveyed to the other defendant his land without any consideration, his wife joining with the full knowledge of all the facts, intents, and purposes, for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding his creditors, and that the defendant "has no personal property or other real estate out of which the debt can be made or liable to execution," is insufficient against the defendants, other than the debtor; the allegation referring only to the time the complaint was filed, and not to the time when the alleged fraudulent conveyance was made.—Price v. Sanders, 60 Ind. 310.

[i] (Sup. 1878)

In an action by a judgment creditor to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, it must be alleged that at the time of the conveyance the debtor did not have left, subject to execution, enough of other property to pay his debts; and allegations that the debtor is insolvent at the time of filing the complaint, and that plaintiff has had divers executions issued, without stating when, are insufficient.—Whitesel v. Hiney, 62 Ind. 168.

[j] (Sup. 1878)

A complaint to set aside fraudulent conveyances must aver that the debtor had no other property subject to execution at the time the fraudulent deeds were made, or must contain some equivalent averment such as an allegation of insolvency, and it is insufficient, where plaintiff's judgments were recovered after the alleged fraudulent deeds were made, to aver that the debtor "is wholly insolvent, now is and has been from the rendition of all of such judgments and up to this time."—Harlen v. Watson, 63 Ind. 143.

In an action to set aside a conveyance as having been made to defraud the grantor's creditors, the complaint should substantially allege that the debtor was insolvent, or had no other property subject to execution at the time the conveyance was made. An allegation that the debtor "is wholly insolvent, now is, and has been from the rendition of said judgment, and up to this time, except the land before mentioned," is insufficient, where the judgment was recovered after the deed had been made.—Id.

[k] (Sup. 1879)

An allegation, in a creditor's complaint to set aside his debtor's fraudulent conveyance, that the debtor has no property, "except the above-described real estate, out of which the said judgment obtained by plaintiff against said defendant can be made," will be taken to refer to the time the complaint was filed; and hence, there being no allegation that the debtor had no property at the time of the conveyance, aside from that conveyed, out of which the judgment could be collected, the complaint is bad on demurrer, since, for anything that appears to the contrary, the debtor may have had abundance of property between the date of the conveyance and the filing of the suit out of which plaintiff's claim could have been satisfied.—Wiley v. Bradley, 67 Ind. 560.

[l] The complaint is fatally defective, unless it show, not only that the grantor had no other property subject to execution at the time of the conveyance, but also that he had no such property at the commencement of the action.—(Sup. 1890) Braker v. Kelsey, 72 Ind. 51; (1888) Taylor v. Johnson, 113 Ind. 164, 15 N. E. 238.

[m] (Sup. 1890)

If a suit to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance is brought without first prosecuting the debtor to the end of an execution, the complaint should distinctly aver his insolvency and want of property subject to execution at the time of bringing suit; but if execution has been had, and due return of nulla bona thereon has been made, and suit be brought within a reasonable time thereafter, it is a sufficient allegation of insolvency to aver the fact of such judgment and return.—Braker v. Kelsey, 72 Ind. 51.

The insolvency of the grantor in a conveyance sought to be set aside as fraudulent is sufficiently averred by an allegation that he had no other property subject to execution sufficient to pay his debts or any portion thereof.—Id.

[n] (Sup. 1890)

An allegation that the debtor "owned no property of any consequence" except that alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed is not equivalent to one that he owned no other property subject to execution sufficient for the payment of all his debts.—Pfeifer v. Snyder, 72 Ind. 78.

[an] (Sup. 1890)

In a suit by the grantor's creditors to set aside a conveyance as made without consideration, the complaint must allege that at the time of the conveyance the grantor did not have sufficient other property, subject to execution, to satisfy his liabilities.—Spaulding v. Blythe, 73 Ind. 93.

[o] (Sup. 1881)

It is a fatal objection to a complaint to set aside an alleged fraudulent transfer by a decedent of choses in action that it does not allege that at the time of the transfer he had no other property subject to execution sufficient to pay his debts.—Johnson v. Jones, 79 Ind. 141.

[oo] (Sup. 1881)

A complaint by creditors to set aside their debtor's conveyance as fraudulent must allege that at the time of making the conveyance the debtor had no other property subject to their claims, and allegations that at such time the debtor was in embarrassed and failing circumstances, or that he afterwards died notoriously insolvent, are not sufficient.—McCole v. Loehr, 79 Ind. 430.

[p] (Sup. 1881)

A complaint, in an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, is not bad, because it does not show that the alleged fraudulent grantor had no property subject to execution at the time the suit was commenced.—Jennings v. Howard, 80 Ind. 214.

[pp] (Sup. 1881)

In an action by a creditor to charge his debtor's wife's land to the extent of improvements made thereon by the debtor in fraud of creditors, the complaint is bad if it fails to aver that the debtor did not have, at the time of making the improvements, ample property to pay his debts subject to be levied on and sold.—Moore v. Lampton, 80 Ind. 301.

[q] (Sup. 1882)

In a suit to set aside certain transfers of property as in fraud of creditors, averments that the debtors are each and all of them wholly insolvent, and were so at the time of the several acts complained of, and have no property out of which the plaintiff's debt can be made, "except that which is hereinafter named," coupled with an allegation that the property referred to in the exception was all embraced in the transfers complained of, sufficiently state the debtors' insolvency.—Nugen v. First Nat. Bank of Cambridge City, 86 Ind. 311.

[qq] (Sup. 1883)

In an action by a wife against a sheriff and others to quiet her title to certain land, and to enjoin its sale by the sheriff on executions in favor of the other defendants against her husband, a cross bill alleged that the judgment debtor had, previous to the levy on such land, filed a schedule in exemption on execution issued against him, and that he had not as much personal property as is allowed by law to a debtor as exempt from execution. Held, that the cross bill showed that plaintiff's husband remained insolvent up to the commencement of the action and the filing of the cross bill.—Ream v. Karnes, 90 Ind. 167.

A cross bill, attacking a debtor's conveyance as fraudulent towards creditors, alleged that the debtor on a certain day conveyed the property, "without leaving any property in his own name to pay defendant's debt or any part of it." Held, that the cross bill sufficiently showed the debtor's insolvency, without such land, at the date of the conveyance.—Id.

[r] (Sup. 1883)

In an action by a creditor to set aside as fraudulent a conveyance made by his deceased debtor, the complaint need not show that the decedent did not leave other real estate, and that no assets came into the hands of the administrator; but it is sufficient if it shows that the decedent had no other property at the time he made the conveyance, and that there are no "assets" in the hands of the administrator.—Bottorff v. Covert, 90 Ind. 508.

[rr] (Sup. 1884)

A complaint to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of a deceased debtor, which does not allege the insolvency of the estate, is bad on demurrer.—Willis v. Thompson, 93 Ind. 62.

[s] (Sup. 1884)

A complaint attacking a conveyance as fraudulent averred that at the time of the execution of the deed the grantor had no other property subject to execution out of which his debts could be paid, and that he had not since the execution of the deed acquired any property subject to execution. It also alleged that on the day of the execution of the deed the grantor was indebted to plaintiff in a specified sum, for which indebtedness judgment was subsequently rendered. Held to show a continuous indebtedness in favor of plaintiff from the time of the execution of the deed until after the rendition of the judgment, and to show that during this time the grantor was insolvent.—Hogan v. Robinson, 94 Ind. 138.

[sa] (Sup. 1884)

A complaint in a suit to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance, alleging that the debtor "has not now, nor has he since the note was executed had, any property subject to execution more than the exemption allowed by law," sufficiently alleges the insolvency of the grantor.—Simpkins v. Smith, 94 Ind. 470.

[t] A complaint, in an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, is bad, unless it shows that the alleged fraudulent grantor had no property subject to execution at the time the suit was commenced.—(Sup. 1891) Shew v. Hews, 123 Ind. 474, 26 N. E. 483; (1892) Line v. State ex rel. Louder, 131 Ind. 408, 30 N. E. 703.

[tt] (Sup. 1891)

In an action to set aside a conveyance of land as having been made in fraud of the grantor's creditor, an allegation in the complaint that the conveyance left the grantor without any property subject to execution is not sufficient, without further alleging that when the suit was brought the grantor had no property out of which the debt could then be collected.—Brumbaugh v. Richcreek, 127 Ind. 240, 26 N. E. 664, 22 Am. St. Rep. 649.

[u] (Sup. 1892)

In an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, an allegation that defendant did not have at the time of the conveyance, and has not had since, up to the time of the commencement of the suit, sufficient property subject to execution to pay his debts, is a sufficient allegation of his insolvency during that period.—York v. Rockwood, 31 N. E. 1110, 132 Ind. 358.

[uu] (Sup. 1892)

A cross complaint, alleging that a conveyance of the land in question was made to defraud creditors, cannot be sustained when it does not aver that at the time the conveyance was executed the grantor had no other property subject to execution.—Winstandley v. Stipp, 32 N. E. 302, 132 Ind. 548.

[v] (Sup. 1893)

An allegation of a complaint in an action to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance, that defendant had no property subject to execution at the time such action was commenced, or at the time an execution was issued on a judgment against him, and returned unsatisfied, is not a compliance with the rule of pleading requiring the complaint in such actions to allege that at the time of the conveyance the debtor did not have sufficient property to pay his indebtedness.—Petree v. Brotherton, 133 Ind. 602, 32 N. E. 300.

[vv] (Sup. 1895)

An allegation, in a complaint to set aside a conveyance of land for fraud, "that, at the time of said conveyance," defendant "had no other property subject to execution, nor has he had * * * until now, for the payment of said judgment," sufficiently indicates that defendant had not at the time of the conveyance, or at any time since, or at the beginning of the action, sufficient property subject to execution to pay the debt.—Pierce v. Hower, 42 N. E. 223, 142 Ind. 626.

[w] (Sup. 1898)

The insolvent condition of the grantor in an alleged fraudulent conveyance is sufficiently set forth in an action by a creditor by allegations that at the time of the transfer, and when suit was brought, the grantor had not property subject to execution sufficient to pay plaintiff's judgment.—Vansickle v. Shenk, 50 N. E. 381, 150 Ind. 413.

[ww] (App. 1901)

Where, in an action to reach property transferred by a debtor in fraud of his creditors, the complaint alleges that the debtor was wholly insolvent at the time of the transfer, it is not necessary to also allege that he had no property subject to execution.—Lammert v. Stockings, 61 N. E. 945, 27 Ind. App. 619.

[x] (Sup. 1902)

A complaint to set aside a fraudulent conveyance which only alleged, as to the grantor's financial condition at the time of the filing of the complaint, that he had no property subject to execution "of which these plaintiffs have any knowledge," was insufficient.—Davis v. Chase, 64 N. E. 88, 853, 159 Ind. 242, 95 Am. St. Rep. 294.

[xx] (App. 1902)

Since a constable has no power to levy an execution on real estate, an allegation, in a complaint to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance, that an execution had been placed in the hands of the constable, and by him returned nulla bona, was an insufficient allegation of defendant's insolvency.—Stuckwisch v. Holmes, 64 N. E. 894, 29 Ind. App. 512.

[y] (App. 1902)

Where a complaint by a judgment creditor to set aside a fraudulent conveyance alleged that since the date of the judgment, and up to the time of the filing of the complaint, defendant did not own any property, real, personal, or mixed, such averment was a sufficient allegation that defendant had no other property subject to execution than that in controversy.—Jackson v. Saylor, 63 N. E. 881, 30 Ind. App. 72.

[yy] (Sup. 1905)

When a creditor of a grantor attacks a conveyance on the ground of fraud, he must plead and prove that the debtor was insolvent at the time of the conveyance and that he had no property subject to execution when the suit was brought.—Cannon v. Castleman, 164 Ind. 343, 73 N. E. 689.

[z] (App. 1905)

In an action to recover land alleged to have been conveyed in fraud of plaintiff's claim, the insolvency of the debtor is sufficiently alleged by the averment that he at the time of the conveyance "had not, nor has he since, nor has he now, sufficient other property subject to execution to pay his debts, and especially to pay the said amount due this plaintiff."—Borror v. Carrier, 73 N. E. 123, 34 Ind. App. 353.

A complaint to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent is insufficient if it fails to allege that at the time of the conveyance the grantor had not sufficient other property subject to execution to pay his debts.—Id.

[zz] (Sup. 1909)

In an action by a judgment creditor to set aside the debtor's transfers of property as fraudulent, an allegation in the complaint that,

"after the time" of the transfer, the judgment defendant did not have sufficient property to pay his debts, instead of "at the time" of the transfer, was sufficient, as the words "after the time" had relation to and commenced the moment the transfer was made, and in that connection meant "from the time" of the transfer.—Kelley v. Bell, 172 Ind. 590, 88 N. E. 58.

§ 262. — Description of property.

[a] (Sup. 1898)

The complaint, in a suit to set aside as fraudulent a conveyance of lands, was deficient on demurrer where it described such lands only by the numbers of the sections, townships, and ranges, without any indication of the state or county in which they are located, or reference to any fixed monument from which their location could be inferred.—Sheffer v. Hines, 49 N. E. 348, 149 Ind. 413.

[b] (App. 1904)

In an action of attachment, and to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, an allegation in the complaint that the grantor "was the owner in fee simple of the unincumbered title" was a sufficient allegation of ownership.—Trent v. Edmonds, 70 N. E. 169, 32 Ind. App. 432.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. § 780.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 731.

§ 263. — Fraudulent transaction.

[a] In an action by creditors to set aside an instrument as fraudulent as to them, the complaint must expressly charge that it was executed with a fraudulent intent.—(Sup. 1877) Bentley v. Dunkle, 57 Ind. 374; (1895) National State Bank of Terre Haute v. Vigo County Nat. Bank, 141 Ind. 352, 40 N. E. 709, 50 Am. St. Rep. 330.

[b] (Sup. 1877)

The complaint, in an action by a creditor against the heirs of his deceased debtor to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance by the debtor, must allege whether such conveyance was joint or several to the defendants.—Allen v. Vestal, 60 Ind. 245.

[c] (Sup. 1878)

In an action to set aside a conveyance of real estate, the complaint alleged that the owner, being indebted to plaintiff and with the intent to defraud him, conveyed the real estate to a third person by a deed in which his wife joined; that afterwards said third person conveyed the same to the wife and infant children of the debtor, both conveyances being alleged to be without consideration; that at the time the debtor did not possess other property sufficient to pay plaintiff's debt, and was insolvent. Held, that a cross complaint filed by another judgment creditor on a mechanic's lien on part of the land, obtained against the judgment debtor and a contractor, but which did not allege any fraud, was insufficient.—Spaulding v. Myers, 64 Ind. 264.

In an action to set aside a conveyance of real estate, the complaint alleged that the owner thereof, being indebted to the plaintiff and with the intent to defraud him, conveyed the said real estate to a third party by a deed in which his wife joined, and that afterwards said third party conveyed the same to the wife and infant children of the debtor, both conveyances being alleged to have been without consideration; that at the time the debtor did not possess other property subject to execution sufficient to pay the plaintiff's debt, and was insolvent at the time this action was brought. The plaintiff also alleged that he afterwards recovered judgment against the debtor on such debt, and that an execution issued thereon was returned by the sheriff nulla bona. Held, that the complaint should have alleged that the grantees had notice of the alleged fraud, and was insufficient.—Id.

In a suit by a creditor to set aside his debtor's conveyance as fraudulent, an allegation that at the time the suit was instituted the debtor did not have other property subject to execution is not a substitute for an allegation that years before, and at the time of making the conveyance, the debtor did not have other property sufficient to satisfy plaintiff's claim, which latter allegation is necessary to show plaintiff was injured by the conveyance.—Noble v. Hines, 72 Ind. 12.

[e] (Sup. 1880)

In a suit to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent and made without consideration, the complaint need not allege that the grantee had notice of the grantor's fraudulent purpose.—Spaulding v. Blythe, 73 Ind. 93.

[f] (Sup. 1881)

A failure to allege the value of real estate, a conveyance of which it is sought to have set aside as fraudulent, does not render the complaint insufficient.—Sherman v. Hogland, 73 Ind. 472.

[g] (Sup. 1881)

In an action to set aside an alleged fraudulent mortgage of personalty, the question of fraudulent intent being made one of fact by Rev. St. 1881, § 4924, the complaint must contain charges of actual bad faith and want of integrity.—Lockwood v. Harding, 79 Ind. 129.

Fraud in the execution of a mortgage of a stock of goods cannot be inferred from the mere fact alleged in a complaint, that, after the mortgagee became the exclusive owner of the property under the mortgage and freed from the lien thereof, he opened up the store and placed the mortgagor therein.—Id.

[h] (Sup. 1884)

A complaint to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of a deceased debtor, which, where there is a valuable consideration, does not allege a fraudulent intent by the grantee, is bad on demurrer.—Willis v. Thompson, 93 Ind. 62.

[i] (Sup. 1884)

A complaint to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance, which, instead of alleging that the purchaser participated in the fraud, alleged that he agreed to pay the purchase money to a third person, and was notified of plaintiff's claim and vendor's fraud before he paid, held bad, unless also alleging that the third person had not accepted the promise, or that it had been rescinded.—Senger v. Aughe, 97 Ind. 285.

[j] (Sup. 1887)

An averment, in a complaint to set aside a conveyance, that it was fraudulently given, with intent to hinder and delay creditors, is not sufficient, in the absence of a statement of any facts tending to show fraud.—Fisher v. Syfers, 109 Ind. 514, 10 N. E. 306.

[k] (Sup. 1889)

A complaint drawn upon the theory that plaintiff has a right to set aside a conveyance on the ground that it is fraudulent as against creditors is bad for failing to allege that the conveyance was made to cheat and defraud creditors.—Hays v. Montgomery, 20 N. E. 640, 118 Ind. 91.

[l] (Sup. 1892)

Rev. St. 1881, § 4921, provides that "all deeds of gift, * * * made in trust for the use of the person making the same, shall be void as against creditors, existing or subsequent." Held, that a complaint by a subsequent judgment creditor to subject land to the payment of the judgment, which showed that defendant furnished his son the money with which to purchase the land, but failed to show that the land was conveyed to the son in trust for defendant, is bad on demurrer. Bishop v. Redmond, 83 Ind. 157, distinguished.—Bright v. Bright, 132 Ind. 58, 31 N. E. 470.

[m] (Sup. 1894)

A complaint by the administrator of a deceased debtor to set aside the intestate's fraudulent conveyance must allege that it was made without consideration, in the absence of an allegation that the grantee knew of the debtor's intent to defraud creditors.—Wilson v. Boone, 136 Ind. 142, 35 N. E. 1096.

A complaint by the administrator of a deceased debtor to set aside the intestate's fraudulent conveyance must allege that the grantee knew of the debtor's intent to defraud creditors, in the absence of an allegation that the conveyance was voluntary.—Id.

[n] (Sup. 1894)

A complaint in an action to set aside a conveyance by a debtor through a third person to his wife, which alleges the conveyance to the third person for a colorable consideration of $8,250, but, in fact, for no consideration whatever, but in pursuance of an agreement between the parties that the third person should convey the land to the grantor's wife; that, in pursuance of the agreement, the third person conveyed the real estate by warranty deed to the wife without consideration; that the original grantor had not at the time the conveyances were made nor since sufficient other property subject to execution to pay his debts or any part thereof—is sufficient.—Roberts v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Attica, 36 N. E. 128, 136 Ind. 154.

[o] (Sup. 1894)

In an action to set aside, as fraudulent, a deed made by a judgment debtor, a complaint which alleges that at the time of the conveyance, and of bringing suit, the debtor had no other property subject to execution, need not also allege that the property conveyed was subject to execution, since, if it were exempt, that is matter of defense.—Slagle v. Hoover, 137 Ind. 314, 36 N. E. 1099.

[p] (Sup. 1897)

A complaint to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, alleging that the grantee had notice of the grantor's fraudulent intent, is not demurrable because it shows that a consideration was paid, since the allegation of notice is sufficient to avoid the deed, notwithstanding the consideration.—State ex rel. Little v. Parsons, 47 N. E. 17, 147 Ind. 579, 62 Am. St. Rep. 480.

A creditor's complaint to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of land need not allege that the land was not exempt from execution, such exemption being a matter of defense.—Id.

[q] (Sup. 1897)

An allegation that a debtor made a conveyance of all its property for the purpose of defrauding its creditors does not show a fraudulent conveyance.—Old Nat. Bank of Evansville v. Heckman, 47 N. E. 953, 148 Ind. 490.

[r] (App. 1901)

In a suit by a creditor to set aside as fraudulent a conveyance made by a father to a daughter in consideration of one dollar and her agreement to support him during his life, for burial at death, etc., the complaint was not demurrable because it failed to allege a fraudulent intent on the part of the grantee.—Spiers v. Whitesell, 61 N. E. 28, 27 Ind. App. 204.

[s] (App. 1903)

A complaint alleging that certain defendants claimed to be the owners of all the non-exempt property of the debtor defendant, without alleging any transfer to them, or any description of the property so claimed, except by reference to an exhibit, is insufficient as a charge of a fraudulent conveyance.—Smith v. Tate, 66 N. E. 88, 30 Ind. App. 367.

A complaint alleging that plaintiff recovered a judgment against one defendant, and that he then owned a certain lot, which he thereafter caused to be conveyed to another defendant, who claims to own it, but not alleging that such judgment debtor transferred it, states no cause of action.—Id.

[t] (App. 1904)

A contention that a complaint to set aside a fraudulent conveyance from husband to wife is bad, as against the wife, because it does not show that she had any knowledge of the fraudulent intent of her husband, is without merit, where the complaint charges her with knowledge of the facts, and avers that she did not pay any part of the consideration.—Bass v. Citizens' Trust Co., 70 N. E. 400, 32 Ind. App. 583.

Where it is not alleged, in a complaint to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of real estate, that the grantor was a resident householder, a contention that the complaint is bad, because affirmatively showing that the grantor had no property except the $500 he borrowed from plaintiff's decedent, which was the subject-matter of the litigation (a less amount than allowed as an exemption to a resident householder), and that his investment of it in real estate, which he conveyed to his wife, could not be in fraud of creditors, is without merit.—Id.

[u] (App. 1904)

Where a complaint alleged that a judgment debtor paid to the purchaser at an execution sale of his land the amount of his bid, and took an assignment of the certificate of sale to a third party, who held the title as a volunteer for the benefit of the debtor to prevent a resale of the land in satisfaction of an unpaid balance of the judgment, it was sufficiently alleged that the debtor paid for the certificate with his own money.—Balch v. Magaw, 70 N. E. 188, 33 Ind. App. 399.

[a] (Sup. 1909)

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 827 (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 858), requires execution on a judgment against a resident of the state to be issued to the county where he "resides." Held, that an allegation, in a complaint by a judgment creditor to set aside a fraudulent conveyance by the debtor, that execution issued to the sheriff of the county where defendant "resides," was not objectionable for not using the word "resided."—Kelley v. Bell, 172 Ind. 590, 88 N. E. 58.

A court of equity will not render a decree setting aside a conveyance of land made to hinder and delay creditors where the bill does not pray for such a decree.—Eastman v. Ramsey, 3 Ind. 419.

[a] (Sup. 1876)

To a complaint by a judgment plaintiff to set aside as fraudulent a conveyance of lands made by the judgment defendant in trust for the grantor, after the accrual of the indebtedness and before judgment, and also a conveyance by the trustee to the judgment debtor's wife executed after the judgment was rendered, and to subject such lands to sale, etc., an answer admitting such conveyances, but averring that the first was in trust for the judgment debtor's wife, and averring the payment of a consideration by her by the conveyance of her separate realty, and denying fraud and notice of the husband's indebtedness, is sufficient on demurrer.—Wynne v. Cornelison, 52 Ind. 312.

[b] (Sup. 1890)

The answer in a suit to set aside a mortgage given by a debtor to his children pleaded that it was given pursuant to a contract between the debtor and his wife that money which she advanced to him to purchase land should be paid to her children and its payment secured. Held, that the fact that the complaint alleged that the mortgage was for $4,000 did not render the answer insufficient merely because it showed a consideration to the extent of only $3,000, being the amount advanced.—Goff v. Rogers, 71 Ind. 459.

[c] (Sup. 1893)

Where defendant seeks to defeat an action to set aside a conveyance by her as fraudulent, by showing that the property conveyed was exempt, she must show that the right of exemption existed at the time the alleged fraudulent conveyance was made, and an allegation that such right existed at the time the answer was filed is not sufficient.—Phenix Ins. Co. v. Fielder, 133 Ind. 557, 33 N. E. 270.

In a suit to set aside conveyances made by defendant, and to subject the lands conveyed to the payment of a judgment, defendant claimed the property conveyed was exempt. Held, that a general allegation in her answer that, at the time of the conveyance, defendant was "a resident householder of the state of Indiana," was not equivalent to an allegation of facts constituting her right to an exemption.—Id.

[d] (App. 1906)

One, who is without interest in a suit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance should file a disclaimer in order to protect himself against judgment, and should not appear and answer.—Tyler v. Davis, 75 N. E. 3, 37 Ind. App. 537.

[a] (Super. 1873)

An answer alleging fraud, which does not aver the particular facts amounting to fraud, is insufficient.—Reid v. Brown, Wils. 312.

[b] (Sup. 1892)

In an action by a mortgagee to foreclose a mortgage, against the assignee for the benefit of creditors of the mortgagor, an answer, seeking to avoid the mortgage as in fraud of subsequent creditors, must expressly aver that it was executed with intent to defraud them, since Rev. St. 1881, § 4924, provides that the question of fraudulent intent is one of fact.—Hutchinson v. First Nat. Bank of Michigan City, 133 Ind. 271, 30 N. E. 952, 36 Am. St. Rep. 537.

[a] (Sup. 1873)

Certain real estate was purchased of A. and conveyed to B., and by B. and his wife conveyed to C., the father of B.'s wife, and by C. conveyed to the wife of B. In a proceeding to subject said real estate to the payment of a judgment against B. on the ground of fraud, held that, under an answer of general denial, evidence was admissible that C. was to pay A. the consideration for the real estate; that the deed was to have been made in the name of B.'s wife; that it was made to her husband with her knowledge and consent; and that she objected to its being made to her husband as soon as she knew of the fact.—Summers v. Hoover, 42 Ind. 153.

[b] (Sup. 1873)

In an action to recover the possession of certain property, plaintiff alleged that he was the owner, and the defendant answered in general denial, and also that as sheriff by virtue of the writ of attachment he seized the property as the property of a third person who he alleged was the owner, and plaintiff replied in general denial and reasserted ownership. Held that, after the proof by the plaintiff of his purchase from the third person, evidence in behalf of the defendant that the sale was made by such third person to defraud his creditors, and that plaintiff was aware of such fraudulent purpose, was within the issue, and having been admitted without objection, its admission constituted no cause for new trial on plaintiff's motion.—Farmer v. Calvert, 44 Ind. 209.

[c] (Sup. 1888)

A complaint the gravamen of which is a conveyance with intent "to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors," is not supported by evidence of a trust such as is contemplated by Rev. St. § 4921, providing that "all deeds of gift, conveyances," etc., "made in trust for the use of the person making the same, shall be void as against creditors, existing or subsequent of such person."—Mayer v. Feig, 114 Ind. 577, 17 N. E. 159.

[d] (Sup. 1894)

Where the complaint alleges that the conveyance was voluntary, and given and accepted with intent to defraud the grantor's creditors, the omission to show want of consideration is not fatal to recovery, since the deed, on the other allegations of the complaint, would be fraudulent, even though there were a valuable consideration.—Slagle v. Hoover, 137 Ind. 314, 36 N. E. 1090.

[e] (Sup. 1897)

In an action to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent, evidence that the property was exempt to the grantor is admissible to rebut the charge of fraud, without a special plea setting up the right of exemption.—Isgrigg v. Pauley, 47 N. E. 821, 148 Ind. 436.

[f] (Sup. 1907)

In an action to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance, evidence to establish that the property transferred was exempt from execution was admissible under a general denial.—Stark v. Lamb, 167 Ind. 642, 78 N. E. 668, 79 N. E. 895.

§ 271. — In general.

[a] A creditor who assails a conveyance of his debtor for fraud must show it. It cannot be presumed.—(Sup. 1855) Stewart v. English, 6 Ind. 176; (1873) Farmer v. Calvert, 44 Ind. 209; (1876) Morgan v. Olvey, 53 Ind. 6; (1884) Pennington v. Flock, 93 Ind. 378.

[b] The presumption of fraud arising from continued possession by the vendor is rebutted by proof of payment of a valuable consideration.—(Sup. 1857) Blystone v. Burgett, 10 Ind. 28, 68 Am. Dec. 658; (Sup. 1881) Rose v. Colter, 76 Ind. 590.

[c] (Sup. 1875)

Under 1 Gav. & H. St. p. 353, § 21, providing that the question of fraudulent intent shall be deemed a question of fact, and that no conveyance or charge shall be adjudged fraudulent as against creditors or purchasers solely on the ground that it was not founded on a valuable consideration, the burden is on the attacking creditor to show, not only want of consideration, but other facts or circumstances sufficient to make out his case.—Pence v. Croan, 51 Ind. 336.

[d] The burden of proving that a conveyance was fraudulent as to creditors rests on the party seeking to set it aside.—(Sup. 1890) Luce v. Shoff, 70 Ind. 152; (1891) McLaughlin v. Ward, 77 Ind. 383; (1891) Studabaker v. Langard, 79 Ind. 320; (1894) Andrews v. Flanagan, 94 Ind. 383; (1898) Heaton v. Shanklin, 18 N. E. 172, 115 Ind. 595.

[e] (Sup. 1882)

In a suit to set aside a deed as in fraud of creditors, an answer by the grantee alleging that the property was purchased by the grantor with the grantee's money, and that the former took the title in his name without the latter's consent, and that he made the conveyance merely to discharge his trust, states matters provable under the general denial; and the burden of proving the issue of fraud remains upon plaintiff.—Bishop v. State ex rel. Lord, 83 Ind. 67.

[f] (Sup. 1895)

A presumption of fraud does not depend on the amount of the debt, extent of the property, or circumstances of the party.—Gable v. Columbus Cigar Co., 38 N. E. 474, 140 Ind. 563.

[g] (Sup. 1895)

Where, in a suit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, the complaint alleged that at the beginning of the action complainant's debts were due and unpaid, and there was no answer of payment, the burden was on defendants to prove payment had been made.—Pierce v. How-er, 42 N. E. 228, 142 Ind. 626.

[h] (Sup. 1899)

Fraud is never presumed, but must be proven by clear and satisfactory evidence, and will not be imputed when the facts from which it is supposed to arise are consistent with honest intentions.—American Varnish Co. v. Reed, 55 N. E. 224, 154 Ind. 88.

In an action to set aside a transfer of personal property as fraudulent as to creditors, the burden of proof is on plaintiff to show that defendant sold the property with a fraudulent intent, and that the transferee paid no consideration therefor, or, if he paid a valuable consideration therefor, that he purchased with knowledge of the fraudulent intent of defendant.—Id.

[i] (Sup. 1907)

Since the law presumes that a resident householder will avail himself of his right to claim an exemption, where it is made to appear in an action to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance that the debtor was a resident householder of the state, and that all the property owned by him at the time of the transfer in question did not exceed $600 in value, the transfer will not be set aside.—Stark v. Lamb, 167 Ind. 642, 78 N. E. 668, 79 N. E. 805.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. §§ 796-789, 821.

§ 272. — Insolvency.

Presumptions as to continuance of fact, see EVIDENCE, § 67.

[a] (Sup. 1883)

In an action to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance, the burden of proof is on plaintiff to show that the debtor did not retain enough property in his hands to satisfy all his debts.—Hogan v. Robinson, 94 Ind. 138.

[b] (Sup. 1894)

In an action by a judgment creditor to set aside a prior voluntary conveyance by the debtor as in fraud of creditors, the fact that the debtor was insolvent at the time the judgment was rendered carries with it no presumption that the insolvency extended back to the time the conveyance was made; but the burden remains on the creditor to show the debtor's insolvency at the time of the conveyance.—Nevers v. Hack, 138 Ind. 260, 37 N. E. 791, 46 Am. St. Rep. 380.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. § 804.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 757.

§ 273. — Intent of grantor in general.

[a] (Sup. 1896)

Rev. St. 1881, § 4924 (Rev. St. 1894, § 6649), providing that the question of fraudulent intent shall be deemed a question of fact, means that fraud cannot be presumed as matter of law, but may be inferred from facts or circumstances proven.—Personette v. Cronkhite, 140 Ind. 586, 40 N. E. 59.

In an action to set aside a conveyance of real estate as fraudulent, the grantor must be charged with the probable and necessary consequences of his act, and the result of his fraud must be attributed to him, notwithstanding his claim and statement that he did not intend that the conveyance should operate as a fraud upon his creditors.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1899)

Under Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 4924, which provides that, in all actions to set aside transfers of property as being fraudulent as to creditors, the question of fraudulent intent shall be a question of fact for the jury, and that a transfer shall not be adjudged fraudulent merely on the ground that it was not founded on a valuable consideration, in an action to set aside an alleged fraudulent transfer of property fraud cannot be presumed, but must be proven.—American Varnish Co. v. Reed, 55 N. E. 224, 154 Ind. 88.

[c] (Sup. 1907)

In an action to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent, plaintiff must prove facts which either directly or by inference show that such conveyance was made with a fraudulent intent.—Stark v. Lamb, 167 Ind. 642, 78 N. E. 668, 79 N. E. 895.

[d] (App. 1908)

An assignee for the benefit of creditors attacking a mortgage as within Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6646, making all conveyances of personalty in trust for the use of the person making the same void as to creditors, has the burden to establish as a fact that the mortgage was a conveyance in trust for mortgagors' use, the presumption being that the mortgage was not fraudulent as to creditors.—Hamrick v. Hoover, 41 Ind. App. 411, 84 N. E. 28.

Where there is no finding that a mortgagee held the mortgaged property in trust for the mortgagors' benefit, or that the mortgagors sold any of the property and applied the proceeds to their own use, or of any arrangement or secret agreement between the parties relative to the proceeds of the sale of any of the mortgaged property, or that the assignee for the benefit of creditors was not in possession of all the property originally mortgaged, the presumption of a good faith mortgage, valid as to creditors, is not overcome so as to render the mortgage void within Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6646, making all conveyances of personalty in trust for the use of the person making the same void as against creditors, notwithstanding a finding "that there has never been any arrangement or agreement between the mortgagors and mortgagees whereby the proceeds of sales of the mortgaged property should be applied in payment of the mortgage debt, and that (mortgagee) had no knowledge, nor does he now have, as to how the proceeds were applied," and the conclusion of law of a valid mortgage must be sustained.—Id.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. § 805.

§ 277. — Consideration.

[a] (Sup. 1882)

Mere proof of want of a valuable consideration will not shift the burden of proof from a creditor attacking his debtor's conveyance as fraudulent.—Bishop v. State ex rel. Lord, 83 Ind. 67.

[b] (Sup. 1895)

Where a husband conveyed lands to his wife, but it appeared that she held no note or other written contract for the $1,600 that she claimed the husband owed her, the burden was on her to establish the good faith of the purchase.—Gable v. Columbus Cigar Company, 38 N. E. 474, 140 Ind. 563.

[a] (Sup. 1894)

The burden of proof, upon one attacking a conveyance by an insolvent on the ground that it is fraudulent, is not removed by the fact that the grantee therein was the insolvent's father.—Rockland Co. v. Summerville, 139 Ind. 695, 39 N. E. 307.

[a] (Sup. 1866)

Under the act for the prevention of frauds and perjuries (1 Gav. & H. St. p. 351, § 8), the retention of possession by the vendor of chattels casts on the party who would sustain the sale the burden of rebutting the presumption of fraud.—Kane v. Drake, 27 Ind. 29.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

In a contest with creditors who seek to set aside as fraudulent a sale by the debtor, which was not followed by a change of possession, the burden of showing good faith is on the grantee.—Rose v. Colter, 76 Ind. 500.

§ 286. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1829)

A. obtained judgment on a note against B., and purchased at the sheriff's sale, under the judgment, a tract of land which B., after the date of the note, and before the judgment, had conveyed to C. A. brought an action of ejectment for the land against C., and the question was whether B.'s deed to C. was fraudulent and void as to A. Held, that the note on which the judgment was rendered was admissible to show the existence of the debt before the date of the deed.—Doe ex dem. Helm v. Newland, 2 Blackf. 233.

[b] (Sup. 1837)

Where property is sold by an absolute bill of sale, but possession thereof remains with the vendor, parol evidence is admissible to explain his possession.—Foley v. Knight, 4 Blackf. 420.

[c] (Sup. 1868)

In a suit to set aside a conveyance from husband to wife as fraudulent and void as to creditors, evidence of the indebtedness and insolvency of the husband at the time of the conveyance is admissible.—Frank v. Kessler, 30 Ind. 8.

[d] (Sup. 1881)

In a suit to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance by a debtor to his wife, the record of a suit against such debtor on a breach of warranty was admissible as tending to show the circumstances of the debtor at the time, though the eviction did not occur until after the date of the fraudulent deed.—Jennings v. Howard, 80 Ind. 214.

[e] (Sup. 1887)

In a suit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, the plaintiff is not confined to one transaction between the grantor and grantee, but may prove the general course of business between the grantor and grantee.—Hunsinger v. Hofer, 110 Ind. 390, 11 N. E. 463.

The transcript of the judgment recovered against the grantor is properly admitted in evidence, not to bind the grantee, but to establish the creditorship of the plaintiff.—Id.

[f] (Sup. 1888)

In a suit to enforce a secret agreement for the return of bank stock assigned and transferred on the books of the bank, creditors of the assignee may properly prove when their claims accrued, and that credit was given deceased on the faith that he owned the stock assigned.—Hirsch v. Norton, 115 Ind. 341, 17 N. E. 612.

The declarations of deceased are competent to prove his indebtedness, and to prove that credit was given him on the faith of his ownership of stock assigned to him with a secret trust in favor of the assignor.—Id.

[g] (Sup. 1890)

In replevin by a wife against an officer for a horse taken under execution against her husband, in support of the theory of the defense that whatever title she had was through him, and in fraud of his creditors, evidence is relevant that before and at the time of the levy the horse was kept in a stable which the husband controlled as tenant, and that he paid the rent, and took receipts in his own name.—Laird v. Davidson, 124 Ind. 412, 25 N. E. 7.

[h] (App. 1894)

A contract tending to show that the vendor was in possession of the premises, under his own lease, at the time of the alleged fraudulent transfer, is admissible, as, in the absence of explanation as to why no change in the lessee was made at that time, it tends to show that there was no change in possession of the goods claimed to have been sold.—Benjamin v. McElwaine-Richards Co., 10 Ind. App. 76, 37 N. E. 362.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. FRAUD. CONV. §§ 822-834, 863-866.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 764.

§ 288. — Insolvency.

[a] (Sup. 1876)

Where a conveyance was made to a husband and wife jointly, the question whether such conveyance was for the purpose of defrauding creditors of the husband should be determined by the amount and value of his property at the time of the conveyance; and the fact that, at that time, he had other property, sufficient to pay his debts, is admissible in evidence.—McConnell v. Martin, 52 Ind. 434.

[b] (Sup. 1876)

In an action by a judgment creditor to set aside a deed by deceased as fraudulent, on the issue of deceased's insolvency the tax book and the inventory of deceased's estate are admissible in evidence.—Cravens v. Duncan, 53 Ind. 347.

[c] (Sup. 1888)

On an issue as to the insolvency of a debtor, a tax list returned by him to the assessor, under oath, about two months before the commencement of the action, while not competent as original evidence, is admissible against the debtor to show the particular articles of personalty or items of credits claimed by him at the time such list was returned, and also to impeach his testimony.—Towns v. Smith, 115 Ind. 480, 16 N. E. 811.

[d] (Sup. 1889)

In an action by a wife against her husband's creditor to quiet her title to land conveyed to her, the consideration having been paid by her, a letter written by the husband to a third person, enumerating certain debts which were not shown to be subsisting claims against him at the time the conveyance in question was made, is not admissible on the issue of his solvency at the date of such conveyance.—Jones v. Snyder, 117 Ind. 229, 20 N. E. 140.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. FRAUD. CONV. §§ 836, 837.

§ 289. — Intent of grantor.

[a] (Sup. 1877)

In an action by a judgment creditor to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance by his debtor, evidence that the conveyance was made pending the action in which the judgment was rendered is admissible as tending to prove the fraud.—Evans v. Hamilton, 56 Ind. 34.

[b] (Sup. 1883)

Where the issue is as to the intent of a husband in procuring a conveyance to be made to his wife, he may testify that he had no intention of defrauding his creditors.—Sedgwick v. Tucker, 90 Ind. 271.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. FRAUD. CONV. §§ 838, 840-848.

§ 290. — Nature and circumstances of transaction.

[a] (Sup. 1871)

On the trial of an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, it is proper that the plaintiff should introduce evidence to prove who paid the purchase money, how it was paid, and who were concerned in having the deed made, and to identify the deed with the transaction.—Rhodes v. Green, 36 Ind. 7.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. FRAUD. CONV. §§ 826, 830.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 772.

§ 291. — Consideration.

[a] (Sup. 1891)

An owner of land, worth $2,500, conveyed it to plaintiff in payment of a debt owing to the latter's brother. A judgment creditor of the brother, claiming that the land had been conveyed to plaintiff in fraud of the brother's creditors, had the land sold in satisfaction of the judgment, and defendant became the purchaser. Plaintiff then brought an action to quiet title, claiming that the conveyance to him had been made in entire good faith, and that, as part of the same transaction, he had agreed to cancel a debt of $650 which his brother owed him, and that, in addition, he had assumed the payment of other debts of his brother, not including the judgment debt, aggregating a sum equal to the value of the land. The original landowner was examined by deposition, and his testimony substantially supported plaintiff's contention. Held, that at the trial it was error to suppress a part of the deposition in which the landowner testified as to the assumption of the brother's debts by plaintiff, as the effect of such suppression was to make it appear that the land, worth $2,500, had been conveyed to plaintiff in consideration of a debt of $650 owing to him by his brother.—McCormick v. Smith, 127 Ind. 230, 26 N. E. 825.

[b] (Sup. 1894)

To prove consideration, the grantee is not confined to proof of such of his transactions with the grantor as occurred in the presence of the attacking creditors.—Fleming v. Yost, 137 Ind. 95, 36 N. E. 705.

Where the consideration is denied, the grantee's entries against the grantor on his books are competent, as res gestae, to corroborate the grantee's assertion that the consideration was made up from such charges.—Id.

[c] (Sup. 1898)

Evidence of the value of notes given by a grantee to his grantor for property conveyed is not admissible in an action to set aside the conveyance because of the insolvency of the grantor.—Vansickle v. Shenk, 50 N. E. 381, 150 Ind. 413.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. §§ 849–856.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 776–779.

§ 292. — Knowledge and intent of grantee.

[a] (Sup. 1887)

In a suit by a person who had recovered judgment in an action for the seduction of his wife, to set aside a conveyance made by the judgment debtor in fraud of the judgment, evidence of a conversation prior to the commencement of the suit between plaintiff and the grantee is admissible to show knowledge on the part of the grantee of the improper intimacy of the grantor with plaintiff's wife, and consequent knowledge of plaintiff's claim against his future grantor.—Hunsinger v. Hofer, 110 Ind. 300, 11 N. E. 463.

[b] (App. 1891)

Where a conveyance is alleged to be fraudulent towards creditors, the grantee may testify as to his good faith, purpose, and intention.—Wilson v. Clark, 1 Ind. App. 182, 27 N. E. 310; South Bend Iron-Works Co. v. Duddleson, 27 N. E. 312.

[c] (App. 1891)

Where a person alleged to be a fraudulent vendee claims that he bought the goods to prevent their sale at a sacrifice to the injury of the local market, it is proper to show in disproof of his claim that he advertised the goods for sale at a sacrifice as a bankrupt stock.—Levi v. Kraminer, 2 Ind. App. 594, 28 N. E. 1028.

§ 295. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1846)

On a bill against a grantor and his infant children to subject land in payment of the claimant's claim, which the grantor had caused to be conveyed to his children in fraud of his creditors, the father confessed the bill. Held, that the decree for the complainant on no other evidence than the father's answer was erroneous.—Shirley v. Shields, 8 Blackf. 273.

[b] (Sup. 1856)

Where, on a creditor's bill to set aside a conveyance alleged to have been fraudulently made, the testimony of a witness to the fraud in the vendee proved by his own testimony to be implicated as a participant in the fraud, ought to be strongly corroborated to authorize a decree on it against the defendant's answer under oath.—Kittering v. Parker, 8 Ind. 44.

Bill by creditors to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent. One witness only testified to fraud in the vendee, and he was implicated, by his own testimony, in the fraud. Bill dismissed.—Id.

[c] Fraud may be established as well by circumstantial, as by direct, evidence.—(Sup. 1873) Farmer v. Calvert, 44 Ind. 209; (1888) Heaton v. Shanklin, 115 Ind. 503, 18 N. E. 172.

[d] (Sup. 1876)

In an action to set aside a conveyance of land by a husband to himself and wife with the right of survivorship, there was evidence that the plaintiff recovered judgment against the husband. Two witnesses testified about a deed, but the parties to the deed were not fully named. What deed they were testifying about was not mentioned. No description of the property was given, nor whose money paid for it. No deed was introduced in evidence, nor the record of the deed nor their absence accounted for. Held, insufficient to sustain a verdict in favor of the plaintiff.—Wilds v. Bogan, 55 Ind. 331.

[e] (Sup. 1881)

In a suit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, a charge that a badge of fraud is a fact calculated to throw suspicion upon a transaction, that its only effect in general is to require proof of the good faith of the parties thereto, that it is not conclusive of fraud, but simply an inference drawn by experience from the customary conduct of men, and that it is open to any reasonable and fair interpretation, is substantially correct.—Sherman v. Hogland, 73 Ind. 472.

[f] (Sup. 1883)

In an action to set aside a deed as fraudulent, an instruction that, if the circumstances unexplained clearly indicate that the transaction is fraudulent, they are sufficient, is not error.—Wright v. Nipple, 92 Ind. 310.

[g] (Sup. 1890)

In a controversy between a wife and the creditors of the husband, she is bound to establish the facts of which she has the burden of proof by a preponderance of testimony only; and an instruction is properly refused that, to show that he acted as her agent in the purchase of a stock of goods, and in conducting the business, "the evidence must be clear and satisfactory, and sufficiently strong to remove the equivocal character in which she is placed by reason of her relation of wife."—Laird v. Davidson, 124 Ind. 412, 25 N. E. 7, distinguishing Rowell v. Klein (1873) 44 Ind. 291.

[h] (Sup. 1907)

In a suit to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance, a prima facie case is made out by proof that the conveyance was voluntary and without consideration, or that it was made with a fraudulent intent to hinder, delay, cheat, or defraud the creditors of the grantor, and was accepted by the grantee with knowledge of its fraudulent character.—Stark v. Lamb, 167 Ind. 642, 78 N. E. 668, 79 N. E. 895.

§ 297. — Insolvency.

[a] (Sup. 1888)

The debtor's tax list, returned by him two months before suit commenced, showed no property exempt from execution. He testified that he had a large amount of property in addition to that listed, and failed to show any reason for the discrepancy. Held, that a finding that he was insolvent was warranted.—Towns v. Smith, 115 Ind. 480, 16 N. E. 811.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Fraud. Conv. § 891.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 794.

§ 298. — Intent of grantor.

[a] Evidence of collusion against existing creditors is sufficient evidence of fraud against subsequent creditors.—(Sup. 1859) Rufing v. Tilton, 12 Ind. 250; (1861) Dart v. Stewart, 17 Ind. 221.

[b] (App. 1901)

Positive evidence is not necessary to prove an intent to defraud creditors by a conveyance of property, but such intent may be inferred from facts and circumstances proved.—De Ruiter v. De Ruiter, 62, N. E. 100, 28 Ind. App. 9, 91 Am. St. Rep. 107.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

§ 299. — Nature and circumstances of transaction.

[a] Evidence considered, and held sufficient to show a conveyance fraudulent as to creditors.—(Sup. 1849) Basye v. Daniel, 1 Ind. 378, Smith, 252; (1881) Strong v. Taylor School Tp., 79 Ind. 208.

[b] (Sup. 1879)

Evidence considered, and held insufficient to show a conveyance fraudulent as to creditors.—Evans v. Nealis, 60 Ind. 148.

[c] (Sup. 1885)

On the question of whether a conveyance to a bank was fraudulent as against creditors, held, that evidence that large quantities of property, consisting of town lots, a sawmill, and various articles of personalty, were conveyed without inventory, measurement, or count, in payment of a debt claimed to be due to the bank, and that at the time of the conveyance the debtor's wife held in trust for him shares of the bank stock to a large amount, tended to show fraud, and to make it improper to disturb a finding of fraud.—Fitch v. First Nat. Bank of Rising Sun, 99 Ind. 443.

[d] (Sup. 1886)

A finding of fraud in a transfer of a stock of goods held not to be disturbed where a presumption of fraud was raised by noncompliance with Rev. St. 1881, § 4911, requiring immediate delivery; and, although the validity of the debt for which the goods are transferred was proved, and the fact that the mortgagee contesting the transfer knew of it when he took his mortgage, yet the evidence showed that no inventory of the goods was taken, and no itemized estimate of the value made; that a lump sum was agreed upon, which was about half the real value of the goods; that no credit was entered by the transferee therefor; and that the bill of sale given was not recorded as it should have been, if intended as a mortgage.—Seavey v. Walker, 108 Ind. 78, 9 N. E. 347.

§ 300. — Consideration.

[a] (Sup. 1883)

That lands conveyed to a wife were paid for with her husband's money, so as to render the conveyance fraudulent as against his creditors, is not sufficiently established by her mere testimony that she never inherited or received any property by gift or bequest, aside from her father's estate, which was wholly inadequate to pay the consideration.—Talkington v. Parish, 89 Ind. 202.

[b] (Sup. 1891)

In an action by a creditor to set aside a deed from the debtor to his son on the ground that it was without consideration, and rendered the debtor insolvent, the only testimony as to consideration was that of the debtor, his wife, and son, who all testified that the deed was given for a valuable consideration. Held, that the fact that there were inconsistencies and discrepancies in their evidence was not sufficient to justify a judgment for the plaintiff, since the burden was on him to show that the deed was without consideration.—McConnell v. Citizens' State Bank of Petersburg, 130 Ind. 127, 27 N. E. 616.

[a] (Sup. 1853)

Whether a deed made upon a valuable consideration is fraudulent or not is, under Rev. St. 1843, a question of fact, and not of law.—Hubbs v. Bancroft, 4 Ind. 388.

[b] Where the fraudulent intent in making a transfer of a debtor's property is to be determined by evidence collateral to the writing, such question is determinable alone by the jury.—(Sup. 1855) Stewart v. English, 6 Ind. 176; (1855) Church v. Drummond, 7 Ind. 17; (1872) Parton v. Yates, 41 Ind. 456; (1875) Pence v. Croan, 51 Ind. 336; (1879) Hardy v. Mitchell, 67 Ind. 485; (1880) Goff v. Rogers, 71 Ind. 459; (1882) Bishop v. State ex rel. Lord, 83 Ind. 67; (1882) Jarvis v. Banta, 83 Ind. 528; (1889) Citizens' Bank v. Bolen, 121 Ind. 301, 23 N. E. 146.

[c] (Sup. 1868)

The question of intent in the case of an alleged fraudulent conveyance of property by a husband to a wife is one of fact for the jury.—Holman v. Martin, 12 Ind. 553.

[d] (Sup. 1864)

The question of intent to defraud creditors, based on the grantor's retention of property, where there is any evidence of good faith or consideration to repel the presumption of fraud, is one of fact for the jury.—Maple v. Burnside, 22 Ind. 139.

Whether a mortgage is given with a fraudulent intent is under the statute (1 Gav. & H. Rev. St. p. 353, § 21) a question of fact for the jury to determine.—Id.

[e] (Super. 1874)

Whether a mortgage is given with a fraudulent intent is a question of fact, to be determined by the court or jury trying the cause.—O'Brien v. O'Brien, Wils. 558.

[f] (Sup. 1875)

Under 1 Gav. & H. Rev. St. p. 353, § 21, providing that the question of fraudulent intent shall be deemed a question of fact, the question of fraudulent intent in making conveyance is not one of legal inference or presumption, but is one of fact, to be found from the facts and circumstances in the case.—Pence v. Croan, 51 Ind. 336.

[g] (Sup. 1877)

For a person to buy a title bond from another, knowing the latter is indebted by judgment to a third person, is not necessarily fraudulent as towards the creditor. The question of fraudulent intent in fact is for the jury.—Leasure v. Coburn, 57 Ind. 274.

[h] (Sup. 1880)

A mortgage is not necessarily fraudulent because executed for a larger sum than is actually due from the mortgagor to the mortgagee. If the amount is materially larger than that due, this is merely a badge of fraud, and the question of fraud is one of fact for the jury.—Goff v. Rogers, 71 Ind. 459.

[i] (Sup. 1881)

Under 1 Rev. St. 1876, p. 506, § 21, providing that whether or not a conveyance of property shall be deemed fraudulent shall be a question of fact, and that no conveyance or charge shall be adjudged fraudulent as against creditors or purchasers solely on the ground that it was not founded on a valuable consideration, an instruction that "if defendant executed the conveyance alleged to be fraudulent, without any valuable or good consideration, and that, after the conveyance thereof, he did not have a sufficient amount of property unincumbered, subject to execution, to pay all his debts, and that he was indebted at the time and is indebted to the plaintiff, as alleged in the complaint, then you should find for the plaintiff," was erroneous, as invading the province of the jury.—Wooters v. Osborn, 77 Ind. 513.

[j] (Sup. 1881)

In view of 1 Rev. St. 1876, p. 506 (Rev. St. 1881, § 4924), declaring that the question of fraudulent intent shall be a question of fact, it was held that the cases would be rare in which it can be correctly stated that a chattel mortgage, without regard to extrinsic facts, is void on its face.—Lockwood v. Harding, 79 Ind. 129.

[k] (Sup. 1882)

A recorded mortgage on its face cannot be declared fraudulent and void as against creditors, but the fraud is a question for the jury under 1 Rev. St. 1876, providing that the question of fraudulent intent is a question of fact.—McFadden v. Hopkins, 81 Ind. 459.

[l] (Sup. 1884)

On a finding that a husband was indebted to his wife, that he had a conveyance made to her, that she never afterwards claimed the debt, and that he had sufficient property to pay all his debts, the court could say, as a matter of law, that the conveyance was not fraudulent.—Secor v. Souder, 95 Ind. 95.

[m] (Sup. 1891)

Where an insolvent debtor, on the day before making an assignment for benefit of creditors, gives mortgages to one or more of his creditors, the question of the bona fides of the mortgages is one of fact under Rev. St. 1881, § 4924, providing that "the question of fraudulent intent in all cases arising under the provisions of this act [one relating to fraudulent conveyances, etc.] shall be deemed a question of fact."—Carnahan v. Schwab, 127 Ind. 507, 26 N. E. 67.

[n] (App. 1891)

Where a debtor conveyed the personal property used in his business to one of his creditors in payment of his debt, and the creditor left the debtor in possession under an agreement to conduct the business for their joint benefit, the question whether the transfer was fraudulent is one of fact.—South Branch Lumber Co. v. Stearns, 2 Ind. App. 7, 28 N. E. 117.

[a] (Sup. 1864)

A justice's judgment directed that a certain sum should be collected without appraisal. At the suggestion of the constable, who held the execution issued on the judgment, the debtor indorsed on it his consent that the constable should sell the property levied on without appraisal, which was done, and the execution creditor became the purchaser. Held, that an instruction that, before the jury could find that the judgment, execution, and sale thereon were fraudulent so as to confer no title on the purchaser at the sale, they must be satisfied that the purchaser confederated with the debtor to defraud other creditors of the debtor, was not erroneous.—Stockwell v. Byrne, 22 Ind. 6.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

In a suit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, a charge that a conveyance is not to be deemed fraudulent solely upon the ground that it was made without consideration, while correct as an abstract proposition, was properly refused where it was not relevant to the case made by the evidence.—Sherman v. Hogland, 73 Ind. 472.

While the fact that actions are pending against a vendor is not of itself sufficient to overthrow a conveyance by him, yet such fact is proper for the consideration of the jury in determining the question of fraud, and their attention may be directed to it accordingly by an instruction.—Id.

[c] (Sup. 1883)

In an action by a husband and wife to enjoin the sale of land on an execution against the husband, it appeared that the husband inherited the land from his father, and that on partition the deed was made to the plaintiffs jointly. Held, that the court properly charged that the controlling question was whether such deed was or was not fraudulent as to the husband's creditors, where such question was the only really debatable one.—Sedgwick v. Tucker, 90 Ind. 271.

In an action involving the question as to whether or not a certain deed was fraudulent as to creditors, it is not error to charge in effect that in such case fraud can never be presumed as an existing fact, in the absence of any evidence on the subject to which the charge of fraud has reference.—Id.

Where, in an action to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent against a creditor, it was admitted that the debtor at the time the conveyance was made did not have any property subject to execution, an instruction that if the debtor conveyed the property for the purpose of defrauding his creditors, and the grantee accepted it for such purpose, the conveyance was void as against creditors, was not erroneous for failing to modify it by adding that the debtor must have had no other property subject to execution.—Simpkins v. Smith, 94 Ind. 470.

In a suit to set aside a conveyance by a debtor to his wife as fraudulent as against creditors, the wife claimed that her father gave her land, but conveyed it to her husband, who sold it and purchased land from a third person, taking the deed thereto in his own name, and sold that land and obtained the premises which he conveyed to her. Held, that an instruction that if the wife and husband agreed that the land claimed to have been given her by her father should be sold and the proceeds invested in land belonging to the third person for her, and if, in pursuance of the agreement, she joined in the conveyance of such land, and the proceeds were invested in lands belonging to the third person, and the title thereto was taken in the name of her husband without her consent, he held the lands in trust for her, was properly refused because it was immaterial how the land purchased from the third person was held, unless such holding was connected with the land in controversy.—Id.

§ 310. Verdict and findings.

[a] (Sup. 1878)

Where, in an action by an execution purchaser to recover possession of lands fraudulently conveyed by the judgment debtor, the jury renders a special verdict, in which it fails to find that at the time of the conveyance the debtor had no other property subject to execution, such purchaser is not entitled to a judgment on the verdict, since a special verdict must find all the facts necessary to support a judgment.—Holman v. Elliott, 65 Ind. 78.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

Where there is no request for a special verdict and the jury "find for the plaintiffs," and in addition thereto find the amount due each, and that the debtor's conveyances were fraudulent and void as against them and ought to be set aside, such verdict can only be regarded as a general finding in plaintiff's favor, and there is no ambiguity, uncertainty, or repugnancy which will prevent the rendition of a proper judgment thereon, or render it necessary to grant a venire de novo.—Strong v. Taylor School Tp., 79 Ind. 208.

[c] (Sup. 1882)

Where the fact is found to be that the debtor's intention in making a conveyance was to insure the payment of as much of his indebtedness as possible, there is no fraud; and a conclusion of law that such a conveyance was fraudulent is a non sequitur.—Jarvis v. Banta, 83 Ind. 528.

[d] (Sup. 1884)

A special finding of facts where a fraudulent transfer is alleged need not find an intent to defraud, that being a conclusion of law from the facts found.—Corbin v. Goddard, 94 Ind. 419.

[e] (Sup. 1885)

Answers to interrogatories are inconsistent with a general verdict for plaintiff, in a suit to set aside conveyances as fraudulent, where they show that such fraud was not proved, as a general verdict implies that the fraud alleged was proved.—Jewett v. Meech, 101 Ind. 289.

[f] Where, in an action to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent, there is a special finding of fact, the fraudulent intent must be found, or the conveyance will not be set aside.—(Sup. 1889) Citizens' Bank v. Bolen, 121 Ind. 301, 23 N. E. 146; (1892) Sickman v. Wilhelm, 130 Ind. 480, 20 N. E. 908.

[g] (Sup. 1890)

In a suit to set aside a chattel mortgage as fraudulent, a special finding by the court which states some of the badges of fraud, but does not state as an ultimate fact that there was fraud, will not sustain a judgment for plaintiff.—Fletcher v. Martin, 126 Ind. 55, 25 N. E. 886.

[h] (Sup. 1891)

In an action to set aside a conveyance alleged to have been made in fraud of the grantor's creditors, where the court made special findings of facts, and stated conclusions of law thereon, a failure to find that the grantor had no property other than that alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed, out of which the creditors' claim might have been made at the time of the conveyance or of the trial, is fatal to a judgment in the creditors' favor.—Hartlepp v. Whiteley, 129 Ind. 576, 131 Ind. 543, 28 N. E. 535, 31 N. E. 203.

[i] (Sup. 1892)

In an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, a special verdict, which does not find that the alleged fraudulent grantor had no property subject to execution at the time of the conveyance, is defective, and does not cure the complaint in which such an allegation is also wanting.—Line v. State ex rel. Louder, 131 Ind. 468, 30 N. E. 703.

[j] (Sup. 1892)

Where the court finds that a conveyance, at the time it was made, and at the time of the trial, operated to defraud the creditors of the grantor, this finding will be construed to mean that the grantor was insolvent from the date of the conveyance to the date of the trial.—Crow v. Carver, 133 Ind. 260, 32 N. E. 569.

[k] (Sup. 1892)

Where, in an action to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent, the trial court makes a special finding which does not state fraud as an ultimate fact, the action must fail.—Morgan v. Worden, 145 Ind. 600, 32 N. E. 783.

[l] In a suit to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent, there must be an express finding of fraud, and a finding of ultimate facts from which fraud may be inferred is not sufficient.—(Sup. 1894) Phillips v. Kennedy, 38 N. E. 410, 39 N. E. 147, 139 Ind. 419; (App. 1895) Levi v. Bray, 39 N. E. 754, 12 Ind. App. 9; (1895) Holmes v. Henderson, 40 N. E. 151, 12 Ind. App. 698; (1903) State Bank v. Backus, 97 N. E. 512, 160 Ind. 682.

[m] (App. 1895)

In an action to recover property from the purchaser of an alleged fraudulent vendee, plaintiffs alleged that the original vendee was insolvent at the time of the purchase; that he concealed his insolvency, intending not to pay for the property, and that defendant had knowledge of such fraudulent intent. The latter claimed to be a bona fide purchaser, and the jury found that the original purchaser was insolvent when he purchased, and that defendant was a bona fide purchaser, but disagreed as to the fraudulent intent of the first vendee. Held that, though the verdict was defective in not finding on the latter issue, the finding for defendant on his affirmative defense entitled him to a judgment.—Waterbury v. Miller, 41 N. E. 383, 13 Ind. App. 197.

[n] (Sup. 1876)

In a suit to set aside a conveyance of lands executed by the plaintiff to the defendant one paragraph asked such relief on the ground of fraud, specifically alleging the facts constituting such fraud, and the other on the ground that such conveyance should be treated as a mortgage to secure the payment of a debt due from the former to the latter. To this complaint the defendant answered the general denial and two special pleas; and on these special answers issue was formed by a reply of denial and a special plea. And the jury trying such cause found specifically the facts alleged in the first paragraph of the complaint and as to a portion of the allegations of the special answers, but did not find as to the other allegations of the pleadings. Held, that such verdict was properly set aside, and a venire de novo granted, on motion therefor.—Housworth v. Bloomhuff, 54 Ind. 487.

[o] (Sup. 1891)

Where, in an action to set aside conveyances for fraud, the findings are silent on the subject of fraud, it will be presumed that none exists, and that none was proven.—Parke County Coal Co. v. Terre Haute Paper Co., 26 N. E. 884, 129 Ind. 73.

[p] (Sup. 1893)

In an action by creditors to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent, where the pleadings put the grantor's indebtedness to them in issue, it is error for the court, on trial without a jury, to omit a finding of such indebtedness, though it is proved by uncontradicted evidence, since the burden of proof in such case is on plaintiffs, and failure to find on the question is equivalent to a finding against them.—Elliott v. Pontius, 35 N. E. 562, 36 N. E. 421, 136 Ind. 641.

[q] (Sup. 1896)

Where several creditors brought suit against several defendants to set aside alleged fraudulent conveyances, and the relief prayed for in the complaint was not that the lands of one of the alleged fraudulent grantors be subjected to the payment of a judgment or judgments against the other, a conclusion of law that the lands found to be fraudulently conveyed be subjected to the payment of the judgments mentioned in the complaint in the order of their priority was not invalid as subjecting the land of other defendants to the payment of the debts of one of them.—Armstrong v. Dunn, 41 N. E. 540, 143 Ind. 433.

[r] (Sup. 1897)

In an action to set aside conveyances by a decedent as fraudulent, and certain mortgage liens as without consideration, a finding that the deeds were invalid and the mortgagee had no interest is insufficient, without some finding concerning the invalidity of the lien.—Galtine v. Brubaker, 46 N. E. 903, 147 Ind. 458.

[s] (Sup. 1896)

A failure to find whether a mortgage was made with fraudulent intent, in an action to set aside such mortgage, does not make the findings defective, so as to require a venire de novo.—Selz Schwab & Co. v. Mayer, 51 N. E. 485, 151 Ind. 422.

As the burden of proving that a mortgage given to secure creditors is fraudulent is on the party attacking it, a failure to find a fraudulent intent is equivalent to a finding that there was none.—Id.

[t] (Sup. 1900)

Where fraud in a conveyance is essential to a recovery, it must be found as a fact, and a finding that property sold by an insolvent to his surety on a note was sold for $200 less than its value is not equivalent to a finding that such sale was fraudulent in fact.—Owens v. Gascho, 56 N. E. 224, 154 Ind. 225.

[u] (App. 1900)

In an action to set aside a conveyance of a debtor's property, as made with intent to defraud creditors, the jury must find as a fact the intent to defraud, and not simply facts and circumstances from which such intent might be inferred.—Stout v. Price, 24 Ind. App. 360, 55 N. E. 904, 56 N. E. 857.

[v] (App. 1904)

Where, in an action to set aside a deed to a daughter as fraudulent, the daughter answered by general denial, and by a separate paragraph alleged that the deed was executed to secure a debt owing to her by her father, and for no other purpose, as against complainants, it was not outside the issues for the court to find that the conveyance was executed to secure a valid debt, and was a prior lien, though such answer contained no prayer for the foreclosure of such lien.—Clow v. Brown, 72 N. E. 534, 37 Ind. App. 172.

[w] (App. 1905)

In an action to declare void a conveyance of real property and to subject it to a vendor's lien, failure of a special finding to show the value of the property is not prejudicial to defendant.—Borror v. Carrier, 34 Ind. App. 353, 73 N. E. 123.

[x] (App. 1905)

In a suit to set aside a mortgage as fraudulent, a finding that the mortgagor has been insolvent ever since the commencement of the action does not raise the presumption that his insolvency existed prior to that time and at the time of the execution of the mortgage, which was more than 17 months before the institution of suit.—Dinius v. Lahr, 74 N. E. 1033, 36 Ind. App. 425.

In a suit to set aside a mortgage as fraudulent, a finding that the mortgagee took the mortgage with full knowledge of the claims of creditors and of the fact that the same would render the mortgagor insolvent is not a finding that the execution of the mortgage, on the date thereof, left the mortgagor insolvent, and without property sufficient to pay plaintiff's judgment.—Id.

§ 312. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1894)

In an action by creditors to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, and asking judgment for the amount of plaintiff's claims against the grantor, the court may enter a finding against defendants at one term of court, and assess damages and render the proper decree at a subsequent term.—Doherty v. Holliday, 137 Ind. 282, 32 N. E. 315, 36 N. E. 907.

[b] (Sup. 1899)

In an action to set aside, as fraudulent, a conveyance by husband to wife, it was not error to deny the latter's motion for judgment, where part of the property conveyed was subject to plaintiff's debt.—Nelson v. Cottingham, 52 N. E. 702, 152 Ind. 135.

§ 313. — As to property transferred.

[a] (Sup. 1894)

On complaint to set aside a deed as fraudulent, defendant answered that he took the deed in satisfaction of a bona fide mortgage, and plaintiff replied by general denial and allegation that the mortgage was in fraud of creditors; and both these and the issues on the complaint were found for plaintiff. Held, that a decree setting aside the deed and ordering a sale free from any claim of the grantee was proper.—Hadley v. Hood, 94 Ind. 119.

[b] (Sup. 1899)

Where defendant had fraudulently conveyed his property, it is not error for a court of equity, in which the conveyance is assailed by his creditors, to direct that the property be sold upon an order of sale instead of execution.—McNally v. White, 54 N. E. 794, 56 N. E. 214, 154 Ind. 163.

[a] (Sup. 1899)

In an action by judgment creditors to set aside a mortgage as fraudulent and subject the mortgagor's property to plaintiffs' judgment, a personal judgment cannot be rendered against the mortgagee; nor can the property conveyed be ordered to be sold without relief from valuation or appraisement law, under Rev. St.

1881, § 743, where there is no finding of fraud.—Levy v. Chittenden, 120 Ind. 37, 22 N. E. 92.

§ 315. — Construction and operation.

[a] (Sup. 1830)

Where the purchaser of real estate at sheriff's sale obtains a decree setting aside a deed which had been made to defraud the judgment creditor, such decree does not vest the absolute title in the complainant.—Frakes v. Brown, 2 Blackf. 295.

[b] (Sup. 1838)

Decedent, owning lands lying partly in the counties of S. and O., conveyed the same to his sons in fraud of plaintiffs, his creditors, who subsequently obtained judgments in the county of S., and, after decedent's death, transcripts of the judgments were filed in the county of O. Subsequently, by a judgment in the county of S., said judgments were revived, and the deed made by decedent to his sons was set aside as fraudulent, and the land was decreed subject to and ordered to be sold for the payment of said judgments. Held, that whether the filing of the transcripts created a lien upon the lands in the county of O. was immaterial, for the reason that the decree setting aside the deed and reviving the judgments created a specific lien and incumbrance on the land in both counties.—Dunning v. Seward, 90 Ind. 63.

[c] (Sup. 1897)

In a suit to set aside for fraud a married woman's deed, in which her husband joined, the latter's want of good faith is immaterial; and hence the action of the court in striking out his answer for failure to submit to examination before trial, and in adjudging the complaint confessed as to him, does not affect the validity of the deed as between the wife and her grantee.—Working v. Garn, 47 N. E. 951, 143 Ind. 546.

§ 316. Execution and enforcement of judgment or decree in general.

[a] (Sup. 1843)

A purchaser of land at a sheriff's sale, under a judgment against a person who had conveyed the land to defraud his creditors, stands in the place of a creditor of the fraudulent grantor, and has the same rights.—Scott v. Purcell, 7 Blackf. 66, 39 Am. Dec. 453.

[b] (Sup. 1850)

A verdict that an attachment defendant, at the time the writ issued, had conveyed his property with intent to defraud his creditors, will not authorize a sale without appraisalment, unless an order of the court to that effect be made.—Shirk v. Wilson, 13 Ind. 129.

[c] (Sup. 1871)

2 Gav. & H. St. p. 244, § 456, provides that property conveyed by a debtor with intent to hinder or delay creditors shall be sold without appraisalment; and 2 Gav. & H. St. p. 650, § 15, provides that, upon any instrument of writing containing a promise to pay money without relief from valuation laws, judgment shall be rendered and execution had accordingly. Judgment was rendered against the maker of promissory notes, in which appraisalment was waived; and the judgment creditors brought suit to reach the proceeds of property conveyed by the judgment debtor in fraud of his creditors, and disposed of by the fraudulent grantee. In this latter proceeding, personal judgment was rendered against the grantee for the value of the goods. Held, that a sale under execution on this latter judgment, without appraisalment, was erroneous; the grantee not being a party to the original judgments against the debtor, and the statute (2 Gav. & H. St. p. 244, § 456) applying only to cases in which the specific property conveyed by the debtor was seized on execution.—Whitehall v. Crawford, 37 Ind. 147.

[d] (Sup. 1875)

A judgment was rendered in the court of common pleas, and afterwards the circuit court, at the suit of the administrator of the estate of the judgment-plaintiff, set aside as fraudulent and void certain conveyances of real estate of the judgment-defendant, adjudged that the title to said real estate was in said judgment-defendant, and that said real estate was subject to the payment of said judgment of the common pleas, and ordered that it be sold to pay said judgment. Held that, to render valid the sale of said real estate by the sheriff, it was not necessary that such sale should be made on an execution issued upon the judgment of the court of common pleas, but it was proper for said sale to be made on an order therefor issued upon said judgment of the circuit court.—Vandever v. Hardy, 51 Ind. 490.

By the express provision of Code 1852, § 456, property conveyed by a debtor with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors is to be sold without appraisalment.—Sherman v. Hogland, 73 Ind. 472; Mugge v. Hielgemeier, 81 Ind. 120.

[f] (Sup. 1881)

Code 1852, § 456, providing that property conveyed by a debtor with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors shall be sold on execution without appraisalments, applies to property to be conveyed to another and which ought to have been conveyed to himself.—Mugge v. Hielgemeier, 81 Ind. 120.

When a judgment is rendered upon a contract waiving appraisalment, or where on account of the nature of the cause of action an appraisalment is not allowed, it must be so expressed in order that the execution may so issue.—Id.

Code 1852, § 456, provides that property conveyed by a debtor with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors shall be sold without appraisement, and section 381 provides that, when a judgment is to be executed without relief from appraisement, it shall be so stated in the judgment. Held that, where the judgment whereby a fraudulent conveyance was set aside and the property declared subject to execution was not the judgment by virtue of which a sale was made, it was not necessary that the judgment merely finding a fraudulent conveyance should have ordered a sale without appraisement in order to authorize the same.—Id.

[c] (Sup. 1893)

Where a judgment is obtained in an action for breach of warranty, and execution issues thereon, and land conveyed by the judgment debtor is sold before an order has been made decreeing such transfer to be fraudulent and void, failure to appraise the rents and profits before the sale on execution is not cured by Rev. St. 1881, § 743, providing that property conveyed by a debtor with intent to delay or defraud his creditors may be sold without appraisal.—Milburn v. Phillips, 136 Ind. 680, 34 N. E. 983, 36 N. E. 360.

[a] (Sup. 1888)

Under Rev. St. § 2508, providing that where the inchoate interest of a married woman is not directed by the judgment to be sold, as well as the interest of her husband, her interest shall become absolute, and vest as on death of her husband, when a deed of husband and wife has been set aside as in fraud of creditors, and a sale of the husband's interest in the property ordered, in a proceeding to which the wife was not a party, she is entitled to recover her third interest in the property of the husband so sold, in a suit against the purchasers, and the purchasers are not entitled to set up that her interest is held by the grantee in the fraudulent deed, who is not a party to the action.—Rupe v. Hadley, 113 Ind. 416, 16 N. E. 391.

It is no defense to an action by a wife to recover her interest from the purchasers of real estate judicially sold as her husband's property, after a deed to the property by the husband and wife to a third person had been set aside and declared in fraud of rights of the husband's creditors, that the deed which was set aside was executed for value to one who sold to an innocent purchaser for value, and that the last purchaser was not a party to the suit to set aside said deed.—Id.

Right of debtor to exemptions as to property fraudulently conveyed after conveyance has been set aside, see EXEMPTIONS, § 50.

§ 318. Subjection to claims of creditors in general.

[a] (Sup. 1835)

Where a conveyance of real estate executed by an intestate in his lifetime to defraud his creditors is set aside after his death and the land sold to pay the debts, neither the administrator of the estate nor the probate court has any control over the proceeds of the sale, but the creditor whose bill is first filed to set aside the fraudulent conveyance, executed before any judgment against the intestate, is entitled to priority of payment over the other creditors.—Bank of United States v. Burke, 4 Blackf. 141.

[b] (Sup. 1851)

Where a decree is rendered in equity, setting aside a deceased's debtor's conveyance for fraud against creditors and ordering a sale of the land, the entire proceeds of the sale should be ordered to be brought into court to be distributed among creditors, should there be such in the course of administration; and hence a decree directing the sheriff to bring into court only so much of the proceeds as would satisfy the claims of complainants, and to pay the surplus to the debtor's heirs, is erroneous.—McNaughtin v. Lamb, 2 Ind. 642.

[c] (Sup. 1883)

When, upon the complaint of one or more creditors of an estate, fraudulent conveyances made by the deceased are set aside, the creditors should all share therein.—Bottom v. Covert, 90 Ind. 508.

[d] (Sup. 1884)

After a fraudulent grantee had mortgaged the land to a bona fide mortgagee, a judgment creditor obtained a decree setting aside the grantee's deed, from which decree an appeal was taken. After the decree, but prior to the appeal, the grantee was adjudged bankrupt and the land was sold, and thereafter the mortgage was foreclosed and bid in by the mortgagee; the purchaser at the bankrupt sale redeeming and taking a conveyance by the bankrupt and his grantor. Held, in a suit by the purchaser to quiet title against the judgment creditor, that after the satisfaction of the mortgage de-defendant's judgment must be satisfied before plaintiff was entitled to any further decree.—Hines v. Dresher, 93 Ind. 551.

[c] (Sup. 1894)

Creditors should all be permitted to participate, upon due application, in the proceeds of property fraudulently conveyed.—Doherty v. Holliday, 32 N. E. 315, 36 N. E. 907, 137 Ind. 282.

§ 321. Priorities of creditors.

[a] (Sup. 1885)

Where a conveyance of real estate executed by an intestate in his lifetime to defraud his creditors is set aside after his death and the land sold to pay the debts, neither the administrator of the estate nor the probate court has any control over the proceeds of the sale, but the creditor whose bill is first filed to set aside the fraudulent conveyance, executed before any judgment against the intestate, is entitled to priority of payment over the other creditors.—Bank of United States v. Burke, 4 Blackf. 141.

[b] (Sup. 1883)

The proceeds of property a transfer of which has been declared void as to creditors are distributable among all the creditors of the grantor according to their legal priorities, without preference to the party first moving to set aside the transfer.—Bottoff v. Covert, 90 Ind. 508.

[a] (Sup. 1886)

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 4911, a sale without delivery is presumed to be fraudulent as to creditors; but, where there is evidence tending to support a finding of the jury to the contrary, the case will not be reversed merely because there is also contradictory evidence.—Seavey v. Walker, 108 Ind. 78, 9 N. E. 347.

[b] (Sup. 1889)

Since, by statute (Rev. St. 1881, § 4924), the question of fraud is a question of fact, a decision of the bona fides of the transaction must be upheld.—Purple v. Farrington, 21 N. E. 543, 119 Ind. 164, 4 L. R. A. 535.

[c] (App. 1892)

Since, by statute, fraud is made a question of fact for the court or jury trying the cause, the appellate court will not weigh the evidence and determine the preponderance on appeal in an action involving the question whether a sale was made with intent to defraud creditors.—Eaken v. Thompson, 4 Ind. App. 393, 30 N. E. 1114.

[d] (Sup. 1893)

Where several creditors have joined in a suit to set aside a mortgage of their debtor, and award his assignee possession of the mortgaged property, the court's failure to find the validity of plaintiffs' claims on the undisputed evidence is harmless, where the mortgage is upheld, since, under the rule that causes of action joined must affect all the parties, (Burns' Rev. St. §§ 279, 281), no several judgments could be rendered for plaintiffs on their claims, the basis of the joinder being eliminated.—Elliott v. Pontius, 136 Ind. 641, 35 N. E. 562, 36 N. E. 421.

[a] (Sup. 1884)

An indictment under Rev. St. 1881, § 2156, punishing one who is a party to a conveyance in fraud of creditors, which states that the accused was a party to the conveyance to defraud, and that such conveyance was corruptly executed for such purpose, sufficiently describes the offense, and it is not necessary to show that the conveyance was actually fraudulent.—State v. Miller, 98 Ind. 70.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 921, 933, 934; note, 18 L. R. A. 859; note, 37 Am. St. Rep. 607.

§ 2. What law governs.

[a] (Sup. 1889)

Rev. St. 1881, § 4950, which makes void all notes, bills, etc., the whole or any part of the consideration of which is for money or other valuable thing won by wager, or money lent at the time of such wager for the purpose of being wagered, does not apply to notes executed and payable in New York in pursuance of a transaction engaged in and consummated there, but such notes are governed by the laws of New York.—Sondheim v. Gilbert, 117 Ind. 71, 18 N. E. 687, 10 Am. St. Rep. 23, 5 L. R. A. 432.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 922.

§ 5. Subject-matter and interest of parties therein in general.

[a] A wager or bet made between parties on the result of an election is void.—(Sup. 1858) Frybarger v. Simpson, 11 Ind. 59; (1859) Hizer v. State, 12 Ind. 330; (1859) Worthington v. Black, 13 Ind. 344.

[b] (Sup. 1859)

Defendant bought a hat on an agreement that he should pay for it when B. (who was at that time candidate for governor) should be defeated. Held, that the contract was a wager, and had reference to the election at which B. was running for governor.—Hizer v. State, 12 Ind. 330.

[c] (Sup. 1860)

A note, payable if "James Buchanan is the next president," is illegal.—Nudd v. Burnett, 14 Ind. 25.

[d] (Sup. 1879)

A transaction by which plaintiff delivered to defendant a wagon valued at $120, for which defendant agreed to pay plaintiff $5 and the further sum of $235 in the event of Tilden's election, was a wagering contract, and therefore void under 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 468, § 28.—Davis v. Leonard, 69 Ind. 213.

[e] (Sup. 1883)

A contract to pay a sum of money on condition that the payee do not marry within two years, and, if he do, then to pay a certain sum per day during the time he shall remain single, is a wager on the probability of marriage, and is void.—Chalfant v. Payton, 91 Ind. 202, 46 Am. Rep. 586.

[f] (Sup. 1883)

An agreement to pay a certain sum of money to the payee by a certain time on his marriage to a certain lady between certain dates, provided he gave the promisors "the exclusive right to carry marriage benefit insurance on him" and the lady, is void as a wagering contract.—James v. Jellison, 94 Ind. 292, 48 Am. Rep. 151.

[g] (Sup. 1890)

A transaction whereby 10 bushels of oats, of the actual value of 30 or 40 cents a bushel, are delivered by one party to the other, upon an agreement that the party receiving the oats should execute his note for $100, the party furnishing the oats agreeing in turn to sell 20 bushels of oats to be delivered by the maker of the note at the price of $10 per bushel, both parties having full knowledge of the actual value of the oats, is a wagering contract, and void as between the parties.—Schmueckle v. Waters, 125 Ind. 265, 25 N. E. 291.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gaming, §§ 5-15.

§ 6. Games, sports, and contests.

[a] (Sup. 1903)

A wrestling match is a game within the meaning of Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6076, providing that a person may, within six months, recover money or other valuable things paid on a bet on a game, and therefore money lost and paid by virtue of a bet on a wrestling match can be recovered.—Desgain v. Wessner, 67 N. E. 991, 161 Ind. 205.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gaming, §§ 12-14.

§ 7. Prizes or premiums.

[a] (Sup. 1878)

To offer to pay a premium to the owner of the horse that shall "make the quickest time" is not against public policy as a wager or bet, and such owner may maintain an action to recover such premium.—Alvord v. Smith, 63 Ind. 58.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gaming, § 16.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 924.

§ 8. Subscriptions or entrance fees.

(a) (Sup. 1878)

In an action by a driving park association to recover on subscriptions given for the purpose of assisting in the payment of premiums offered for certain horse races which were to take place in the park, an answer alleging that plaintiff was organized for an unlawful purpose, viz. the purchase of ground for horse racing "and other purposes," or to enable plaintiff to sell pools on horse races, and that the party who had obtained the subscription had misrepresented the contents of the subscription paper and the extent of the liability to be incurred by signing the same, was insufficient.—Mullen v. Beech Grove Driving Park, 64 Ind. 202.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gaming, § 17.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 924.

§ 9. Disposition of money or property by chance.

(a) (Sup. 1858)

Schemes for the distribution of property to be determined by chance are unlawful.—Swain v. Russell, 10 Ind. 438.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 926-931.

§ 11. — In general.

(a) (Sup. 1865)

The mere fact that a person may not have in his possession, and has not attempted to acquire possession of, a particular commodity which he undertakes to sell, deliverable at a future time, will not render illegal a contract made by him to sell and deliver the article. He is bound by his contract, and must deliver the property or be subject to the consequence of a nondelivery.—Shipp v. Bowen, 25 Ind. 44.

(b) (Sup. 1881)

Where the defense to a note is that it was given to plaintiff, a broker, to purchase wheat, in pursuance of a scheme or combination between defendant and others to corner the market, but it does not appear that plaintiff was a party to the combination, the plaintiff is entitled to recover.—Wright v. Crabbs, 78 Ind. 487.

(c) (App. 1894)

Where there is evidence that defendant proposed to his cousin that they should buy some wheat; that they bought, through reputable members of the Chicago Board of Trade, a certain quantity, which was delivered to them in the shape of warehouse receipts; that actual delivery on demand was intended by all parties; that they could have got the wheat on demand; that they carried it awhile on margin with said dealers; that wheat depreciated, and they closed out at a loss, which was all paid by said cousin, defendant giving him the note in suit in settlement of his share,—a finding that the note was not founded on a gambling consideration will not be reversed.—Fisher v. Fisher, 8 Ind. App. 665, 36 N. E. 206.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gaming, §§ 19-21, 33, 26.

§ 12. — Sales for future delivery.

(a) (Sup. 1888)

Where any commodity is bought for future delivery, without regard to the form of the contract, if the parties mutually understand and intend that the purchaser shall pay for, and the seller shall deliver, the commodity sold at the maturity of the contract, the transaction is legal and valid; and the fact that the purchaser is required to deposit a margin, and to increase the same at any time the market may require it, to secure the payment of the purchase price at maturity, or that the seller shall deposit a margin, and increase the same like the purchaser, to secure the delivery of the commodity sold at maturity, does not vitiate such contract.—Fisher v. Fisher, 15 N. E. 832, 113 Ind. 474.

(b) (Sup. 1889)

A contract for the sale and future delivery of a commodity of a designated kind, which the seller does not own and which has at the time no actual existence, but which may be supplied by purchase in the market at the proper time, is a valid contract, provided it is the intention of the parties or one of them, when the contract was made, that the commodity shall actually be procured by the seller and supplied to the purchaser at or before the maturity of the agreement.—Sondheim v. Gilbert, 18 N. E. 687, 117 Ind. 71, 5 L. R. A. 432, 10 Am. St. Rep. 23.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gaming, § 22.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 926; note, 1 Am. St. Rep. 752.

§ 13. — Options.

(a) (Sup. 1889)

It is a good defense to a note, sued on by the payee, that it was given to reimburse plaintiff for defendant's share of margins advanced by plaintiff upon an option contract in grain, entered into by plaintiff and defendant jointly, without any intention of paying for the grain or having it delivered.—Davis v. Davis, 119 Ind. 511, 21 N. E. 1112.

[b] (Sup. 1897)

Option deals, where it is mutually understood and intended by both buyer and seller that the grain purported to be purchased shall not be delivered, where in fact the seller has no grain to deliver, and where settlements at the time fixed for delivery are to be made upon the market value of such cereals at that time, being understood by the parties to be a speculation wholly on chances, are against public policy, and therefore illegal.—Pearce v. Dill, 48 N. E. 788, 149 Ind. 136.

[c] (Sup. 1904)

A manufacturer in September, 1898, contracted with brokers that the latter should take orders for hardware at specified prices on commission to be paid by the manufacturer; the hardware to be shipped direct to the buyer. In April, 1899, the brokers took an order from plaintiff for a bill of goods at the prices fixed in the contract between the manufacturer and broker, which order was accepted by the manufacturer. Held, that the contract of sale thus made through the broker did not violate a statute prohibiting contracts for options to sell or buy commodities at a future time, etc.—Tuthill Spring Co. v. Holliday, 72 N. E. 872, 164 Ind. 13.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 931.

§ 14. — Agreements for payment of differences.[a] (Sup. 1884)

Contracts of sale that do not contemplate the actual bona fide delivery of the property by the seller, nor the payment by the buyer, but are intended to be settled by paying the difference in price at some future time, are gambling contracts.—Whitesides v. Hunt, 97 Ind. 191, 49 Am. Rep. 441.

[b] (Sup. 1889)

A contract for the sale of a commodity for future delivery is valid if the parties intend a future delivery; but invalid if none is contemplated, but only a payment of the difference between the contract and the market price.—Sondheim v. Gilbert, 18 N. E. 687, 117 Ind. 71, 5 L. R. A. 432, 10 Am. St. Rep. 23.

[c] (Sup. 1889)

Where a commodity is bought for future delivery, no matter what the contract is, the law regards the substance, and not the shadow, and, if the parties mutually understood and intended that the purchaser should pay for, and the seller should deliver, the commodity at the maturity of the contract, it is a legal and valid transaction, and the fact that the purchaser is required to deposit a margin, and increase the same at any time the market requires it, in order to secure the payment at maturity, or that the seller shall deposit a margin, and increase the same like the purchaser, in order to secure the delivery at maturity, does not vitiate the contract. But if, at the time of the contract, it is mutually understood and intended by all the parties, whether expressed or not, that the commodity said to be sold was not to be paid for, nor to be delivered, but the contract was to be settled and adjusted by the payment of difference in price, if the price should decline, the purchaser paying the difference. If it should rise, the seller paying the advance, the contract price being the basis upon which to calculate a difference. In such case it would be a gambling contract, and void.—Davis v. Davis, 21 N. E. 1112, 119 Ind. 511.

[d] (App. 1895)

It is a good defense to a note that it was given for the profits arising out of the purchase and sale of grain by the maker as plaintiff's broker, it being understood between them that none of the wheat should be delivered, but that the profits or losses should be determined by the fluctuating market prices, and that the maker should be at liberty, without consulting the payee, to deal with such persons as he might see fit.—Nave v. Wilson, 12 Ind. App. 38, 38 N. E. 876.

[e] (Sup. 1905)

Contracts for the purchase and sale of commodities not to be delivered, but only to be performed, by advancing and paying differences are void at common law.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. State ex rel. Hammond Elevator Co., 76 N. E. 100, 165 Ind. 402, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 153.

§ 17. Contracts in furtherance of gaming in general.

Constitutionality of law as to sufficiency of evidence that building was rented for gaming, see CRIMINAL LAW, § 732.

[a] (Sup. 1842)

Two persons made a bet of goods of the value of $100 on the result of a presidential election, and each executed his promissory note to a merchant for that sum; the payee, with notice of the facts, agreeing to furnish the goods to the winner. The loser was to pay his note, and the winner's was to be void. After the election, a suit on the note given by the loser was brought by an assignee. Held that, though the goods had been delivered to the winner by the payee of the note, the suit could not be sustained; the consideration of the note being illegal.—Duncan v. Cox, 6 Blackf. 270.

[b] (Sup. 1858)

The sale of a race horse, racing being illegal, is a good consideration for a note for the price, although the payee knows the maker buys the horse to run him for a wager in a race.—Cummings v. Henry, 10 Ind. 109.

[c] (Sup. 1860)

A. and B. owed C. for goods sold to both, for which he held their notes. Without C.'s knowledge, they bet on an election as to who should pay the debt. Held, that C.'s right of action was not thereby affected.—Maulsby v. Wolf, 14 Ind. 457.

[d] (Sup. 1865)

A contract for the sale of a billiard table is not so illegal as to deprive the seller of his right to recover the purchase price, though the buyer informed him that he was buying it for the purpose of setting it up in his saloon for his customers to play on for the liquor.—Bickel v. Sheets, 24 Ind. 1.

§ 18. Loans for gambling purposes.

[a] (Sup. 1890)

Mere knowledge, on the part of a person loaning money, that the borrower intends to use it by engaging in the purchase of options on grains in the market of another state, or investing it in wagering or gambling contracts, will not defeat a recovery.—Jackson v. City Nat. Bank of Goshen, 125 Ind. 347, 25 N. E. 430, 9 L. R. A. 657.

[b] (Sup. 1891)

It is a good defense on a note that the note sued on was given for money borrowed to be used by the parties jointly in gambling contracts, and in paying losses sustained on account of such contracts.—Plank v. Jackson, 128 Ind. 424, 26 N. E. 568, 27 N. E. 1117.

Rev. St. 1881, § 4950, which makes void notes given "for repaying money lent at the time of such wager for the purpose of being wagered," does not apply to a note given for money borrowed and used for the purpose of future gambling in wheat, where the lender had no interest in the gambling transactions, though he knew that the borrower intended to engage in them.—Id.

[a] (Sup. 1889)

The statutes of New York do not render void merchantable notes executed in consideration of money which was to be used in gambling speculations on the stock market, and the statutes of Indiana indicate such a coincidence in the policy of both states as that the courts will not hesitate to enforce the liability of a maker of a note, executed in order to obtain money with which to purchase options and in the hands of an innocent holder.—Sondheim v. Gilbert, 18 N. E. 687, 117 Ind. 71, 5 L. R. A. 432, 10 Am. St. Rep. 23.

[b] (App. 1901)

Under Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 2181, prohibiting the keeping of any gambling apparatus for the purpose of gaming, the answer in a suit on notes, setting up that the consideration therefor was a slot machine, which could be used for no other purpose but gambling, was not demurrable.—Barnhart v. Goldstein, 59 N. E. 1067, 27 Ind. App. 101.

§ 21. Loans to pay losses.

[a] (Sup. 1891)

Mere knowledge on the part of a lender that the borrower intends to use the money to pay a debt which the borrower is under no legal obligation to pay by reason of its growing out of a gambling or unlawful contract does not render a note given for such money so loaned void.—Plank v. Jackson, 26 N. E. 568, 27 N. E. 1117, 128 Ind. 424.

[a] (Sup. 1889)

The contingency of a bet based on the result of an election is determined when the popular vote is cast, though perfect evidence of the result, as shown by the official count, cannot be had until later.—Hizer v. State, 12 Ind. 330.

[b] (App. 1895)

Where the judges in charge of the races at a county fair, acting in good faith, postpone a horse race until the next day, and the riders, under the belief that the starting signal was given, or in obedience to the clamor of the bystanders, run the race, the winner, if at the time aware of the postponement, cannot recover the premium.—*Malke v. [b] (Sup. 1858)

Courts will not aid the winner of a wager to recover the thing won.—Frybarger v. Simpson, 11 Ind. 59.

[c] (Sup. 1859)

An election wager being illegal, the winner cannot maintain an action for it against the stakeholder.—Worthington v. Black, 13 Ind. 344.

§ 26. — Recovery of payments.

Right of wife of loser to attack conveyance by winner, see FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES, § 213.

[a] (Sup. 1836)

If goods be won on a wager respecting the result of a presidential election, and be delivered to the winner, the loser cannot, either at common law or under the statute, sustain an action against the winner for the price of the goods.—McHatton v. Bates, 4 Blackf. 63.

[b] (Sup. 1852)

Under Rev. St. 1843, c. 34, an action of debt lies to recover money lost by betting on a horse race.—Little v. Brannenburgh, 4 Ind. 85.

[c] A gubernatorial election is not a "game," within 1 Rev. St. p. 305, § 2, allowing a loser, who has paid, to recover back.—(Sup. 1858) Woodcock v. McQueen, 11 Ind. 14; (1859) Same v. Palmer, 12 Ind. 482.

Where a bet or wager is laid and lost on the result of an election or on any other act, event, or fact, except a game, it cannot be recovered under 1 Rev. St. p. 305, § 2, allowing a loser who has paid to recover back the money paid.—Id.

[d] (Sup. 1853)

Courts will not entertain an action by the loser of a wager which he voluntarily paid to compel repayment.—Frybarger v. Simpson, 11 Ind. 59.

[e] (Sup. 1859)

If the loser of a wager gives notice to the stakeholder not to pay over the money, but does not, before the payment of such money by the stakeholder to the winner of such money, give notice to the winner, the loser cannot recover from the winner.—Morris v. Philpot, 11 Ind. 447.

[f] (Sup. 1867)

One who has lost money on a bet may recover it from the other party to the bet, to whom it has been paid over, notwithstanding a third person was interested with the winner in the bet. The liability is perfected by receiving the money won on the bet.—Wilson v. Gardner, 28 Ind. 188.

[g] (Sup. 1879)

Plaintiff agreed to sell to defendant a wagon valued at $120 for $5, and the further sum of $235 in the event of Tilden's election. The wagon was delivered to defendant, and, with the acquiescence of plaintiff, defendant entered into an arrangement with a third person to loan defendant $240 in case he should need it, $5 of which was to be paid to plaintiff in any event and $235 in the event of Tilden's election. Held that, though the transaction was a wagering contract, it became an executed one on the delivery of the wagon and the making of the arrangement for the payment of the money, and plaintiff was not entitled to recover the wagon or its value on the happening of the event favorably to defendant.—Davis v. Leonard, 69 Ind. 213.

[h] (Sup. 1883)

Money paid on a contract by which a benefit association agrees to pay a certain sum to the beneficiary, in case he do not marry for two years, cannot be recovered back, the contract being void as a wager on the probability of marriage.—Chaifant v. Payton, 91 Ind. 202, 46 Am. Rep. 586.

[i] (Sup. 1884)

At common law money lost by betting could not be recovered, but might be stopped in the hands of the stakeholder.—Schlosser v. Smith, 93 Ind. 83.

Money lost on an election bet cannot be recovered at common law, nor under Rev. St. 1881, § 4951, authorizing a recovery in case of betting "on any game."—Id.

[j] (App. 1891)

In an action to recover money lost at gambling, the fact that a part of the building in which the gambling occurred was occupied as a saloon by defendant, that he sometimes personally received the "take out,"—a certain percentage of the money put up in gambling,—and that such "take out" was sometimes placed with other moneys in the saloon, was sufficient to sustain a verdict against him.—Thomas v. Griffin, 1 Ind. App. 457, 27 N. E. 754.

[k] (App. 1895)

If A. and B. enter into a wagering contract, and B. pays the wager to C., who was not connected with the original illegal transaction to deliver to A., he can recover the money in an action against C., or where in an honest effort to comply with the law, there has been an unintentional omission which renders the transaction illegal, and there is no moral turpitude, as the result of which money belonging to the principal comes into the hands of the agent, the principal can recover it, because to require the agent to account for the money would not sanction the original illegal transaction, but where A. authorizes and directs C. to enter into wagering contracts for his benefit, with authority to collect and account to him for the winnings, and C. enters into such wagering contract in his own name with B. and the wager is paid by B. to C., A. cannot recover the money in an action against C., because all the parties are in pari delicto throughout the entire illegal transaction from its inception to its conclusion, and to hold that A. could recover would encourage vicious and demoralizing practices.—Nave v. Wilson, 38 N. E. 876, 12 Ind. App. 38.

[1] (Sup. 1897)

Title to money lost at gaming never vests in the winner, though the loser fails to seek its recovery; so that Rev. St. 1894, § 6678, authorizing recovery thereof in the name of the state for the benefit of the loser's wife or minor children in case he does not sue therefor within the time allowed him by section 6676, does not violate Const. art. 1, § 21, providing that "no man's property shall be taken without just compensation."—*Ervin v. A party to a bet can recover his stake from a stakeholder, if he give notice in season not to pay over to the winner.—Alexander v. Mount, 10 Ind. 161.

[b] (Sup. 1858)

The loser may recover from the stakeholder the amount he has deposited, whether the wager has been decided or not, provided he demand the return of the stake before it has been actually paid over, after the event, to the winner.—Frybarger v. Simpson, 11 Ind. 59.

[c] (Sup. 1859)

Where the pleadings show that money passed into the hands of the defendant as stakeholder in a wager on the result of an election, an action for the money may be maintained against him by the party who disaffirms the illegal contract, and notifies him thereof before the money is paid to the other contracting party.—Burroughs v. Hunt, 13 Ind. 178.

[d] (App. 1898)

A person can recover his money or property staked on a wager while still in the hands of the stakeholder, and before the determination of the event on which the wager is laid, provided he has notified the stakeholder and demanded its return.—Taylor v. Moore, 50 N. E. 770, 20 Ind. App. 654.

When a person loans money, and as a part of the arrangement it is to be used in speculative contracts, and he is interested in the contracts or assists in bringing the parties together, and aids in consummating the contracts by conspiring with and urging and aiding the person to whom he loans the money to make such investments and loans him the money to be so invested, he becomes particeps criminis, and the law will not aid him to collect the money which he parted with under such circumstances.—Plank v. Jackson, 26 N. E. 568, 27 N. E. 1117, 128 Ind. 424.

[b] (App. 1903)

Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 6676, providing for a recovery, by action, of money or property lost by betting on any game, or by betting on the hands or sides of such as play at any game, does not authorize a recovery of money lost in bucket-shop transactions.—*Lancaster v. Where the plaintiffs, as commission merchants, made a contract with defendant for the purchase of certain grain, which was not to be delivered, and advanced certain amounts on his account, if the transaction was legal, they would have a right to recover back the money which they paid for defendant, but, if the transaction was a gambling contract and illegal, they were not entitled to recover, for in such case they were in pari delicto, and will not be aided by the courts in profiting by their own wrong.—Whitesides v. Hunt, 97 Ind. 191, 49 Am. Rep. 441.

§ 42. — Grounds of action.

[a] (Sup. 1853)

Where a party to a bet has notified the stakeholder not to pay over to the winner the amount deposited in his hands, he need not make a demand before suing the stakeholder, where the latter, notwithstanding the notice, paid over the money before the suit.—Alexander v. Mount, 10 Ind. 161.

[b] (Sup. 1858)

Where a wager was made upon the result of an election, a request by the loser to the stakeholder to delay the payment of the money to the winner until the loser could see the winner to arrange a particular mode of payment is not such notice not to pay over the money as will entitle the loser to recover the sum paid from the stakeholder.—Frybarger v. Simpson, 11 Ind. 59.

[c] (Sup. 1890)

A bond given by the party furnishing certain oats to secure his part of the agreement, which stipulated that it was mutually understood that the transaction was not based upon the real value of the grain, and showed upon its face that the transaction was of a wagering character, although it formed the chief consideration for a note, was of no value as a contract, and the payees were not bound to return it as a condition precedent to their right to defend against the note.—Schmueckle v. Waters, 125 Ind. 265, 25 N. E. 281.

§ 45. — Time to sue and limitations.

[a] (Sup. 1859)

1 Rev. St. p. 305, § 2, has reference to the rights and remedies of parties to certain illegal contracts as between themselves, and not to the right of action, nor the time within which it must be brought, against a stakeholder.—Burroughs v. Hunt, 13 Ind. 178.

[b] (Sup. 1897)

Rev. St. 1894, § 6676, providing that a person losing money at gaming, and paying it, may within six months thereafter recover it by action; and section 6678 providing that, if the loser shall not within such time sue and with effect prosecute for the money, it shall be the duty of the prosecuting attorney, on information filed, "by such action as aforesaid," to sue for the same in the name of the state,—do not permit the action by the state within the six months allowed the loser for suit.—*Ervin v. § 46. — Parties.

[a] (Sup. 1897)

Action by the state for the benefit of the wife whose money is lost at gaming by her husband, holding it in trust for her, is not authorized by Rev. St. 1894, § 6678, providing for action by the state for the benefit of the wife of one who loses money at gaming, and does not sue to recover it, as authorized by section 6676; as, if the money was lost without her knowledge, she would have a common-law right of action against the winner as a trustee de son tort, and if it was lost with her knowledge and consent, the action would be in her own name, under section 6676.—Ervin v. State ex rel. Walley, 48 N. E. 249, 150 Ind. 332.

Action for the benefit of the wife of the loser at gaming is prosecuted in the name of the state as sole plaintiff, as required by Rev. St. 1894, § 6678, though the wife is named as relator.—Id.

Rev. St. 1894, § 6678, authorizing recovery in the name of the state of money lost at gaming, is not inconsistent with sections 251, 252, requiring every action to be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, except that a person expressly authorized by statute may sue without joining the person for whose benefit the action is prosecuted; the state being a person, under section 1309, declaring that "the word 'person' extends to bodies politic and corporate."—Id.

[b] (App. 1905)

Burns' Ann. St. 1894, § 6678, makes the state the proper party to sue for money lost at gambling after the loser thereof has failed for six months to sue therefor, and provides that, if the loser of money sued for by the state has a wife, she is the sole beneficiary of a judgment for such money. Sections 251, 252, require every action to be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, except that executors, trustees of an express trust, or parties expressly authorized by statute may sue without joining the party for whose benefit the action was prosecuted. Section 273 authorizes the court to bring in additional parties when a complete determination of the controversy cannot be had without their presence, and further provides for the addition of parties by amendment on their application. Held, that where the state, as sole plaintiff, recovered money lost in gambling, it was not error for the court to substitute the wife of the loser as plaintiff over defendant's objection, and without the consent of the official representative of the state, in order to permit her to enforce the judgment by setting aside a fraudulent conveyance made by the winner in order to defeat such judgment.—Tyler v. Davis, 75 N. E. 3, 37 Ind. App. 557.

§ 48. — Pleading.

[a] (Sup. 1882)

Where, in a suit on a note for money loaned to be wagered, the maker relies on the illegality of the consideration, he must aver in his answer that the money was "lent at the time of such wager."—Ensley v. Patterson, 19 Ind. 95.

[b] (Sup. 1888)

Where the maker of a note pleads an illegal consideration in bar, he must state fully all the facts rendering it illegal; and a plea that the only consideration was "the payment of margins on wheat that had never been delivered to defendant by plaintiff, or by any one for him," is insufficient.—Fisher v. Fisher, 113 Ind. 474, 15 N. E. 832.

[c] (Sup. 1889)

Where the answer in a suit upon a note sets up that the note was given for money due on a gambling transaction in options, that in such transaction there is a balance from plaintiff to defendant greater than the amount of such note, that the note was given without consideration, and that it has been paid, a reply which alleges that the note was given for money lent, separate and apart from any other transaction, and that defendant's share of the profit arising from the option transaction had been fully paid to him, leaving said note unpaid, is good.—Davis v. Davis, 119 Ind. 511, 21 N. E. 1112.

Where such a defense is pleaded, a reply alleging the settlement of all matters of business between the parties except the note in suit is insufficient.—Id.

[d] (App. 1892)

In an action on a note, the answer alleged that the consideration of the original note, of which the one in suit was a renewal, was oats estimated by the payee at $10 per bushel, but as known by him only worth 20 cents per bushel, and the payee's further agreement to buy at $10 per bushel oats raised from those sold defendant. Held, that the fact that the oats were admitted to be of some value did not render the allegations of the answer any the less a complete defense on the ground of the transaction being a gaming contract.—Kain v. Bare, 4 Ind. App. 440, 31 N. E. 205.

[e] (App. 1892)

An answer, in an action on a note for $200, alleging that the only consideration for the note was the delivery of 20 bushels of Bohemian oats, of the value of $5, and a bond providing that the party furnishing the oats would sell for the other, at a future time specified, 40 bushels, at $10 per bushel, and providing also that the contract was not based upon the value of the oats, but was purely speculative, sufficiently shows the illegality of the consideration.—Glass v. Murphy, 4 Ind. App. 530, 30 N. E. 1097, 31 N. E. 545.

[f] (Sup. 1897)

Complaint by the state to recover, for the loser's wife, money lost at gaming, sufficiently states that the money was paid defendants, by alleging that defendants are indebted to plaintiff for the use and benefit of N. in the sum of $6,000 lost by W. to defendants at gaming, and had and received by defendants for the use and benefit of W., the husband of N.; it being provided by Rev. St. 1894, § 6677, that "in such action it shall be sufficient for the plaintiff to allege that defendant has received, for the plaintiff's use, the money so lost and paid."—*Ervin v. State ex rel. Since under Burns' Ann. St. 1894, § 6678, making the state a proper party to sue for money lost at gambling, and providing that the wife of the loser is the beneficiary of any judgment recovered, the wife is not a proper party to the suit, the judgment in such suit should not state that the recovery is for the use and benefit of the wife.—*Tyler v. [a] (Sup. 1878)

Neither 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 442, § 38, making the keeping of any gaming apparatus, and professional gambling, felonies punishable by fine and disfranchisement; nor Id. p. 469, § 29, making the keeping of a gaming house a misdemeanor punishable by fine; nor Id. p. 480, § 74, prescribing a punishment for the keeping of any gaming apparatus,—authorizes the seizure, detention, or destruction of gaming instruments.—Ridgeway v. West, 60 Ind. 371.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gaming, § 109.

§ 56. Persons liable for penalties.

[a] (Sup. 1887)

Under Rev. St. 1881, providing that money lost by betting on a game can be recovered by the loser by suit brought within six months, and section 4953, that, if the loser fail to sue, the prosecuting attorney shall do so on information, for the benefit of the wife or minor children, a gambling-house keeper is liable in a suit for the benefit of a wife, though the game in which the loss occurred was dealt by his servant in his absence.—Condon v. State, 113 Ind. 73, 14 N. E. 705.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gaming, § 113.

§ 58. Property subject to forfeiture.

[a] (Sup. 1908)

Public Offense Laws (Acts 1905, p. 718, c. 169) § 565, punishing whoever keeps or exhibits for gain, or to win money, any gambling device, condemns the use of the devices as a means of accomplishing unlawful acts, and not the devices themselves, and such devices may be owned and enjoyed as property within the limitations imposed by the statute.—State v. Derry, 171 Ind. 18, 85 N. E. 765, 131 Am. St. Rep. 237.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gaming, § 115.

§ 60. Searches and seizures.

[a] (Sup. 1878)

An ordinance authorizing the arrest, etc., of a person keeping a gaming house, does not, without a specific provision therefor, authorize the seizure and destruction of gaming implements.—Ridgeway v. West, 60 Ind. 371.

The act defining felonies (2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 442, § 38) makes the keeping of any gaming apparatus and professional gambling a felony punishable by fine and disfranchisement. Section 29 (page 469) declares the keeping of a gaming house to be a misdemeanor punishable by fine of not less than $5 and not more than $500. Section 74 (page 480) declares the keeper or exhibitor of any gaming table or other gaming apparatus guilty of misdemeanor punishable by fine, to which imprisonment may be added. Each section is silent as to the seizure or destruction of the property so kept or exhibited for the purpose of gaming. The act for the incorporation of cities (1 Rev. St. 1876, p. 288, § 53, cl. 9) provides that the common council shall have power to enforce ordinances to suppress gaming and gaming houses, and to prohibit and destroy instruments and devices. Held that, in the absence of a city ordinance authorizing the seizure and detention of the property, the statute did not authorize either the seizure or detention of gambling property by police officers of the city, and the owner was entitled to replevin the same in the hands of the officers who had possession thereof.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1890)

Unless articles seized are of such a character that the law will not recognize them as property, entitled as such to protection under any circumstances, they cannot be summarily destroyed without affording the owner an opportunity to be heard on the subject of their unlawful use, and to show whether the articles are intrinsically useful or valuable for any other purpose than gambling, or whether their only recognized value and customary use is as implements for gaming.—State v. Robbins, 24 N. E. 978, 124 Ind. 308, 8 L. R. A. 438.

[c] (Sup. 1908)

A search warrant being unavailable to individuals in civil proceedings, or for the maintenance of a private right, but only in aid of public prosecutions, a statute authorizing the issuance of search warrants is sustainable under the federal Constitution, forbidding unreasonable search and seizure, only as a necessary means in the suppression of crime and the detection and punishment of criminals, and must be cautiously framed and strictly construed.—State v. Derry, 171 Ind. 18, 85 N. E. 765, 131 Am. St. Rep. 237.

Under Public Offense Law (Acts 1905, p. 596, c. 169) §§ 56, 57, authorizing the issuance of search warrants to search for devices "kept for the purpose of unlawful gaming," and declaring that no warrant shall be issued without an affidavit describing the house and the things to be searched for, etc., gaming devices can be seized legally under a search warrant only on the ground that the same were kept for unlawful gaming; and before a justice has authority to issue a search warrant he must be not only informed that the articles were kept for unlawful gaming, but advised under oath of the nature of the offense that had been committed by their use.—Id.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 919, 920.

§ 61. Enforcement and effect of forfeitures.

Denial of due process of law, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, § 278.

[a] (Sup. 1890)

Where a sheriff, at the time of arresting a defendant for unlawfully keeping and exhibiting gaming implements, seizes the implements, they become subject to the order of the court trying the defendant, though not seized by virtue of a search warrant.—State v. Robbins, 124 Ind. 308, 24 N. E. 978, 8 L. R. A. 438.

Rev. St. 1881, § 1623, provides that gaming implements seized shall be held subject to the order of the court, and on conviction of the owner shall be destroyed, or returned to the owner on the order of the court. Held that, after the court has pronounced final judgment against the defendant, it loses further jurisdiction over the implements seized. Any order regarding them must be made at or before the judgment.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1908)

Under Acts 1907, p. 661, c. 200, amendatory of Public Offense Law (Acts 1905, p. 597, c. 169) § 60, directing the sheriff, receiving gambling devices seized under a search warrant, to destroy the same on order by the court, and providing that such order shall be made only after 10 days' notice to the person in whose possession they were found and an opportunity to him for a hearing, and that, where the property shall be delivered by the justice to the sheriff, the justice shall, without waiting for the trial of accused on the charge of keeping a gambling place, order the sheriff to destroy the property, a proceeding in the nature of a libel against the property seized may be maintained by the state, and the legal status of the articles finally determined, separate from the prosecution of accused for keeping the articles for unlawful gaming.—State v. Derry, 171 Ind. 18, 85 N. E. 765, 131 Am. St. Rep. 237.

In a proceeding under Acts 1907, p. 661, c. 290, amendatory of Public Offense Law (Acts 1905, p. 597, c. 169) § 60, to determine the legal status of gambling devices seized under a search warrant, the court must decide whether the articles seized were kept for illegal purposes, and on finding in the affirmative it must order the same destroyed, and otherwise must order their restoration.—Id.

III. CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY.

(A) OFFENSES.

Betting on election as violation of election laws, see ELECTIONS, § 315.

§ 62. Nature of offense of gaming.

[a] (Sup. 1856)

Under 2 Rev. St. § 28, providing that any one who shall, by betting at or upon any game, either lose or win any article of value, shall be fined, it is sufficient that a game was played and defendant has won something of value, since it is not the purpose of the law to punish only that form of betting in which there is a gain or loss between the parties, such as would excite a spirit of cupidity.—Mount v. State, 7 Ind. 654.

[b] (Sup. 1876)

Since the repeal of the act of 1852 (2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 442, § 38) by the act of March 15, 1875 (2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 480), amending section 74 of the act of 1852, the keeping of a gaming apparatus, commonly called a "trick knife," for the purpose of wagering, winning, and gaining money and articles of value thereon, is a misdemeanor, and not a felony.—Hayes v. State, 55 Ind. 99.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gaming, § 119.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 877, 878; note, 33 Am. Dec. 134.

§ 63. Constitutional and statutory provisions.

[a] (Sup. 1875)

2 Gav. & H. Rev. St. p. 450, § 38, relating to felonies so far as the keeping of a gaming apparatus called a "wheel of fortune" is concerned, was not repealed by 2 Gav. & H. Rev. St. § 74, relating to misdemeanors.—State v. Thomas, 50 Ind. 202.

[b] (Sup. 1876)

Section 38 of the act of 1852, defining felonies (2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 442), so far as it relates to the keeping of gaming apparatus, is repealed by implication by the act of March 15, 1875 (2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 480), amending the seventy-fourth section of the act of 1852, defining misdemeanors.—Hayes v. State, 55 Ind. 99.

[c] (Sup. 1890)

Rev. St. 1881, § 1815, declaring that it shall be sufficient evidence that any building or other place was rented for the purpose of gambling if the gaming was actually carried on, and the owner or lessor knew, or had good reason to believe, that the lessee suffered gaming therein, and took no sufficient means to prevent or restrain the same, is not void as being within the rule that statutes which undertake to make proof of certain facts absolute or conclusive of guilt are unconstitutional, but is valid under the rule that statutes which merely declare presumptions affecting the burden of proof are constitutional.—Voght v. State, 24 N. E. 680, 124 Ind. 358.

[d] (App. 1897)

Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 2179 (Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 2084), provides that "any person who shall keep any room or building. * * * or occupy any place or public or private grounds anywhere within the state with apparatus, books or other devices for the purpose of recording or registering bets or wagers or of selling pools; and any person who shall record or register bets or wagers or sell pools upon the result of any trial or contest of skill, speed, or power of endurance of man or beast"—shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, etc. Held, that section describes two distinct offenses, and the word "and" therein, after the word "pools," where the latter first occurs, may be read "or."—Douglass v. State, 48 N. E. 9, 18 Ind. App. 289.

[a] (Sup. 1819)

A conviction on an indictment for keeping a gaming house is not sustained by proof that gaming was carried on by third persons on the premises of the defendant without his knowledge.—Padgett v. State, 69 Ind. 46.

[b] (App. 1891)

On a prosecution under Rev. St. 1881, § 2079, for keeping a gaming house and for renting a house to be used for gaming, an instruction that the jury should convict if they find that defendant "did unlawfully keep the room mentioned in said information for gaming, or rent said room to others to be used and occupied for gaming," is correct, and the court need not charge that defendant should have "knowingly" permitted the building to be used for gaming.—Fisher v. State, 2 Ind. App. 365, 28 N. E. 565.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gaming, § 124.

§ 66. — Game, event, or hazard.

[a] (Sup. 1857)

Horse racing is a game, and betting on such is within the meaning of 1 Rev. St. p. 305, § 2.—Wade v. Deming, 9 Ind. 35.

[b] (Sup. 1859)

An election bet is within 2 Rev. St. p. 435, § 28, providing that every person who shall, by playing or betting at or upon any game or wager, either lose or win any article of value, shall be fined not exceeding $50.—Hizer v. State, 12 Ind. 330.

[c] (Sup. 1862)

An information, charging that the defendant did "unlawfully lose the sum of five dollars by then and there unlawfully betting with one S. C., upon an affidavit made by P. N. against J. C., for an assault and battery with intent to kill, contrary to the statute" (Acts 1857, p. 97), etc., fails to charge a crime, and is bad, since the statute makes unlawful only bets on games, on elections, and on other bets.—Smoot v. State, 18 Ind. 18.

[d] Betting on the result of an election is gaming.—(Sup. 1877) Frazer v. State, 58 Ind. 8; overruling State v. Henderson (1874) 47 Ind. 127.

[a] (Sup. 1856)

2 Rev. St. p. 435, § 28, provides that "every person who shall, by playing or betting at or upon any game or wager whatever, either lose or win any article of value, shall be fined," etc. Held, that where defendant and a companion hired the use of a tenpin alley, and played a game of tenpins, and by previous agreement the one failing to knock the largest number of pins paid the keeper of the alley, the liability of the other being his share of the hire of the alley, there was an article of value lost and won within the statute.—Mount v. State, 7 Ind. 654.

[b] (Sup. 1878)

1 Rev. St. 1876, p. 207, § 53, specifications 9, 14, authorizing cities incorporated under the act to suppress gaming and gaming houses, use the words in the sense in which they are employed in the Criminal Code of the state, as meaning a game on the result of which something of value is staked and must be lost and won; and hence an ordinance of a city incorporated under such act, prohibiting the owner or attendant of a place where intoxicating liquor is sold from allowing a minor "to participate in any game of any kind whatever" in such a place, must be construed, under section 53, as referring to "any game" on the result of which a wager depends.—Williams v. City of Warsaw, 60 Ind. 457.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

[b] (Sup. 1895)

Under Act March 5, 1895, § 2, the holding in the same place of a race meeting, whether by the same or different persons or corporations, oftener than twice in any period of 60 days, is prohibited, and a period of 30 days must elapse between any two of such meetings.—State ex rel. Duensing v. Roby, 142 Ind. 168, 41 N. E. 145, 33 L. R. A. 213, 51 Am. St. Rep. 174; Roby v. State ex rel. Matthews, 142 Ind. 700, 42 N. E. 350.

[c] (Sup. 1896)

After Act March 5, 1895, to forbid a race meeting for a longer period than 15 days at one time, and less than 30 days subsequent to the last race meeting at the same place, regardless of the person, company, or association holding either of such meetings, two other race tracks were constructed near one already equipped, one being separated by a highway only, and the other being less than a half mile distant. Evidence showed that horse racing was profitable only where horses could be kept together for a long period, and that the arrangement between the proprietors of the three tracks was that R. should open and run for 15 days, then F. for the next 15 days, and S. for the next 15 days, thus leaving a period of 30 days since R. closed, and that one track only should be open during any given 15 days; that the same judges acted at all the tracks, the same horses were entered, and the meeting was simply transferred from one track to another at the end of each period of 15 days; and that the horses remained located in the various barns in which they were quartered without regard to the particular track on which they might be racing. Held, that there was but one and the same "race meeting," within the statute.—State ex rel. Matthews v. Forsythe, 147 Ind. 466, 44 N. E. 593, 33 L. R. A. 221.

"did then and there unlawfully frequent, for the purpose of gaming with cards, a certain place in said county, where gambling was then permitted, to wit, a certain room then and there occupied by B.," etc. Held, that the affidavit was sufficient, and that it was not necessary to aver or prove that A. actually engaged in gaming.—*Howard v. naming all the persons with whom the bet was made, or stating that the names not given were unknown.—State v. Irvin, 5 Blackf. 343.

(d) (Sup. 1842)

An indictment alleging that defendant did unlawfully win of, and take from, one N. G. two notes, etc., by betting on the result of an election, shows sufficiently that the bet was made with N. G.—State v. Little, 6 Blackf. 267.

An indictment for winning, etc., by betting on the result of an election, is not objectionable because it alleges the making of the bet on a day subsequent to the day of the election.—Id.

(e) (Sup. 1844)

An indictment against a person for suffering gaming in his grocery should give the names of the persons who played, or state their names to be unknown.—Ball v. State, 7 Blackf. 242.

(f) (Sup. 1848)

An indictment founded on Rev. St. c. 53, § 103, and charging that defendant acted as "rider in a certain horse race which was then and there run along a public highway, in said county, between animals of the horse kind in a trial of speed," is not sufficiently certain and definite as to the sex of the horse; the statute reading "horse, mare, or gelding."—Myers v. State, 1 Ind. 251.

(g) (Sup. 1850)

An indictment for keeping a gaming house need not state the names of the persons who played in the house.—Dormer v. State, 2 Ind. 308.

(h) (Sup. 1852)

An indictment for gaming presented two counts,—the first for money won, and the second for money lost, on a bet made at a game of cards played by the defendant and others; but it did not show whether the bet was made with the persons played with, or with some third person. Held, that the indictment was bad for uncertainty.—State v. Stallings, 3 Ind. 531.

(i) (Sup. 1860)

An information for keeping a gaming house need not allege the name of the gambler.—Carpenter v. State, 14 Ind. 109.

(j) (Sup. 1874)

An indictment under Act March 8, 1873, § 1 (Acts 1873, p. 30), which does not allege that a game was played, and state the name of the person with whom the minor played the game, or allege that such name is unknown, is bad.—Alexander v. State, 48 Ind. 394.

(k) (Sup. 1878)

Under Acts 1877 (Sp. Sess. p. 80) § 3, declaring any person who frequents any place where gambling is permitted a professional gambler and punishable as such, an affidavit charging defendant with being a common gambler need not allege the kind of gambling which was permitted, or that defendant frequented the room for the purpose of gaming with cards, or what kind of game was permitted therein.—Howard v. State, 64 Ind. 516.

(l) (Sup. 1885)

An indictment under the statute charging that defendant, on a certain date, "did then and there unlawfully play for money, to wit, the sum of ten cents, at and upon a certain game of pool played by him with J. and H. upon a billiard and pool table, and did then and there, and thereby, unlawfully win of and from said H. the sum of ten cents," etc., is sufficient.—Middaugh v. State, 103 Ind. 78, 2 N. E. 292.

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gaming, §§ 220-223, 228, 261, 266.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 898-902.

§ 86. — Intent.

(a) (Sup. 1883)

An indictment for gaming, charging that defendant kept a roulette wheel "for the purpose of wagering, winning and gaining thereon money," etc., sufficiently showed that the wheel was kept and exhibited to win money.—Keith v. State, 90 Ind. 89.

(b) (App. 1895)

Rev. St. 1894, § 2173 (Rev. St. 1881, § 2079), prescribes the same penalty against one who keeps a building to be used or occupied for gaming, or "knowingly" permits the same to be used or occupied for gaming, or, being the owner, rents it for such purpose, the word "knowingly" being inserted in the revision of 1881. Held, that an indictment which failed to allege that defendant "knowingly" permitted a house to be used for gaming was insufficient.—Emperly v. State, 13 Ind. App. 393, 41 N. E. 840.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 900.

§ 87. — Description of game, device, or implements.

Issues, proof and variance, see post, § 94.

(a) An indictment for gaming need not state the name of the game played; but there should be in it some description of the game, as that it was with cards, dice, etc.—(Sup. 1833) State v. Dole, 3 Blackf. 204; (1833) Same v. Bougher, Id. 307; (1839) Same v. Maxwell, 5 Blackf. 230; (1844) Same v. Ross, 7 Blackf. 322; (1847) Webster v. State, 8 Blackf. 400.

(b) (Sup. 1882)

An indictment charging defendants with having unlawfully exhibited to persons named "for gain and to win money a certain gambling device," the name of which was to the grand jurors unknown, sufficiently states an excuse for not giving in the indictment the name of the device.—Pemberton v. State, 85 Ind. 507.

(c) (App. 1904)

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2180, defining a common gambler as one who, "for the purpose of gaming with cards or otherwise," does certain acts, an indictment for being a common gambler should charge the kind of gaming indulged in.—Bickel v. State, 70 N. E. 548, 32 Ind. App. 656.

[a] (Sup. 1859)

In an information for gaming, the amount lost or won should be set forth with certainty in order that the amount of the fine may be determined in accordance with the statute; this fact determining the question of jurisdiction.—Long v. State, 18 Ind. 566.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gaming, §§ 241-243.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 904.

§ 89. — Description of place or house.

[a] An indictment, founded on Rev. St. 1843, p. 982, § 103, for permitting a horse to be run in a horse race on a public highway, need not state the termini of the highway.—(Sup. 1849) State v. Burgett, 1 Ind. 479, Smith, 340; (1849) Same v. Brown, 1 Ind. 532; (1851) Same v. Armstrong, 3 Ind. 139.

[b] (Sup. 1908)

An affidavit for visiting a gambling house, in violation of Public Offense Statute 1905 (Laws 1905, p. 693, c. 169) § 470, being Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 2371, is sufficient, where charging the offense in the language of the statute, and need not particularly designate the gambling house visited.—State v. Bridgewater, 171 Ind. 1, 85 N. E. 715; Same v. Henson, 171 Ind. 725, 85 N. E. 718; Same v. Larter, 171 Ind. 725, 85 N. E. 719; Same v. Brooks, 171 Ind. 725, 85 N. E. 975; Same v. Charles, Id.; Same v. Ritter, Id.; Same v. Turner, 171 Ind. 725, 85 N. E. 1027; Same v. Ballard, Id.; Same v. Romaine, 171 Ind. 725, 86 N. E. 73.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gaming, §§ 244-248.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 905.

§ 90. — Keeping or exhibiting table, device, or implements.

[a] (Sup. 1875)

An indictment does not charge the offense of being the keeper of a billiard table, within the meaning of the statute (2 Gav. & H. St. p. 477, § 74), which does not allege that the table was kept for the purpose of wagering any article of value thereon.—Carr v. State, 50 Ind. 173.

[b] (Sup. 1875)

In an indictment under 2 Gav. & H. St. p. 450, § 38, for being the keeper of a gaming apparatus, it is not necessary to allege that any game was played with or on the apparatus, nor that any names should be stated as the names of persons who played.—State v. Thomas, 50 Ind. 292; Same v. Beedles, Id. 294.

[c] (Sup. 1882)

An indictment for exhibiting a certain gambling device is sufficiently explicit.—Pemberton v. State, 85 Ind. 507.

[d] (Sup. 1883)

An indictment under Rev. St. 1881, § 2086, for keeping a device for gaming, is sufficient if it merely alleges the device to have been kept in the "county and state aforesaid," without further description of the place where kept.—App v. State, 90 Ind. 73; Keith v. Same, Id. 89.

[e] (Sup. 1883)

An indictment for gaming, charging that defendant did, at the county and state aforesaid, unlawfully keep and exhibit certain gaming tables, and there unlawfully kept the same for the purpose of wagering, winning, and making money, or articles of value, was sufficient.—App v. State, 90 Ind. 73.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gaming, §§ 249-253.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 906.

§ 91. — Keeping house or place.

Issues, proof and variance, see post, § 94.

Names of gamblers, see ante, § 85.

[a] (Sup. 1841)

An indictment under the statute of 1848, charging that the defendant kept a room "to be used and occupied for gambling," is sufficient, without alleging that gambling has actually taken place in the room.—State v. Miller, 5 Blackf. 502.

[b] (Sup. 1862)

An indictment for keeping a gaming house was held not to be bad for charging that the defendant kept "a" house, instead of "his" house, to be used for gaming; the latter term being employed by the statute defining the offense.—State v. Hubbard, 3 Ind. 530.

[c] (Sup. 1877)

An indictment for keeping a gaming house is sufficient, where it avers that defendant unlawfully kept a certain house, building, and room to be used for gaming, and unlawfully rented it to a person named, and suffered him "and divers other persons, to the grand jurors unknown," to play a certain game called "faro," for money and other articles of value.—Enwright v. State, 58 Ind. 567.

[d] (Sup. 1879)

An indictment charging that the defendant did on a certain day, "and on divers other days between said day and the day of making this presentment, * * * unlawfully keep a certain building, arbor, booth, shed, and tenement to be used for gaming," and unlawfully allowed certain persons named, "and divers other persons to the grand jurors unknown, to play at a certain game of cards called 'poker,' for money and other articles of value," was sufficient.—Padgett v. State, 68 Ind. 46.

[e] (Sup. 1881)

An indictment averring that defendant did "keep his said room and tenement to be used for gaming" held sufficient, under 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 460, § 29, as a charge of keeping a house for gambling. Averments of the kind of games played, and of the names of the persons playing, do not render the indictment bad.—State v. Pancake, 74 Ind. 15.

[f] (App. 1903)

Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 2173, provides that "whoever keeps a building or room * * * to be used or occupied for gaming, or knowingly permits the same to be used or occupied for gaming, or whoever, being the owner of any building or room, * * * rents the same to be used or occupied for gaming, shall be fined," etc. Held, that an indictment charging that defendant, being then and there the keeper of a building and room within the county and state, did then and there permit said building and room to be used and occupied for gaming by certain persons, and did permit them to play faro and other games of chance therein for money, sufficiently stated an offense described by the first clause of such section.—Christ v. State, 69 N. E. 269, 33 Ind. App. 438.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gaming, §§ 256-262.
See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 907.

§ 92. — Ownership and use of house or place.

Issues, proof and variance, see post, § 94.

[a] (Sup. 1853)

An indictment against D. S., containing two counts under the gaming act, alleged that the said D. S., on, etc., at and in the county aforesaid, did then and there knowingly keep and suffer his house, in which he kept his grocery, to be used and occupied for the purpose of gaming, at and with cards, for money and other valuable articles, contrary, etc. Held, that the indictment was sufficient.—State v. Staker, 3 Ind. 570.

[b] (Sup. 1859)

2 Rev. St. p. 436, § 20, provides that, if any person shall keep or suffer his building, etc., to be used for gambling, or if any person, being the owner of any building, etc., shall rent the same to be used for gaming, he shall be fined, etc. Held that, under the first part of said statute, one keeping a building for gaming may be fined, though gaming be not averred to have taken place. Under the latter part of the same section (for suffering a building to be used), suffering gaming therein must be averred, and the names of those gaming, or a valid reason for their omission, must be set out.—Sowle v. State, 11 Ind. 492.

[c] (Sup. 1887)

Under 2 Gav. & H. St. § 55, providing that "the indictment must be direct and certain as it regards the party and the offense charged," an indictment against a person for allowing his building to be used for gaming is bad on motion in arrest, unless it states the names of the persons suffered to game therein, or shows cause for not doing so, and that the offense was committed within the statute of limitations.—State v. Noland, 29 Ind. 212.

[d] (Sup. 1878)

Under Acts 1877 (Sp. Sess. p. 80), § 3, declaring any person who frequents any place where gambling is permitted a professional gambler and punishable as such, an affidavit charging one with being a professional gambler, and stating that the place where the gambling was permitted was occupied by a certain person, sufficiently alleges by implication that such person permitted gambling at the place mentioned.—Howard v. State, 64 Ind. 516.

[e] (Sup. 1879)

An indictment under Acts 1877, Sp. Sess. p. 81, § 3, for being a professional gambler, is defective, if it only alleges that defendant "did unlawfully frequent a house where gambling is permitted," etc., and does not charge the purpose of defendant in frequenting such house.—State v. Allen, 69 Ind. 124.

[f] (Sup. 1886)

In an indictment for permitting and renting a house to be used for gaming purposes, it is sufficient to charge that the building is in the county and the property of the defendants, without any particular description.—Kleespies v. State, 106 Ind. 383, 7 N. E. 186.

[g] In an information charging defendant with renting a house to be used and occupied for gaming, it is not necessary to allege the name of the person to whom the room was rented.—(Sup. 1886) Kleespies v. State, 106 Ind. 383, 7 N. E. 186; (1891) Fisher v. Same, 2 Ind. App. 365, 28 N. E. 565.

[h] (App. 1895)

Under Rev. St. 1894, § 2173, making it an offense for one to "knowingly" keep a building to be used or occupied for gaming, knowledge must be charged in the indictment.—Emperly v. State, 41 N. E. 840, 13 Ind. App. 393.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gaming, §§ 263-272.

§ 93. — Frequenting or visiting house or place.

Issues, proof and variance, see post, § 94.

[a] (Sup. 1878)

Under Acts 1877 (Sp. Sess. p. 80), § 3, declaring any person who frequents any place where gambling is permitted a professional gambler and punishable as such, an affidavit charging one with frequenting a place "where gambling was then permitted" sufficiently avers facts, and not mere conclusions or inferences.—Howard v. State, 64 Ind. 516.

[b] (Sup. 1908)

An affidavit charging that accused visited a gambling house in a certain county in violation of Public Offense Statute 1905 (Laws 1905, p. 693, c. 169), § 470 (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 2371), etc., is sufficient.—State v. Derry, 171 Ind. 725, 86 N. E. 482.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gaming, § 273.

§ 94. — Issues, proof, and variance.

[a] (Sup. 1839)

An indictment charging the defendant with winning the sum of $5 by a wager, etc., is not sustained by proof that he won the promissory note for $5 of the person with whom he bet.—Tate v. State, 5 Blackf. 174.

[b] (Sup. 1843)

An indictment charging that the defendant suffered his mare to be run in a certain race is not supported by evidence that the animal run was a horse.—Thrasher v. State, 6 Blackf. 460.

[c] (Sup. 1845)

An indictment for gaming alleged that the defendant, by playing at cards, etc., had won from A., B., and C. a certain article, etc. The evidence was that the winning was by the defendant and another as partners from A. and C. as partners. Held, that the variance was fatal.—Wilcox v. State, 7 Blackf. 456.

[d] (Sup. 1847)

Where an indictment for gaming charges the defendant with winning or losing with several persons, etc., proof that the winning or losing was with a part of those persons is not sufficient.—Isaely v. State, 8 Blackf. 403.

[e] (Sup. 1850)

Where the indictment for keeping a gambling house states the names of the persons who played therein, it is not necessary to prove every name alleged.—Dormer v. State, 2 Ind. 308.

[f] (Sup. 1851)

In an indictment for winning a certain sum of money, the prosecution may prove the winning of a smaller sum.—Parsons v. State, 2 Ind. 490.

[g] (Sup. 1851)

To sustain an indictment founded on Rev. St. c. 53, § 103, it is not necessary to prove that a bet or wager was made, or a distance to be run agreed upon, or that judges were appointed to decide the race.—Watson v. State, 3 Ind. 123.

Upon an indictment, under the statute, for horse racing, evidence that the race was run along a road leading from one turn to another in the county was held sufficient, prima facie, to sustain the averment in the indictment that the road in question was a public highway.—Id.

[h] (Sup. 1853)

An indictment under the gaming act was as follows: The grand jurors impaneled, etc., upon their oath, present that S. M. on, etc., at the county, etc., aforesaid, and continuously from that day until the day of the finding of this bill of indictment, had and possessed a house, a room, a shed, and a tenement situate in said county, and that the said M. there, during all the time aforesaid, did keep and suffer his said house, room, shed, and tenement to be used and occupied for gaming, contrary, etc. Held, that the indictment was good; and, also, to sustain the indictment, it was sufficient to prove that he kept either of the places set forth, for any length of time, for such a purpose.—McAlpin v. State, 3 Ind. 567.

[i] (Sup. 1853)

A charge, in an information, that A. alone lost upon a game of cards, etc., is not supported by proof that A., with another, jointly lost, etc.—Jackson v. State, 4 Ind. 560.

[j] (Sup. 1856)

An information under 2 Rev. St. p. 435, § 28, charged that A. kept a tenpin alley for hire, and that defendant and a companion hired the alley to play a game of tenpins, for which they agreed to pay A. ten cents, and then played the game, by which defendant won of his companion five cents, the half of the hire of the alley, by unlawfully wagering with him the said five cents on the result of the game. Held, that there was no variance raised by evidence that defendant won the value of five cents, the same being his liability to A., instead of winning five cents, the half hire of the alley.—Mount v. State, 7 Ind. 654.

[k] (Sup. 1865)

An indictment for professional gambling was in two counts. The first charged that the defendant, at Marion county, etc., was engaged in the habit and practice of gaming, and did then and there get his livelihood thereby. The second count charged that the defendant, at, etc., was wandering about from place to place, in the habit and practice of gaming. The evidence showed that the accused had been for two months traveling about and gaming for a livelihood, but that he had come into the county where he was indicted on lawful business, and had not gamed therein. Held, that the evidence did not sustain the indictment.—Bowe v. State, 25 Ind. 415; Bruce v. Same, Id. 424; Hamilton v. Same, Id. 426.

On the trial of an indictment charging the defendant with keeping his house to be used for gaming, the only evidence as to wagering was that persons played upon a billiard table, and the loser paid for the use of the table 20 or 25 cents; and the only charge in the indictment which this evidence sustained was the charge that persons were permitted to play, etc., and bet and wager upon the result of the games "the hire of said billiard table." Held, that the evidence was insufficient, as it sustained only a part of the charge which was not well made.—Carr v. State, 50 Ind. 178.

[m] (Sup. 1875)

On the trial of indictment under Act March 8, 1873 (Acts 1873 [Reg. Sess.] p. 30), charging the defendant with having the care and management of a pigeon-hole table, and suffering and allowing a person named, under the age of 21, to play a game of pigeon hole thereon with another person named, such table not being kept or used in a private family, it was proved that the table on which the game in question was played was not a pigeon-hole table, but a Jenny-Lind table, and the two kinds of tables and the games played thereon were shown to be substantially different. Held, that there was a fatal variance.—Bartender v. State, 51 Ind. 73, 76.

[n] (Sup. 1875)

Where an indictment charges defendant with suffering his horse to be run in a horse race, and the proof is that defendant rode a horse not his own in the race, the variance is fatal.—Robb v. State, 52 Ind. 216.

[o] (Sup. 1881)

On indictment under 2 Rev. St. 1876, § 74, for keeping a gaming table "for the purpose of wagering therein," held, that this clause must be construed, "for the purpose of wagering [himself] therein," and that a conviction would not be warranted unless the evidence showed that defendant had wagered on such table himself, though he had permitted others to do so.—Sumner v. State, 74 Ind. 52.

[p] (Sup. 1885)

It is not necessary to prove that defendant won the whole sum charged in an indictment for gambling with, and winning money from, another person.—Alexander v. State, 99 Ind. 450.

A charge of playing pool and winning money is sustained by proof that the question of which player should pay for the game was alone at stake.—Id.

[q] (Sup. 1890)

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 2079, which provides that the owner of any building or room who rents the same to be used for gaming shall be fined, and section 1815, which provides that "it shall be sufficient evidence that any building or other place was rented for the purpose of gaming, if such gaming was actually carried on, and the owner or lessor thereof knew, or had good reason to believe, that the lessee suffered any gaming therein, and such owner or lessor took no sufficient means to prevent or restrain the same," though the indictment charges that defendant rented a room to be used for gaming, evidence that gaming was carried on in the room, and that defendant knew or had good reason to believe, after the renting, that his lessee suffered gaming in the room, is admissible.—Voght v. State, 124 Ind. 358, 24 N. E. 680.

[r] (App. 1892)

Rev. St. 1881, § 1738, provides that the precise time of the commission of an offense need not be stated in the information if it is shown to have been within the statute of limitations, except when the time is an indispensable ingredient in the offense. Held that, on a charge of frequenting a place where gambling was permitted, it was proper to not confine the evidence to visits stated in the indictment, but to admit evidence of any such visits within two years prior to the indictment.—Courtney v. State, 5 Ind. App. 356, 32 N. E. 335.

[s] (App. 1896)

Where an indictment charged that defendant, being the keeper of a certain building, did permit persons, to the grand jurors unknown, to be and remain playing therein, etc., and on the trial a witness testified that he was before the grand jury, and that he knew at that time the persons engaged in gambling in the building, and could have given their names upon inquiry, there was no variance, as the offense charged was not shown to be a specific, but a continuing, one.—Jessup v. State, 14 Ind. App. 230, 42 N. E. 948.

[a] (Sup. 1853)

To sustain an indictment for keeping a gaming house, it is not necessary that the fact of gambling having taken place in the house should be shown, but it may be inferred from other circumstances.—McAlpin v. State, 3 Ind. 567.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

To sustain an indictment for renting a building to be used for gaming, under 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 469, § 29, the state must show by sufficient evidence, either direct or circumstantial, that the accused so rented the property.—Rodifer v. State, 74 Ind. 21.

[c] (Sup. 1908)

An affidavit for visiting a gambling house, in violation of Public Offense Statute 1905

(Laws 1905, p. 693, c. 169) § 470, being Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 2371, need not allege that defendant went there to gamble; but, if defendant has any legitimate excuse for his visit, the burden is on him to show it.—State v. Bridge-water, 171 Ind. 1, 85 N. E. 715; Same v. Hen-son, 171 Ind. 725, 85 N. E. 718; Same v. Lar-ter, 171 Ind. 725, 85 N. E. 719; Same v. Brooks, 171 Ind. 725, 85 N. E. 975; *Same v. (a) (Sup. 1890)

On a prosecution under Rev. St. 1881, § 2079, providing that whoever being the owner of any building or room rents the same to be used or occupied for gaming shall be fined, etc., evidence tending to prove that gambling was actually carried on in the room, and that the defendant knew or had good reason to believe that it was being carried on and suffered by his lessee, was competent as tending to prove or raise a presumption that the room was rented for the purpose of gaming.—Voght v. State, 24 N. E. 690, 124 Ind. 358.

On a prosecution under Rev. St. 1881, § 2079, providing that whoever being the owner of any building or room rents the same to be used or occupied for gaming shall be fined, etc., evidence that it was generally reputed that the room was kept as a gambling room; that the occupant was a gambler; that he had been indicted on and pleaded guilty to the charge of keeping a room in which gambling was permitted while occupying defendant's room—was competent as tending to raise an inference that defendant, an active man looking after his own business, and residing only two squares and a half away from the community in which the occupant's acts and business were the subject of comment, knew of the facts.—Id.

(b) (App. 1895)

Under Rev. St. 1804, § 2173, making it an offense for one to "knowingly" keep a building to be used or occupied for gaming, knowledge was provable like any other fact by either direct or circumstantial evidence.—Emperly v. State, 41 N. E. 840, 13 Ind. App. 393.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gaming, §§ 286-290.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 913.

§ 98. — Weight and sufficiency.

(a) (Sup. 1856)

On the trial of an information against A. for money won of B. at a game of cards, B.

testified that, on or about the day stated in the information, he played cards with A., who won from him two five-dollar gold pieces, etc. Held, that the testimony obviously meant that the money was paid over to A.—Branseum v. State, 7 Ind. 593.

(b) (Sup. 1859)

2 Rev. St. p. 430, § 29, provides that if any person shall keep or suffer his building, etc., to be used for gambling, or if any person, being owner of any building, etc., shall rent the same to be used for gaming, he shall be fined, etc. Held, that under the first part of said section, upon proof that there has been gambling on the premises, it is still a question whether the premises were kept by defendant for that purpose.—Winemiller v. State, 11 Ind. 516.

(c) (Sup. 1870)

Where there is testimony showing that it was customary in defendant's billiard room for the loser to pay the hire of the table, defendant's knowledge sufficiently appears.—Crawford v. State, 33 Ind. 304.

(d) (Sup. 1879)

Evidence in a prosecution for keeping a gaming house reviewed, and held insufficient to show that defendant had knowledge of the gaming.—Padgett v. State, 68 Ind. 46.

(e) (Sup. 1881)

A finding that one indicted for keeping a gaming house knowingly suffered the house to be used for gaming purposes is sustained by evidence that, although his clerk or bartender had charge of the saloon, bar, and tables, defendant himself was often present and apparently inattentive to what was going on, and that the tables had been used for gaming for two years.—Hamilton v. State, 75 Ind. 586.

(f) (Sup. 1885)

Under Rev. St. § 2081, making it an offense to lose or win by playing or betting at any game or wager, evidence that a game of pool was played by defendant with A. and B. at the time and place charged; that the amount played for was 10 cents; and that A. lost the game and paid for it,—is not sufficient to justify a conviction, it not appearing that defendant won the 10 cents, or any sum.—Middaugh v. State, 103 Ind. 78, 2 N. E. 292.

(g) (Sup. 1886)

On the trial of an indictment for gaming, the only evidence to connect the accused with the offense was to the effect that the gambling was done in a room above his saloon. Held, that there was no evidence to support a conviction.—Barnaby v. State, 106 Ind. 539, 7 N. E. 231.

(h) (Sup. 1889)

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 2079, making it penal to rent premises for gaming, evidence that defendants, who were hotel keepers, rented a room in their hotel, ostensibly for a storage and sleeping room; that soon after they were notified that gambling was carried on in the room; that for two months a faro bank was kept there, and the room regularly used for gambling, and that it had that reputation; that many people visited it; and that a man usually stood at the door who admitted only such persons as were thought desirable,—will support a verdict of guilty.—Morgan v. State, 117 Ind. 569, 19 N. E. 154.

[i] (Sup. 1890)

The evidence is sufficient to support a verdict of guilty when it shows that the general reputation was that the room was used for gambling; that during his occupancy the lessee had pleaded guilty to two indictments for keeping a room for gambling; and that defendant lived within two and one-half squares of the room, and collected his own rents.—Voght v. State, 124 Ind. 358, 24 N. E. 680.

On an indictment for renting a room to be used for gambling, the evidence is sufficient to support a verdict of guilty when it tends to show that defendant knew, or had good reason to believe, after the renting of the room, that it was used for gaming, and took no means to prevent it, and there is no rebutting evidence on his part.—Id.

[j] (App. 1900)

That a room is used for gambling so as to constitute a "gambling house," within the meaning of the statute, may be shown by circumstantial evidence in a prosecution for visiting a gambling house.—Roberts v. State, 58 N. E. 203, 25 Ind. App. 366.

[k] (App. 1900)

Evidence that the room occupied by defendant was over a saloon, and was furnished with a table, five or six chairs, a lounge, and a drawing board, and when visited, between 1 and 2 o'clock on Sunday morning, was occupied by five or six men, who were seated around the table, playing cards, and in front of them were piles of poker chips and money, and that some of the chips were piled in the middle of the table, was sufficient to support a conviction for keeping a gambling room, notwithstanding defendant's testimony that the room was occupied as an architect's office.—Neeld v. State, 58 N. E. 734, 25 Ind. App. 603.

§ 101. — Questions for jury.

[a] Whether the fact that the defendant permitted a roulette to be gambled upon once in his house is sufficient evidence to support an indictment for keeping a gaming house is a question for the jury.—(Sup. 1836) Armstrong v. State, 4 Blackf. 247; (1860) Gaylor v. McHenry, 15 Ind. 853.

§ 102. — Instructions.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

On a prosecution for keeping a gaming house, a charge which correctly declares to be gaming a wager of the money rent of a table is not rendered erroneous by the further statement that playing for a wager of checks, chips, or other things of value is gambling. Such statement does not withdraw the question of value from the jury, and is not a judicial declaration that checks and chips are things of value.—Hamilton v. State, 75 Ind. 586.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gaming, § 301.
See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 916.

§ 103. — Verdict.

[a] (Sup. 1819)

In an indictment under St. Dec. 80, 1816, § 4, charging the defendant in the same count with playing cards in a tavern and betting, the jury found him guilty of the playing, but not guilty of the betting. Held, that the verdict was sufficient.—Durham v. State, 1 Blackf. 33.

[b] (App. 1900)

Where a defendant was charged in the information with visiting a gambling house, under a statute making it an offense to "frequent or visit" a gambling house, and the evidence showed but a single visit, a finding that he was "guilty of frequenting a gambling house, as charged," must be construed in connection with the information, and is sufficient to support a judgment for the offense charged.—Roberts v. State, 58 N. E. 203, 25 Ind. App. 366.

Testator devised lands to his son, subject to the maintenance of his mother. The son allowed the mother to sell the land, joining her in a deed to the purchaser, and directing that the notes for the purchase money be made payable to her. Held, that the purchaser could not be held as a garnishee in respect to the purchase money in an attachment suit against the son.—*Hunt v. A person indebted by a note not negotiable, or not assignable by the law merchant, may be made liable as a garnishee, after the note has become due and before it is assigned, but not, as a general rule, before it becomes due, nor after he has had notice of its assignment, if he rely upon such notice in his answer.—Junction R. Co. v. Cleneay, 13 Ind. 161.

The maker of a note or bond negotiable by the law merchant cannot be subjected to judgment as garnishee without proof by the plaintiff that the negotiable paper actually remains at the time of the trial in the hands of the debtor, against whom the attachment issued as his property, or in the hands of a fraudulent assignee.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1858)

A person indebted by a note not negotiable may be subjected to judgment as garnishee before the note is due, where all the parties are residents of the state, and are before the court, so that the maker may be protected from a second liability, though he cannot be compelled to pay until the note falls due.—Junction R. § 55. — Property in course of transportation by carrier.

[a] (App. 1906)

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 943, authorizes the making of any person a garnishee defendant when such person "has property of the defendant of any description in his possession," etc. By section 951, a garnishee shall not be compelled in any case to pay or perform any contract in any other manner or at any other time than he would be bound to do for the defendant. Held, that where shippers consigned goods to themselves, acting under assumed names, the carrier, who had no knowledge save that derived from the shipment, was not liable as a garnishee to the shippers' creditors under a writ served during the transit.—Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Cox, 73 N. E. 120, 36 Ind. App. 291, 114 Am. St. Rep. 377.

[b] (App. 1906)

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 951, providing that a garnishee shall not be compelled to pay or perform a contract in any other manner or at any other time than he would be bound to do for defendant, when construed in connection with section 944, providing that a garnishee, from the day of the summons, shall be accountable to the plaintiff for property of the defendant in his hands, and section 952, relieving the garnishee from liability on payment to the sheriff or into court of the money owing by him, does not prevent a valid garnishment of goods in the possession of a carrier consigned to a point outside the state.—Malott v. § 73. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1863)

Where the proceeding is ex parte, without personal service on or appearance by defendant, the jurisdiction is acquired over him only by an attachment of his property, and, if the latter illegally issues, the proceedings under it will be void, and in the latter case the garnishee is therefore interested to know that the jurisdiction has duly attached, but has no right further to interfere in the proceeding, and he is not responsible for the regularity of the proceeding in the main action.—Schoppenhast v. Bollman, 21 Ind. 280.

[b] (Sup. 1866)

In proceedings in attachment the transcript did not show that the attachment defendant was personally served with process, nor that his property had been attached in the county where the action was brought, nor that the garnishee had been summoned in that county. Held, that no jurisdiction of the attachment defendant had been obtained by the court, and that the judgment against the garnishee was void.—Johnson v. Johnson, 26 Ind. 441.

[a] (Sup. 1851)

To authorize a judgment by default in a proceeding in foreign attachment against a garnishee served with process in and being a resident of another county than that in which the writ of attachment was issued, it is necessary, under the statute, that property of the absconding debtor should have been attached, or a garnishee served with process in the latter county.—*Reinhard v. § 80. — In general.

[a] (App. 1906)

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 931, authorizes judgment for an attachment plaintiff when the property is attached in the county where the action is brought, or when a garnishee shall have been summoned in that county who has property subject to attachment. Section 949 provides that a return of "no property" found shall not affect proceedings against the garnishee. Section 943 (Acts 1897, p. 233, c. 153) authorizes a proceeding against a garnishee whether a writ of attachment has been issued or not. Held, that a court has jurisdiction of property of defendant garnished while in the hands of a carrier, though there was no valid levy of a previous writ of attachment against the same property.—Malott v. Johnson, 77 N. E. 866, 37 Ind. App. 678.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Garn. § 145.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 1036.

§ 85. Parties.

[a] (Sup. 1885)

When plaintiff in a garnishment proceeding proves the debt to be owed him by one firm, and the debt due from the garnishee is owed to another firm, all the members of which are not before the court, so that the rights of the garnishee could be fully protected, there cannot be a valid judgment for plaintiff.—Field v. Malone, 102 Ind. 251, 1 N. E. 507.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Garn. §§ 150-154.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 1039.

§ 86. Petition or affidavit.

[a] (Sup. 1865)

The statute does not require a separate complaint to be filed against a person summoned as a garnishee. The affidavit required to procure the summons is all that is necessary.—Whitaker v. Coleman, 25 Ind. 374.

[b] (Sup. 1887)

Although a complaint may not have been good as against one of several defendants, where not demurred to, such defendant, who has been garnished on proper affidavit, cannot obtain a reversal on the ground of the insufficiency of the complaint.—Becknell v. Becknell, 110 Ind. 42, 10 N. E. 414.

[c] (App. 1886)

There is no error in overruling a motion for a nunc pro tunc entry alleging that on a certain date additional affidavits in attachment and garnishment were filed with the clerk, and that through the mistake or inadvertence of the clerk no minute of such filing was made by the clerk, where it appears that the additional affidavits were simply filed with the clerk, and were filed while the court had under consideration the original affidavits which were afterwards held to be insufficient by the court.—Teutonia Loan and Bldg. Co. v. Turrell, 49 N. E. 852, 19 Ind. App. 469, 65 Am. St. Rep. 419.

While the court has under consideration a motion to quash affidavits in garnishment, additional affidavits cannot be filed with the clerk to take the place of the original.—Id.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Garn. §§ 153-166.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 1040-1044.

§ 87. — Form and requisites in general.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

Where, in garnishment proceedings, plaintiff's affidavit named defendant as "Jonathan B.," there was no error as against the garnishee in permitting it to be amended by inserting the name of "Johnson B.;" it appearing that the amendment could not have misled or prejudiced the garnishee.—Baltimore, O. & C. R. Co. v. Taylor, 81 Ind. 24.

Where, in garnishment proceedings, the defendant made no objection to an amendment of the affidavit and undertaking by striking therefrom the name of "Jonathan," which was charged to be defendant's given name, and substituting for it the name of "Johnson," the garnishee could not complain.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1886)

The affidavit required under Acts 1897, p. 233, amending Code Civ. Proc. § 216 (Burns' Supp. 1897, § 943; Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 931), before a summons in garnishment can issue, must contain some one or more of the grounds of attachment provided in Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 925 (Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 913).—Pomeroy v. Beach, 49 N. E. 370, 149 Ind. 511; Hart v. O'Rourke, 51 N. E. 330, 151 Ind. 205.

[c] (App. 1886)

When affidavits in garnishment have been held insufficient, no subsequent proceedings based on them can be had.—Teutonia Loan & Bldg. Co. v. Turrell, 49 N. E. 852, 19 Ind. App. 469, 65 Am. St. Rep. 419.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 1040.

§ 88. — Particular averments.

[a] (Sup. 1884)

An affidavit in garnishment, charging that the attachment defendant, at the time of the alleged fraudulent transfer of a note to the garnishee, was notoriously insolvent, and that all his property subject to execution had been sold on execution, is sufficient on motion in arrest of judgment.—Corbin v. Goddard, 94 Ind. 419.

§ 92. — Issuance.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

In a proceeding in foreign attachment, property of the absconding debtor must have been attached in the county where the writ was issued, or a person in that county summoned as a garnishee, before process can issue under the statute to another county against a garnishee resident therein.—Reinhard v. Keith, 3 Ind. 137.

[b] (App. 1910)

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 966, authorizing the issuance of a garnishee summons where at the time the "action is commenced" plaintiff files with the clerk an affidavit averring that any person has the control of any property of defendant, etc., a garnishee summons may issue on the filing of the complaint, the issuance of summons, returned "Not found," and the filing of an affidavit averring that the party sought to be summoned as garnishee has property of a nonresident defendant; for the quoted words must be taken in their ordinary sense, and not within the definition of the commencement of an action under section 317.—

[a] (Sup. 1831)

The sheriff's return of service of a garnishee summons is conclusive, and the garnishee will be accountable for money in his hands at the time of such service as returned, though he was ignorant of the garnishment and subsequently acquired a good defense.—Hite v. Fisher, 76 Ind. 231.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 1054-1056.

§ 101. — Service.

[a] (Sup. 1866)

When, in a proceeding in attachment against a nonresident, the writ of attachment is returned "no property found," but a summons in garnishment is served, notice of the pendency of the suit must be given by three successive publications, the last of which must be 30 days before the day of trial.—Andrews v. Powell, 27 Ind. 303.

[b] Rev. St. Mo. 1879, § 473, provides that when a person cannot be summoned, and his property has been attached, the court may make an order requiring plaintiff to give him notice by advertisement. Held, that such a service does not confer jurisdiction where the only attachment is by garnishment of wages, which are exempt by the laws of Indiana and Missouri; and a judgment suffered by the garnishee in Missouri is no protection, therefore, to an action for such wages in Indiana.—(Sup. 1890) Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Baker, 122 Ind. 433, 24 N. E. 83; (App. 1892) Id., 4 Ind. App. 66, 30 N. E. 431.

[c] (App. 1896)

An affidavit in attachment, which states that plaintiffs have a cause of action for damages against defendants for fraud in the sale of a horse and for breach of warranty, and alleges that defendants are nonresidents, and an affidavit in garnishment stating, in addition, that resident third persons are indebted to defendants, are sufficient to warrant the publication of notice to defendants, under Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 320 (Rev. St. 1881, § 318), providing for notice of the pendency of actions, inter alia, where the action is to enforce the collection of any demand by proceedings in attachment or garnishment.—Redman v. Burgess, 50 N. E. 825, 20 Ind. App. 371.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Garn. §§ 202-207.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 1055, 1056.

§ 104. Appearance of garnishee.

[a] (Sup. 1866)

If one against whom an affidavit of garnishment has been filed, but on whom no summons has been served, voluntarily appears and answers, he cannot afterwards object that he was not served with process.—Whitney v. Lehmer, 26 Ind. 503.

[b] (Sup. 1831)

A garnishee may waive its right to object to process and service by a voluntary appearance to the proceedings.—Baltimore, O. & C. R. Co. v. Taylor, 81 Ind. 24.

[c] (App. 1899)

Where a garnishee responds to the summons, and makes oral answer, admitting an indebtedness to the debtor, the court acquires such jurisdiction of his person as entitles it to render a valid judgment against him.—Alberts v. Baker, 52 N. E. 469, 21 Ind. App. 373.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Garn. §§ 209-213.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 1056, 1057.

V. LIEN OF GARNISHMENT AND LIABILITY OF GARNISHEE.

§ 109. Transfers of property or rights pending garnishment.

[a] (Sup. 1860)

Debts due from citizens to a foreign corporation were garnished by foreign creditors. The garnishees did not claim exemption as being indebted on negotiable paper. Afterwards the corporation assigned all of their property in trust for creditors. The assignees appeared and claimed the debts, but did not show that they were on notes. Held, that the garnishees were liable to the attaching creditors.—Stetson v. Cleneay, 14 Ind. 453.

[b] (Sup. 1843)

A garnishee, at the time of service indebted on notes not negotiable by the law merchant, and which he afterwards, but before filing his answer, sells, is liable to plaintiff to the amount of such notes.—Simpson's Adm'r v. Potter, 18 Ind. 429.

[c] (Sup. 1836)

At the time of summons, a garnishee held as collateral security for defendant's indebtedness the note of a third person for a much larger amount, which it afterwards sold for the exact amount of the indebtedness. Held that, in the absence of showing that this was a proper disposition of the note, the garnishee was chargeable with the excess.—First Nat. Bank of Indianapolis v. Armstrong, 101 Ind. 244.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Garn. §§ 227-229.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 1064.

§ 110. Grounds and extent of liability of garnishee in general.

[a] (Sup. 1873)

A writ of garnishment, issued and served under an original attachment proceeding, holds all money or property belonging to the attachment defendant, in the hands of the garnishee at the time the writ is served, not only for the original plaintiff, but for all creditors who file claims under the original proceeding before the final adjustment thereof.—Ryan v. Burkam, 42 Ind. 507.

§ 112. Delivery of property to defendant or others after garnishment.

[a] (Sup. 1873)

A person who has been served as garnishee in an original attachment proceeding, and who at the time of service has money in his possession belonging to the attachment defendant, cannot deliver the money to the attorney of defendant on being informed by the attorney of plaintiff that the proceedings have been compromised and dismissed, and by such delivery be released from his liability as garnishee to another creditor of defendant, who has commenced proceedings by filing under the original suit, though the garnishee has not had actual notice of such filing.—Ryan v. Burkam, 42 Ind. 507.

§ 116. Payment of indebtedness after garnishment.

[a] (Sup. 1866)

A payment of the debt by the garnishee, after the service of the summons of garnishment, to the attachment defendant, or his general assignee for the benefit of his creditors, will not discharge such garnishee.—Cleneay v. Junction R. Co., 26 Ind. 375.

Garnishment proceedings, being incident to the main action, depend on it.—Robbins v. Alley, 38 Ind. 553.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

A judgment against a garnishee is not enforceable, if the judgment against the attachment defendant is void.—Matheney v. Earl, 75 Ind. 531.

[c] (Sup. 1883)

Where, in a proceeding by attachment, the summons against the principal defendant is returned without service, and no property has been attached, there cannot be a judgment against a garnishee until after notice by publication to the principal defendant; and that such publication has been had should be shown by the record of the judgment.—*Newman v. [a] (Sup. 1866)

Where creditors, in a suit of foreign attachment, have obtained judgments at law against the principal debtor, the question whether the garnishee or trustee had illegally disposed of the funds of the debtor, after service of the writ, is triable at law, and not in equity.—*St. John v. § 123. — In general.

[a] (App. 1899)

A release of one garnishee by attachment plaintiffs while retaining all their rights against other garnishees will not affect the other garnishees where their indebtedness is to the principal debtor, and not to the garnishee released.—Phenix Ins. Co. v. Jacobs, 55 N. E. 778, 23 Ind. App. 509.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Garn. §§ 243, 248.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 1073.

§ 124. — Defects in proceedings in principal action.

[a] (Sup. 1863)

Where defendant in the main action is personally served with process, the garnishment is not the foundation of the jurisdiction; and, in such case, if the garnishment illegally issues, it is the privilege of defendant alone to take advantage of it.—Schoppenhast v. Bollman, 21 Ind. 280.

[b] (Sup. 1873)

If defendant in attachment is personally present in court, the garnishee is not required to question the jurisdictional legality of the proceedings, or their regularity as to defendant, nor is he in a condition to do so; but, where defendant in attachment is not personally before the court, the garnishee is required to examine and know that the court has jurisdiction of the subject of the action.—Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Alvey, 43 Ind. 180.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

In a suit begun by foreign attachment, the garnishee cannot be heard to question the jurisdiction of the court over the principal defendant, nor the legality of the proceedings as to him; the principal defendant having himself appeared and failed to raise these questions.—Baltimore, O. & C. R. Co. v. Taylor, 81 Ind. 24.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 1074.

§ 125. — Defects in garnishment proceedings.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

Where a defendant appeared in garnishment proceedings, he alone could take advantage of defects in the undertaking, and the garnishee was relieved from all obligations in relation to such matters.—Baltimore, O. & C. R. Co. v. Taylor, 81 Ind. 24.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Garn. § 250.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 1075.

§ 127. — Defenses as against defendant in general.

[a] (Sup. 1872)

A contract recited that certain personal property was sold by A. to B. with a warranty that the value was a certain amount, and that the goods were to be paid for by C., who accepted the contract and agreed to comply with its terms. Held that, in an action by D. against

A., in which process of garnishment was taken against C., the latter might set up, as a defense to a note given by him to A. under that contract, the failure of consideration, in that the property was not of the value warranted, although the property had been delivered to B.—Ball v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 39 Ind. 364.

[b] (Sup. 1889)

Plaintiff had knowledge of the pendency of a suit against him in another state, in which defendant was garnished as his debtor, and defendant's attorneys appeared for him and filed his affidavit of exemption, and it did not appear that plaintiff objected to the making of such defense, or requested or authorized defendant or its attorneys to make, or informed them of, any other defense, or that he was not capable of defending. Held, that it was not defendant's duty to defend the suit.—Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Meyer, 117 Ind. 563, 19 N. E. 320.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Garn. § 252.

§ 129. — Claim to property by garnishee.

[a] (Sup. 1873)

Where one served as garnishee shows that he in good faith purchased the property and effects of the debtor, and agreed therefor to pay certain debts of debtor, and apply the residue, if any, on a debt to himself from the debtor, and that the proceeds of the property will not be sufficient to pay the debts assumed and his own, plaintiff cannot recover of the garnishee.—*Chapin v. [a] (Sup. 1907)

Where the principal defendant in a garnishment proceeding has personal knowledge of the suit, the garnishee is not bound to go further than to look to the jurisdiction of the court, act fairly, and make a full disclosure.—Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Freeze, 169 Ind. 370, 82 N. E. 761.

§ 140. — Persons who may make.

[a] (Sup. 1886)

§ 144. — Requisites and sufficiency as defense.

[a] (Sup. 1859)

In a suit against a foreign insurance and trust company, a railroad company, who was garnished, answered that it had issued bonds with semiannual interest coupons attached, and that the principal defendant at one time held a number of said bonds, but whether they had at the time of answering been negotiated or not the respondent did not know, and hence could not admit any indebtedness; and, there being nothing in the record showing that at the time of the hearing of the cause the trust company held any of the bonds, the railroad company could not be charged as garnishee. —Junction R. Co. v. Cleneay, 13 Ind. 161.

[b] (Sup. 1887)

A plea in abatement by a garnishee defendant, that he is a nonresident of the county, and his land sought to be affected is in another county, is insufficient, where it fails to show that the principal defendant had not been personally served, that no property in that county in which the garnishee lives had been attached, and that no resident garnishee had been summoned in that county. —Becknell v. Becknell, 110 Ind. 42, 10 N. E. 414.

[c] (App. 1897)

The special answer of a garnishee, summoned as a judgment debtor of defendant, that the judgment was "compromised and settled," and satisfaction entered in the proper court, before notice to the garnishee, prima facie, shows no indebtedness. —Thompson v. Shewalter, 46 N. E. 601, 17 Ind. App. 290.

§ 162. — Presumptions and burden of proof.

[a] (Sup. 1866)

In garnishment of a debt evidenced by commercial paper, before a judgment can be rendered against the garnishee, plaintiff must show that the paper has matured, and that at the time of maturity it was held by the attachment defendant, or that it was not in the hands of a bona fide holder. —Cleneay v. Junction R. Co., 26 Ind. 375.

[b] (Sup. 1885)

The only ground on which a sheriff has the right to proceed against a garnishee in attachment proceedings is that he is the debtor of those against whom the attachment issued. The general denial requires plaintiff to prove this fact. —Field v. Malone, 102 Ind. 251, 1 N. E. 507.

Where a general denial is filed by a garnishee, the burden is on plaintiff to prove all the material facts essential to make payment of the judgment in the garnishment a protection in case his creditors should sue him, including the fact that all of the creditors interested in the claim garnished were before the court. —Id.

[c] (App. 1905)

The maker of a negotiable note cannot be subjected to garnishment in a suit against the debtor without proof that the debtor is the legal or equitable owner. —Brown v. Fisher, 74 N. E. 632, 35 Ind. App. 549.

§ 164. — Weight and sufficiency.

Testimony of numerous witnesses that a garnishee admitted being indebted to defendant debtor in the amount attached will sustain a finding and judgment against the garnishee.—McKee v. Anderson, 35 Ind. 17.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Garn. § 302.

See also, 20 Cyc. p. 1100.

§ 165. Dismissal or discharge of garnishee before trial.

[a] (Sup. 1843)

A garnishee in foreign attachment admitted, in answer to interrogatories, his indebtedness by judgment to defendant in attachment. The court, without any motion, and against plaintiff's will, dismissed the proceedings against the garnishee; the attachment being still pending. Held, that the dismissal was erroneous.—Halbert v. Stinson, 6 Blackf. 398.

[b] (App. 1896)

On motion by garnishee to be discharged, facts alleged in the motion, or in the statement in support thereof, cannot be considered, unless set up in the pleadings filed before the motion was presented, such a motion being equivalent at most to a motion for judgment on the pleadings.—Rigney v. Jacobs, 45 N. E. 343, 17 Ind. App. 545.

§ 175. — Nature and essentials in general.

[a] (Sup. 1858)

Judgment against the trustee, indebted on a note not yet due, should not be that execution issue on nonpayment at maturity, for there may be a failure of consideration before that. It should forbid transfer or payment until maturity or further order.—Pursell v. Pappenheimer, 11 Ind. 327.

[b] (Sup. 1886)

The fact that a judgment rendered against a garnishee is erroneous by reason of no affidavit in attachment being filed as prescribed by Acts 1897, p. 233, and also by reason of the amount due from the garnishee being exempt under said act, does not render it void.—Hart v. O'Rourke, 51 N. E. 330, 151 Ind. 205.

§ 184. — Protection or indemnity to garnishee.

[a] (Sup. 1882)

A garnishee is protected by a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, though there may be error or irregularity in the proceedings.—Oppenheim v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co., 85 Ind. 471.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Garn. § 325.

§ 187. — Opening and vacating.

[a] (Sup. 1860)

Suit was commenced by attachment, and one B. was garnished, and on his answer judgment was rendered against him. At a subsequent term motion was made by the attorney of the defendants on his own affidavit alone to have the judgment against B. set aside. Held, that no cause was shown for setting aside the judgment simply on this application.—Sturges v. Rogers, 16 Ind. 18.

§ 191. Costs and attorney's fees.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

Under 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 109, § 182, where a garnishee had money in its hands due from it to defendant when the proceedings were commenced, and more than enough to pay all judgments against defendant and the costs of the proceedings, there was no error in adjudging costs against the garnishee.—Baltimore, O. & C. R. Co. v. Taylor, 81 Ind. 24.

VII. QUASHING, VACATING, DISSOLUTION, OR ABANDONMENT.

§ 193. Grounds for quashing, vacating, or dissolving.

[a] (Sup. 1965)

Where no property has been taken in attachment, and garnishee has, on his own application, procured a continuance of the proceedings against him, after personal judgment against defendant he cannot afterwards insist that plaintiff has abandoned his right to judgment against him.—Whitaker v. Coleman, 25 Ind. 374.

§ 198. Abandonment.

[a] (App. 1901)

Where, in an action for divorce, a final judgment for plaintiff is rendered, without an adjudication being had on an issue in ancillary proceedings of attachment and garnishment, that part of the case is abandoned, and the court has no power to afterwards take up the matter of the attachment and garnishment independently, and render a judgment on those issues.—*Sahner v. § 215. — Parties.

[a] (Sup. 1861)

When a garnishee sets up an assignment of his indebtedness to defendant, notified to him before service of the garnishment process, if plaintiff desires to dispute the validity of the assignment, it is proper, if not necessary, to bring the assignee before the court.—Cadwalader v. Hartley, 17 Ind. 520.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Garn. § 407.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 1135.

§ 216. — Pleading.

[a] (Sup. 1843)

A summons was served on S. as garnishee in attachment on the 30th of September, who answered that, on the 25th of that month, he gave his obligation to defendant in attachment for a certain sum of money; that he had been informed by letter from the obligee, dated the 2d October, and received a day or two afterwards, that the obligation was assigned to D.; that he had since received notice of its assignment by D. to P. and G.; that the obligation had been presented for payment; and that the assignment to D. was dated the 28th of September. Plaintiff replied (1) that the obligation was not bona fide assigned to D. before service of the summons on the garnishee; (2) that the garnishee had no notice of the assignment till after he was summoned; (3) that the assignment was without consideration, and made to defraud plaintiff and other creditors of the obligee. Held, that the replications were insufficient.—Smith v. Wright, 6 Blackf. 550.

[b] (Sup. 1850)

Where an obligor summoned in an attachment suit as garnishee answers that the obligation was assigned before he was summoned, the attachment plaintiff cannot reply that the garnishee had no notice of the assignment until after he was summoned.—Smith v. Blatchford, 2 Ind. 184, 52 Am. Dec. 504.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Garn. §§ 435-444.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 1140-1146.

§ 230. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1848)

A defendant, pleading to an action of debt that a judgment in attachment had been obtained against him as garnishee, must allege that the judgment was for the same debt, or a part thereof, for which the present action is brought.—Cornwell v. Hungate, 1 Ind. 156.

[b] (Sup. 1861)

The answer, in an action on a note, that defendant had been compelled to pay the note to a creditor of plaintiff, to constitute a bar, must show that the note in suit and that under consideration in the garnishment are identical.—Saugster v. Butt, 17 Ind. 354.

[c] (Sup. 1863)

Though proceedings in attachment were irregular, and the judgment therein erroneous, where such proceedings were not absolutely void, but were such as the garnishee might regard in making payment, a payment so made discharges him from further liability to the principal defendant therein.—Schoppenhast v. Bollman, 21 Ind. 280.

A garnishee is entitled to the benefit claimed under a judgment against him as such, without being responsible for the regularity of these proceedings.—Id.

[d] (Sup. 1864)

If the court have jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties, a payment on execution under its judgment will protect the garnishee, though the judgment may have been irregular and reversible on error, and a reversal of it by defendant for irregularity, after payment by the garnishee, will not invalidate the payment. The garnishee should see to it that the court has jurisdiction.—Richardson v. Ilickman, 22 Ind. 244.

[e] (Sup. 1868)

To an action by an attachment defendant against the garnishee, the judgment on the garnishment is not a bar, but only a good credit to the amount paid.—Barton v. Allbright, 29 Ind. 489.

[f] (Sup. 1870)

A voluntary payment as garnishee in proceedings in another state, there being no jurisdiction of the principal defendant in these proceedings, is no defense to an action on the debt in this state.—Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. McNulty, 34 Ind. 531.

[g] (Sup. 1873)

A payment by a garnishee is a defense to a suit by the attachment defendant against such garnishee for the same debt, although such attachment proceeding, as between the creditor and debtor, was irregular and reversible.—Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Alvey, 43 Ind. 180.

[h] (Sup. 1876)

In an action by a mortgagee against the mortgagor to foreclose a mortgage given to secure notes, only a part of which are due, it is a sufficient defense to allege that, prior to the foreclosure suit, in a suit by a third person against such mortgagee, a judgment was rendered against him, from which he appealed to the supreme court, where the appeal is still pending, and that in such suit, on attachment and garnishment, it was found that the mortgagor was indebted to the mortgagee on such mortgage debt, and a judgment was rendered in favor of such third person against the mortgagor, as garnishee of the mortgagee, for a sum in excess of the amount of the notes due.—Greenman v. Fox, 54 Ind. 267.

[i] (Sup. 1878)

A judgment against a garnishee is, pro tanto, a good defense to an action against him by the attachment defendant on the same cause of action.—Canaday v. Detrick, 63 Ind. 485.

[j] (Sup. 1882)

A garnishee is protected by the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, although there may be some error or irregularity in the proceedings, such as a defective service.—Oppenheim v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co., 85 Ind. 471.

[k] (App. 1892)

When, in attachment against a nonresident defendant, who makes no appearance, judgment is rendered against him without jurisdiction, a garnishee will not be protected by the judgment rendered against himself, or by his payment thereof, when he is subsequently sued by the principal defendant.—Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Lake, 5 Ind. App. 450, 32 N. E. 590.

[l] (App. 1893)

In the absence of jurisdiction in garnishment, both of the subject-matter and the person of the principal debtor, a judgment against the garnishee, and payment thereof, will afford him no protection.—Debs v. Dalton, 7 Ind. App. 84, 34 N. E. 236.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Garn. §§ 435-444; 43 CENT. DIG. Sheriffs, § 274.

§ 231. — Other actions and proceedings against garnishee.

[a] (App. 1906)

In an action on a note by an assignee the maker answered that plaintiff in the action and the maker and the payee had been sued in a certain action, the maker being summoned as garnishee, and that the money due on the note had been paid into court by its order, but that the action and garnishment proceedings had then been dismissed, and that subsequently another suit was commenced against the payee, the money in court being attached, and that such garnishment proceedings were then pending. It was alleged that the maker had no notice of the assignment when the payment was made. Held, that the answer was insufficient, it not appearing on what ground the assignee was made a defendant in the garnishment suit, or that he was a party to the suit alleged to be pending, and hence not showing any adjudication as to the assignee's right, or a payment of the note to its rightful holder.—Brown v. Fisher, 74 N. E. 632, 35 Ind. App. 549.

§ 232. Effect of garnishment as between garnishee and third persons.

[a] (Sup. 1846)

In a suit by the assignee of a sealed note against the maker, a judgment recovered against the maker on the note as garnishee, in an attachment against the payee, may be pleaded in bar of the suit if the judgment was rendered before the maker had notice of the assignment.—Covert v. Nelson, 8 Blackf. 265.

[b] (Sup. 1847)

If defendant, in an action of debt, rely on payment as garnishee in attachment, he should show that the debt paid by him as garnishee was the same debt for which he is sued.—Harmon v. Birchard, 8 Blackf. 418.

[c] (Sup. 1861)

Where, in suit by third parties against the payee of a note, making the maker a garnishee, judgment is recovered, this is a defense to a suit against the maker brought by an assignee of the note, if the maker had no notice of the assignment at the time of the rendition of judgment against him as garnishee.—Shetler v. Thomas, 16 Ind. 223.

[d] (Sup. 1874)

When a garnishee answers that he is indebted by a nonnegotiable note to the attachment defendant, and judgment is rendered against him, such judgment will protect him against a suit by a bona fide assignee of the note, if the garnishee had no notice of such assignment before the rendition of judgment against him in the attachment proceeding.—King v. Vance, 46 Ind. 246.

[e] (Sup. 1879)

A judgment rendered against the maker of a note as garnishee, in an attachment proceeding against the payee, is a good defense to the extent of the judgment, in an action against the maker by an assignee of the note, if, at the date of the judgment, the maker had no notice of the assignment.—Elston v. Gillis, 69 Ind. 128.

[f] (Sup. 1881)

In a suit by the assignee of a mortgage against the mortgagee and a subsequent purchaser of the property, the latter answered that, without knowledge of the assignment, he had paid the amount of the mortgage notes into court in a suit against the mortgagee, in which he was summoned as garnishee, to which the plaintiff replied that defendant had knowledge of the assignment before judgment in the garnishment proceedings. Held, that the reply was good.—Daggett v. Flanagan, 78 Ind. 253.

If a debtor, after notice of assignment of the debt, allow himself to be charged as garnishee of the assignor, he does it at his own peril, and cannot complain if he is compelled to pay twice.—Id.

[g] (Sup. 1881)

In an action by the assignee against the maker of a note, it is a good defense that defendant had settled the same by the payment of a judgment against him as garnishee of the payee, although he had notice of the assignment before making the payment.—Newman v. Manning, 79 Ind. 218.

[h] (App. 1895)

In an action on account by an assignee thereof, where the defense is that defendant has been garnishee in an action against the assignor, and judgment for the amount of the account taken against him which he has paid, the answer, which fails to allege that a writ of attachment issued in the action against the assignor, and that judgment was rendered against him therein, is insufficient.—Alberts v. Baker, 13 Ind. App. 399, 40 N. E. 1119.

§ 235. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1860)

The judgment rendered against one as a garnishee will bar a subsequent action by an assignee who had not given notice of the assignment prior to such judgment.—Junction R. Co. v. Cleary, 13 Ind. 161.

[b] (Sup. 1885)

Where, in a garnishment proceeding, the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the persons of the creditors to whom the claim garnished was due, a judgment against the garnishee would afford him protection; and hence it was not for him to question the regularity of the proceedings.—Field v. Malone, 1 N. E. 507, 102 Ind. 251.

[c] (Sup. 1890)

It is the duty of a garnishee defendant to avail itself of all legal means to prevent a judgment against it when garnished, and it is its duty to interpose the defense that the debt sued for is not subject to garnishment, and, on its failure to do so, it cannot have credit for the amount thus unnecessarily paid.—Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Baker, 24 N. E. 83, 122 Ind. 433.

[d] (App. 1890)

In the absence of fraud, a judgment rendered against a garnishee will protect him from demands of creditors claiming the same debt.—Alberts v. Baker, 52 N. E. 469, 21 Ind. App. 373.

[e] (App. 1910)

Where defendant in a garnishment proceeding does not appear, the garnishee must be assured that the court has jurisdiction over the subject-matter and the parties, and where the court has such jurisdiction the judgment protects the garnishee as against a collateral attack.—Northern Indiana R. Co. v. Lincoln Nat. Bank, 92 N. E. 384.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Garn. §§ 423-427, 443, 444, 447, 450-452.

§ 236. — Judgment on default or admission.

[a] (App. 1891)

Where one personally summoned as garnishee allows judgment to go against him by default, and pays it, the payment is voluntary, and he cannot recover from the principal debtor on discovering that he owed him nothing.—Ambs v. Towle, 27 N. E. 625, 1 Ind. App. 426.

[b] (App. 1893)

When, in an ex parte proceeding in attachment against a nonresident who makes no appearance, judgment is rendered against him without jurisdiction, a garnishee will not be protected by the judgment rendered against himself, or by his payment thereof, when he is subsequently sued by the principal defendant. The garnishee, for his own protection, must see that the court has jurisdiction of the principal defendant.—Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Parish, 33 N. E. 122, 6 Ind. App. 89.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Garn. § 441.

§ 237. — Foreign judgment.

[a] (Sup. 1903)

Burns' Rev. St. 1901, §§ 2283, 2284, prohibit the sending of a claim outside the state for the purpose of garnishing money due the debtor. A railroad company garnished in Kentucky for money due an employé caused the employé to be personally notified of the suit, disclosed to the court the nature of the demand, and sought to claim the benefit of the Indiana exemption laws. The employé was also served with judicial process, but defaulted, and judgment was rendered against him and the company, which the company paid. In a suit by the employé against the company, it appeared that the claim against the employé had been sent out of the state in violation of the statute, but it was not shown that the company had failed in the foreign suit to disclose any defense within its knowledge. Held, that the company was protected by the payment of the foreign judgment.—Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Adams, 66 N. E. 43, 159 Ind. 688, 60 L. R. A. 306.

The fact that after a debtor has been garnished in a sister state, but before judgment there, the creditor has obtained a domestic judgment, will not prevent the payment of the foreign garnishment judgment from operating as a protection to the debtor.—Id.

[b] (App. 1906)

A railroad company being liable to garnishment, it may successfully plead that in an action in another state against plaintiff as principal, and the company as garnishee defendant, a judgment was rendered against the company.—Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Cox, 36 Ind. App. 291, 73 N. E. 120, 114 Am. St. Rep. 377.

§ 1. Power to control and regulate.

[a] (Sup. 1891)

Natural gas, owing to its dangerous qualities, is a proper subject for police regulation.—Jamieson v. Indiana Natural Gas & Oil Co., 28 N. E. 76, 128 Ind. 555, 12 L. R. A. 652.

Natural gas because of its local nature and intrinsic qualities cannot be made the subject of general commerce between the states, and for the same reasons it cannot be made the subject of uniform federal legislation so far as local safety is concerned.—Id.

[a] (Sup. 1893)

It is incumbent on a board of county commissioners seeking to cancel a grant of authority to a natural gas company to lay its pipes in the highways to allege and prove facts entitling it to a rescission, and the absence of a showing that defendant had not acted on the order in good faith is fatal to the cause, even if the order should be held voidable.—Board of Com'rs of Hamilton County v. Indianapolis Natural Gas Co., 33 N. E. 972, 134 Ind. 209.

[b] (Sup. 1901)

Where a city ordinance, granting a franchise to a gas company to use the city streets to furnish gas to the city and its inhabitants, provides that the city council shall determine the quantity of gas to be used by the city, the city is under no obligation to continue to use such gas.—Gas Light & Coke Co. v. City of New Albany, 59 N. E. 176, 156 Ind. 406.

§ 7. — Rights in streets and other public places.

Power of municipality to grant right to use streets, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, § 680.

Restraining laying of gas pipes in streets, see INJUNCTION, §§ 11, 13.

[a] (Sup. 1888)

Although a municipal corporation, by its trustees, has assumed to grant to a natural gas and oil company the exclusive privilege of laying mains and pipes in its streets for supplying natural gas and oil to the town and its citizens, in violation of the policy of the law against monopolies, and of Acts 1887, p. 36, relative to the supply of natural gas and oil to towns, etc., which requires a general ordinance giving substantially the same privileges to all companies, such grant will not authorize another company to use and occupy the streets, without a general ordinance authorizing it, as provided in the act of 1887; nor will the refusal of the corporation to grant such other company a special privilege give the company that right.—Citizens' Gas & Mining Co. v. Town of Elwood, 114 Ind. 332, 16 N. E. 624.

[b] (Supp. 1892)

Defendant city, by ordinance, granted to plaintiff's assignors, for 25 years, the privilege of laying gas mains for supplying illuminating gas along certain of defendant's streets. The ordinance provided that defendant should maintain a certain number of lamp-posts; that it should maintain along said mains "such additional lamp posts and lamps as the city council may from time to time direct, and on the erection of said lamps said city shall take from the gas works * * * sufficient gas to keep said lamps lighted." Held, that no exclusive grant of the use of the streets was made by such ordinance.—City of Vincennes v. Citizens' Gas-light Co., 132 Ind. 114, 31 N. E. 573, 16 L. R. A. 485.

[c] (Supp. 1892)

The mere fact that a city ordinance specifically and by name grants to a natural gas company the right to use its streets for laying pipe, etc., does not make the license exclusive, and therefore the grant of a monopoly.—City of Rushville v. Rushville Natural Gas Co., 132 Ind. 575, 28 N. E. 853, 15 L. R. A. 321.

[d] (Supp. 1893)

The right of gas companies to affect the fee are secured through proceedings in the circuit court against the fee owner, while as affecting the easement they are secured through the commissioners to be chosen guardians of the interest of the public in the highways.—Board of Com'rs of Hamilton County v. Indianapolis Nat. Gas Co., 33 N. E. 972, 134 Ind. 209.

Elliott's Supp. § 1016, et seq., provides a method by which natural gas companies may secure from the owner an easement in land for laying pipe lines, and that, "whenever the board of county commissioners of the proper county shall so direct, said trenches and pipe lines may be constructed and laid along the right of way of any road or highway." Held, that the act does not give the board of commissioners power to affect the ownership in fee of the lands over which a highway passes, and a gas company will not be restrained, at the suit of the board of commissioners, from laying a pipe line in a highway without permission from such board and the abutting landowners, where it does not appear that the rights of the public are being invaded.—Id.

[e] (Supp. 1894)

Laying pipe in a highway without permission is unlawful, and persons doing so are liable to others injured thereby.—Lebanon Light, Heat & Power Co. v. Leap, 130 Ind. 443, 39 N. E. 57, 20 L. R. A. 342.

[f] (Supp. 1895)

The city of I. passed an ordinance, as empowered by statute, authorizing any corporation for the supply of natural gas to lay mains through the streets, etc., and to take them up for repairs or alterations, and requiring the licensee to file a $50,000 bond to restore all streets, etc., "to as good condition as they were before," and to maintain them in such condition for one year, etc. Held, that the passage of a subsequent ordinance, which prohibited the cutting into any paved street without first securing the consent of the council, and filing a bond, etc., was not a valid exercise of police power as to a licensee which had accepted the former ordinance, and complied with all its conditions.—City of Indianapolis v. Consumers' Gas Trust Co., 140 Ind. 107, 39 N. E. 433, 27 L. R. A. 514, 49 Am. St. Rep. 183.

Where a city, by ordinance, exercises the power given it by statute to regulate the distribution of natural gas, and to require those to whom the privilege of using the streets is granted to pay a reasonable license (Acts 1887, p. 36), and such ordinance authorizes the licensee to lay its mains through the streets, etc., and to take them up from time to time for changes or repairs, a clause in such ordinance which provides that the city attorney shall enforce compliance with such ordinance and all other ordinances thereafter passed does not reserve the right to such city to bind the licensee by a subsequent ordinance, which prohibits it from cutting into a certain macadamized street except on certain onerous conditions.—Id.

The fact that macadam pavement was laid after the passage of the ordinance licensing the use of the streets for gas mains, and the acceptance thereof by the licensee, did not restrict the right of the licensee to lay its mains through the streets in a prudent and lawful manner, and from time to time to take them up and repair them, as provided by such ordinance.—Id.

[g] (App. 1896)

Where a natural gas company lays its line along a highway without having obtained the right by condemnation or by consent of abutting owners, such an owner may tear up and remove the pipes in front of her premises.—Consumers' Gas Trust Co. v. Huntsinger, 14 Ind. App. 156, 39 N. E. 423, 42 N. E. 640.

Act Feb. 20, 1889, subd. 5, giving voluntary associations for piping natural gas the right to dig trenches and lay pipe across roads.

and providing that, when county commissioners so direct, the trenches and pipe lines may be laid along the right of way of a road, authorizes the construction across highways without the consent of the commissioners, but requires their permission where the construction is along a highway.—Id.

[h] (App. 1900)

One who has been granted privilege to place pipes under the soil of a highway must exercise the privilege in such a way as not to interfere with the use of the highway by the public.—Indiana Natural & Illuminating Gas Co. v. McMath, 57 N. E. 593, 59 N. E. 287, 26 Ind. App. 154.

A gas company placing its pipes in a highway must so place them that the right of the public to the use of the entire width of the highway will not be interfered with.—Id.

It must be presumed, until the contrary is made to appear, that natural gas may be safely conducted and transported in receptacles and pipes for an indefinite distance.—Indiana Natural Gas & Oil Co. v. Jones, 42 N. E. 487, 14 Ind. App. 55.

[b] (Sup. 1897)

Rev. St. 1894, § 5108, providing that lands for gas pipe lines shall not be condemned within 75 yards of a dwelling, but permitting pipes to be laid along a highway, without regard to nearness of dwellings, has no application to the sinking of a well and laying pipes on one's own land, between which and dwellings within that distance is a highway.—Windfall Mfg. Co. v. Patterson, 47 N. E. 2, 148 Ind. 414, 37 L. R. A. 381, 62 Am. St. Rep. 532.

[c] (Sup. 1901)

In a suit to prevent the transportation of natural gas by means other than the natural pressure, a complaint not charging that an additional flow of the gas from the wells was induced by means of the machinery used, or that the unnatural flow was a necessary consequence of the use of the machinery, is insufficient.—Manufacturers' Gas & Oil Co. v. Indiana Natural Gas & Oil Co., 156 Ind. 679, 59 N. E. 160, 60 N. E. 1080.

[d] (Sup. 1903)

Where, in an action to compel a railroad company to permit a natural gas company to lay a pipe line under its right of way, a cross-complaint to restrain such action alleged that plaintiff was using artificial means to increase the flow of gas through its pipes in violation of statute, but failed to show that defendant's acts resulted in any damage to plaintiff, or increased the danger of accident by leakage, fire or explosion, such allegation did not entitle defendant to an injunction.—Chicago, I. & N. R. Co. v. Indiana Natural Gas & Oil Co., 156 N. E. 1008, 161 Ind. 445.

Where a railway company granted a license to a natural gas company to maintain its pipe lines under and across the railroad's right of way, and every objection urged in a cross-complaint to prevent the gas company from constructing a fourth pipe line across the right of way existed at the time the license was granted, and it was not averred that the dangers and inconvenience had been increased by any act of the gas company, the cross-complaint was insufficient.—Id.

Where a natural gas company covenanted in consideration of a conveyance of a right of way for its pipe line to furnish gas to the grantor as long as the line was in operation, the grantor could not enjoin the removal of the line.—Connersville Natural Gas Co. v. Moffet, 73 N. E. 894, 164 Ind. 585.

A provision that natural gas companies shall supply all individuals along their lines requiring it, on payment of reasonable security, is valid, and within the power of a city to impose by ordinance.—City of Rushville v. Rushville Natural Gas Co., 132 Ind. 575, 28 N. E. 853, 15 L. R. A. 321.

[b] (Sup. 1893)

To entitle the owner of a house to the right of being supplied with natural gas by a natural gas company, occupying the streets of a town or city with its mains, it is not necessary that he should own an interest in the company, different from that held by other citizens.—Portland Natural Gas & Oil Co. v. State ex rel. Keen, 135 Ind. 54, 34 N. E. 818, 21 L. R. A. 639.

A natural gas company, occupying the streets of a town or city with its mains, owes to the owners and occupants of houses abutting on such streets the duty of furnishing them with such gas as they may require, where they make the necessary arrangements to receive it, and comply with the regulations of the company; and, on its refusal or neglect to perform such duty, it may be compelled to do so by writ of mandamus.—Id.

In mandamus to compel a natural gas company to furnish relator's house with gas, an allegation in the answer that relator is already being provided with natural gas by another company is not sufficient to show that it will be necessary for defendant, in order to supply relator's house, to violate Acts 1891, p. 382, § 1, which makes it unlawful for any one to change, alter, or extend any service or other pipe or attachment owned by a gas company without the latter's consent.—Id.

[c] (Sup. 1897)

A natural gas company occupying the streets of a city under a franchise must serve all applicants for such service who comply with its reasonable rules, and make reasonable compensation; and, where the contract between the company and the consumer is but a statement of the reasonable conditions under which the company was required to perform its duty, the company's failure to perform the contract is a tort.—Coy v. Indianapolis Gas Co., 146 Ind. 655, 46 N. E. 17, 36 L. R. A. 535.

[d] (App. 1900)

One receiving gas under a contract with a company is not entitled to remove the mixer placed in his house by the company, and burn gas without the use of any mixer, without the company's consent, though the company fails to furnish sufficient gas through the mixer.—Indiana Natural & Illuminating Gas Co. v. Anthony, 58 N. E. 868, 26 Ind. App. 307.

In an action against a gas company, having, by virtue of certain ordinances, certain privileges and franchises, for damages for wrongfully shutting off plaintiff's gas supply, the ordinance under which the company operates its plant is admissible in evidence to show that defendant had assumed a duty to supply citizens with gas on application and to show the rates it might lawfully charge.—Id.

Where plaintiff paid defendant for gas to supply his heating stove in advance, the defendant is legally bound to furnish him with sufficient gas for his stove; and it is no defense in an action for damages for failure to do so, for the company to show that it had furnished all the gas it had, so long as it retained the money received in payment for gas.—Id.

The fact that one receiving gas under a contract with a company wrongfully removes the mixer, and burns gas without the use of any mixer, does not prevent a recovery by him from the company for injuries resulting from failure to furnish gas, for which it had received pay in advance.—Id.

In an action for damages against a gas company, plaintiff testified to a conversation in which there was a controversy about the rate, when he complained that the rates were too high, and that the amount of gas was not worth the charge made. That defendant said that was the rule; that the bills could be paid in that way, or plaintiff would not burn the gas; and that he could pay what the company asked, or bring in the mixers. Held sufficient to show threats by the defendant to shut off the gas if the excessive charges were not paid.—Id.

A natural gas company, which a city has permitted to lay its mains in the street to furnish its citizens with gas, cannot refuse to furnish gas to a citizen in front of whose premises the pipes were laid, on the ground that there was an unavoidable deficiency in the amount of gas produced by it, and that if it furnished gas to such citizen it would inconvenience other patrons.—State ex rel. Wood v. Consumers' Gas Trust Co., 61 N. E. 674, 157 Ind. 345, 55 L. R. A. 245.

[f] (Sup. 1902)

A natural gas company having laid its mains in town streets, and acquired a monopoly, is impressed with a public character, and it must serve the inhabitants without invidious discrimination.—Indiana Natural & Illuminating Gas Co. v. State ex rel. Ball, 63 N. E. 220, 158 Ind. 510, 57 L. R. A. 761.

[g] (Sup. 1904)

A corporation engaged in supplying natural gas to the inhabitants of a city may not refuse to supply one person therewith on the ground that it has not sufficient gas to supply him, and also supply its other customers with their reasonable requirement, or because he may obtain gas from another public service company to which it furnishes a supply.—Indiana Natural Gas & Oil Co. v. State ex rel. Armstrong, 71 N. E. 133, 162 Ind. 690.

[h] (App. 1904)

A company engaged in furnishing natural gas for fuel purposes may waive its written permission to make a connection for such purposes.—Citizens' Gas & Oil Min. Co. v. Whipple, 69 N. E. 557, 32 Ind. App. 203.

If, without the knowledge or consent of a company engaged in furnishing natural gas for fuel, a stove is connected with their pipes, and gas is used, and afterward the company is paid, at its request, the amount demanded therefor, the persons making the connection become consumers from such time, and are entitled to use gas, unless ordered to cease by the company.—Id.

[i] (Sup. 1905)

The omission of the averment in the complaint in an action against a natural gas company for turning off the gas from plaintiff's residence that plaintiff complied with, or offered to comply with, the reasonable regulations of defendant before or when it shut the gas off, is not supplied by the allegation, by way of conclusion and recital, that, after being tendered its charges therefor by plaintiff, defendant wrongfully and unlawfully turned off the gas from plaintiff's residence.—Greenfield Gas Co. v. Trees, 75 N. E. 2, 165 Ind. 200.

[j] (App. 1910)

Where the performance of a contract to lay mains and connect them with certain lots was conditioned upon the continued existence of natural gas, upon the failure of the gas, there can be no liability, in the absence of fault, or of some substituted performance provided for.—Bruce v. Indianapolis Gas Co., 92 N. E. 189.

[a] (Sup. 1892)

Act March 7, 1887 (Elliott's Supp. § 800) entitled "An act empowering cities and towns within the state * * * to regulate the supply, consumption, and distribution of natural gas therein, and declaring an emergency," and providing that "the board of trustees of towns and the common council of cities * * * shall have power to provide by ordinance reasonable regulations for the safe supply, distribution and consumption of natural gas within the respective limits of such towns and cities," authorizes, not merely such regulations as conducive to safety, but confers full power to regulate the supply, distribution, and consumption of natural gas, including the power to fix reasonable maximum rates that may be charged to consumers.—City of Rushville v. Rushville Natural Gas Co., 132 Ind. 575, 28 N. E. 853, 14 L. R. A. 321.

The fact that a natural gas company entered into the business under an ordinance containing nothing on the subject of rates does not exempt it from the provisions relative thereto contained in a subsequent ordinance.—Id.

Municipal corporations of Indiana have no power, at common law, to fix by ordinance the price at which natural gas shall be supplied to consumers.—Lewisville Natural Gas Co. v. State ex rel. Reynolds, 135 Ind. 49, 31 N. E. 702, 21 L. R. A. 734.

Act March 7, 1887 (Elliott's Supp. § 800,) providing "that the boards of trustees of towns, and the common councils of cities * * * shall have power to provide, by ordinance, reasonable regulations for the safe supply, distribution and consumption of natural gas within the respective limits of such towns and cities," does not confer the power to regulate the price at which natural gas shall be furnished.—Id.

[c] (Sup. 1895)

Rev. St. 1894, § 4306, authorizes a municipal corporation to enact an ordinance regulating the supply and distribution of natural gas, and exacting a fee from companies using its streets in supplying it. Held, that where a city passed an ordinance granting the right to lay natural gas mains in its streets, prescribing the maximum price to be charged, and requiring an approved bond that a company accepting such privilege would comply with the ordinance, the price fixed by the ordinance is binding on a company whose bond has been presented to and accepted by the city, and in whose favor the city has waived its right to exact a fee for the use of its streets.—Westfield Gas & Milling Co. v. Mendenhall, 142 Ind. 533, 41 N. E. 1033.

[d] (Supp. 1898)

An ordinance which amends a prior ordinance regulating the prices to be charged by all parties furnishing natural gas, and which increases the prices to be charged by a particular corporation for a certain time, does not repeal the former ordinance, and on the expiration of such time the prior ordinance prevails.—Thistlethwaite v. State, 49 N. E. 156, 149 Ind. 319.

[e] (Supp. 1900)

A natural gas company, doing business under a municipal ordinance granting the right to use the streets for the supply of natural gas to said city and the citizens thereof, for several years furnished gas to consumers, and accepted payment for it, at a uniform rate of 12½ cents per 1,000 cubic feet, whether used for heating or lighting or both. It then adopted a rule charging 20 cents per 1,000 cubic feet for gas when used for fuel and light, without regard to the amount consumed for light, and 12½ cents per 1,000 cubic feet when used for fuel only. Plaintiff had fitted his house to use gas for lighting and heating, and had used and paid for gas for both purposes for a considerable time before the adoption of the new rule. Held, that injunction would lie to restrain the company from shutting off plaintiff's supply of gas because of his refusal to pay 20 cents per 1,000 cubic feet therefor, since the rule charging such price was unreasonable, arbitrary, and an unjust discrimination between consumers.—Richmond Nat. Gas Co. v. Clawson, 58 N. E. 1049, 155 Ind. 659, 51 L. R. A. 744.

[f] (Supp. 1901)

Under Acts 1887, p. 36, providing that trustees of towns shall have power to provide reasonable regulations for the safe supply, distribution, and consumption of natural gas, the board of trustees have no power to fix the rate which a company supplying the inhabitants of the town with gas shall charge its patrons.—City of Noblesville v. Noblesville Gas & Improvement Co., 60 N. E. 1032, 157 Ind. 162.

In a suit by a gas company, having a right to charge reasonable rates, to enjoin the enforcement of an ordinance fixing the rates to be charged, the complaint was not bad for failure to allege that the rates charged were reasonable, since, in the absence of a contrary showing, it will be presumed that they were.—Id.

Where a gas company, which was supplying the inhabitants of a town with gas under a franchise not prescribing the rates to be charged, accepted the provisions of a later ordinance fixing rates for certain uses of gas, expressly reserving all vested rights under its former franchise, it was entitled to fix its own prices for all uses not specified in the later ordinance.—Id.

Where a gas company was supplying the inhabitants of a town with gas under a franchise not fixing the rate to be charged, and voluntarily accepted the provisions of a later ordinance prescribing rates, the legal authorization to charge the rates so fixed was a consideration for the acceptance, so that the company was bound thereby.—Id.

[g] (App. 1902)

The ordinance constituting the franchise of a natural gas company provided a schedule of charges for gas to certain specified consumers, and added for all other purposes gas should be furnished, at the option of the consumer, at certain specified rates, or "by special agreement," or by meter measurement not exceeding 5 cents per 1,000 cubic feet, provided that for 10 years the company might charge 50 per cent. more than such rates. Plaintiff applied for gas for his laundry, and entered into a written contract to pay 12 cents per 1,000 cubic feet meter measurement. Laundries were not mentioned in the schedule, and prior to plaintiff's application there were three in the city, which, as he knew, had by contract been paying the price mentioned in his contract, but the company had voluntarily reduced the price to 10 cents, and always charged plaintiff, and he paid without objection, 10 cents per 1,000 feet for gas used by him. The company charged manufacturers 7½ cents per 1,000 feet, under contracts providing that in cold weather the gas might be shut off on one hour's notice, and such contract was offered to plaintiff, but he refused to accept it. Held, that the contract with plaintiff was authorized by the ordinance, and he could not recover the excess paid by him over 7½ cents per 1,000 feet.—Logansport & W. V. Natural Gas Co. v. Ott, 65 N. E. 549, 30 Ind. App. 93.

[h] (Supp. 1903)

A gas company was permitted to use the streets of a city to distribute gas to consumers by virtue of a contract with the city, which fixed the maximum price of gas. Held that, if the city could not bring an action on its own account to enforce such contract, it could sue for the benefit of its inhabitants, as it was, in view of the contract, the trustee of an express trust, within the meaning of section 251, Burns' Rev. St. 1901, providing that the trustee of an express trust may sue without joining with him the person for whose benefit the action is prosecuted, and that "a trustee of an express trust, within the meaning of this section, shall be construed to include a person with whom or in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another."—Muncie Natural Gas Co. v. City of Muncie, 66 N. E. 436, 160 Ind. 97, 60 L. R. A. 822.

It is not necessary for a city to show that it has itself sustained damage, when it sues for the benefit of its inhabitants, but it is enough to show that the act complained of tends to injure the public of the municipality.—Id.

The record of the common council of a city, showing its rejection of a schedule of prices submitted by a gas company under its contract with the city, is proper substantive evidence of the fact of such rejection, where a certified copy of the resolution was served on the company.—Id.

Where a gas company is permitted to use the streets of a city to distribute gas to consumers by virtue of a contract with the city, which fixes the maximum price to be charged for gas, the city may maintain an action by way of injunction to enforce the contract.—Id.

A city ordinance permitting a gas company to use the streets for distributing gas to consumers, and accepted by the company, provided that for heating purposes the price of gas was not to exceed "three-quarters of the present current price of wood or coal for fuel," and that the cost of natural gas for lighting was not to exceed a like ratio to the cost of artificial gas. Then followed a provision that the schedule of charges for heating purposes to be submitted to the council "should not exceed the price above stated." Held, that a maximum scale of charges was clearly intended.—Id.

Under Act March 14, 1867 (Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 3623), providing that "the common council shall have exclusive power over the streets, highways, alleys and bridges within such city," the common council of a city, in permitting a gas company to use the streets for distributing gas to the inhabitants, may protect the latter from extortion by providing that the company shall not charge in excess of certain prices for its service.—Id.

While a gas company continues to use the streets of a city to distribute natural gas to consumers by virtue of a contract with the city which fixes the maximum price to be charged for gas, it cannot question the right of the city to enter into such contract, that being a matter for the state alone.—Id.

[1] (Sup. 1903)

Where, in an action for the price of natural gas, the complaint alleged a liability for gas furnished to three furnaces operated by defendant, at the rate of $30 a day, and claimed for additional gas alleged to have been surreptitiously used for three other furnaces, of the value of $20 per day, and that, as no meter had been furnished or used, plaintiff was unable to state the number of feet of gas furnished, a special finding that defendant used 19,737,000 cubic feet of gas during 32 days, worth 7 cents per 1,000 feet, on which judgment was rendered, without any finding that defendant used any gas wrongfully, or that it used gas not embraced within the terms of the contract, was erroneous, as not within the issues.—Palmer Steel & Iron Co. v. Heat, Light & Power Co., 66 N. E. 690, 160 Ind. 232.

[2] (Sup. 1907)

Where a franchise to supply gas is granted without restriction as to price, and is accepted and acted on, cities incorporated under the general law have no authority to regulate by ordinance the price to be charged, except so far as such power is conferred by the law of 1905, empowering cities to fix by contract or franchise the price of gas.—City of Richmond v. Richmond Natural Gas Co., 168 Ind. 82, 79 N. E. 1031.

The law of 1905, empowering cities to regulate the supply of gas and to fix, "by contract or franchise," the price thereof, does not empower a city to fix by ordinance the price at which a gas company, possessing a franchise, shall supply gas to its consumers, the ordinance not being a contract unless accepted by the company, and not a franchise because not granting to the company a new right or extending an existing one.—Id.

A municipal corporation has no power to fix by ordinance, the price at which a gas company shall supply gas to its consumers, unless a statute or Constitution delegates the power in express terms or by necessary implication.—Id.

A gas company contracted for the construction of a gas plant. The contractor sublet the contract for boring the gas wells. The subcontractor, after boring one well, laid pipe, which was furnished by the contractor, to get gas from the well to use in boring others. Part of the pipe so laid was taken up by the contractor, and the rest used in conducting gas to a town for the use of the company. Held that, though the plant had not been turned over to the company, it and both contractors were liable for injuries to others caused by the negligent manner in which the pipe was laid.—Lebanon Light, Heat & Power Co. v. Leap, 139 Ind. 443, 39 N. E. 57, 29 L. R. A. 342.

A natural gas company must so operate its pipes as to prevent the escape of gas therefrom, in such quantities as to become dangerous to life and property.—Alexandria Mining & Exploring Co. v. Irish, 44 N. E. 680, 16 Ind. App. 534.

[b] (App. 1901)

Where a person or corporation furnishing natural gas to customers negligently causes or permits the pressure to increase beyond the usual and accustomed pressure to the extent that it overheats stoves, etc., of its customers, without the latter's fault, so that damage results to the customers, such act is a positive wrong, and is therefore actionable.—Indiana Natural & Illuminating Gas Co. v. Long, 59 N. E. 410, 27 Ind. App. 219.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gas, § 14.

§ 18. — Defects, acts, or omissions causing injury.

[a] (App. 1891)

Where one furnishing natural gas to the house of plaintiff, without any notice to plaintiff, increased the pressure to double that at which it had been maintained, whereby the fires in plaintiff's house were so increased in intensity as to set fire to the house, the one supplying the gas was guilty of negligence.—Alexandria Mining & Exploring Co. v. Painter, 28 N. E. 113, 1 Ind. App. 587.

[b] (App. 1896)

Under Rev. St. 1894, § 7507 et seq., declaring it the duty of gas companies to conduct natural gas only through sound wrought or cast iron pipes and casings, tested to a pressure of at least 400 pounds to the square inch, and that they shall not convey natural gas through such pipes and casings at a pressure exceeding 300 pounds per square inch, failure to apply test at a pressure of more than 100 pounds is negligence, making the company liable for resulting injury.—Alexandria Mining & Exploring Co. v. Irish, 44 N. E. 680, 16 Ind. App. 534.

In an action against a natural gas company for injuries caused by an explosion, a contention that there was no charge of negligence in the breaking and bursting of the pipe, in the escaping of the gas, in the percolating of it through the earth, and of its finding its way beneath the building where the explosion occurred, is without merit, as the company was bound to know that such consequences would probably follow the use of the defective pipes, and the turning on of the gas at an excessive pressure.—Id.

[c] (Sup. 1897)

Where a gas company, in connecting a house with its main in a city, used a cracked elbow, which it was often called to repair, it was liable for injuries resulting from an explosion of gas leaking through such elbow, where it had failed to remove it, or to close the crack known to exist therein.—Richmond Gas Co. v. Baker, 45 N. E. 1049, 146 Ind. 600, 36 L. R. A. 683.

[d] (App. 1899)

In an action to recover loss by fire, the complaint alleged that defendant, a natural gas company, negligently failed to supply gas in a safe manner, in that it failed to control the pressure of the gas, and provided an insufficient regulator to control such pressure, whereby the stoves in the building in which defendant's office was located became red-hot, setting fire to the building, which fire spread to plaintiff's building, and consumed it. The evidence showed that the regulators were in good order, and were examined by defendant on the night in question; that defendant had a desk room in the office in which the fire originated; that the lessee of the room had a gas stove therein, which was not in safe condition to burn natural gas, and that the fire originated from its defective condition. Held, that the proximate cause of the loss was the defective condition of the stove, for which defendant was not responsible.—Westfield Gas & Milling Co. v. Hinshaw, 53 N. E. 1009, 22 Ind. App. 499.

[e] (App. 1900)

It is unlawful to lay a natural gas pipe on the surface of a highway, and the person maintaining it is liable for an injury resulting therefrom, even if the particular injury could not have been foreseen.—Indiana Natural & Illuminating Gas Co. v. McMath, 57 N. E. 593, 59 N. E. 287, 26 Ind. App. 154.

[f] (App. 1904)

A complaint showed that defendant was furnishing natural gas to plaintiffs, and that it negligently failed to regulate the flow into pipes leading to plaintiffs' stove, by reason of which the pressure and quantity were increased beyond that theretofore supplied to such an extent that the stove was overheated, setting fire to plaintiffs' property, without their fault. Held to state a cause of action.—Citizens' Gas & Oil Min. Co. v. Whipple, 69 N. E. 557, 32 Ind. App. 203.

[c] (App. 1906)

The manager of a public service natural gas company having turned on the gas at the street valve to let it into the pipes in the house, and then, on discovering that it was leaking somewhere, undertakes to turn it off, was negligent in not turning it off at the street valve, but instead turning it off at the house valve—thus allowing the gas escaping from a break in the pipe between such valves to get through the wall into the cellar, where an explosion occurred—though the plumbing had previously been tested, and then found to be secure.—Huntington Light & Fuel Co. v. Beaver, 73 N. E. 1002, 37 Ind. App. 4.

The negligence of the manager of a natural gas company, on discovering that gas was leaking in the pipes of a house, in turning the gas off at the house valve, instead of the street valve—thus allowing the gas to get into the cellar from the leak between the two valves—was a concurrent cause of an explosion occurring while the plumber employed by the owner of the house was searching for the leak; making the company liable for injury to the tenant, who was not at fault, though the agency acting on the gas to cause the explosion is not shown.—Id.

Where plumbing has been lately tested and found safe and a gas company turns on the gas but ascertains that there is a leak in the pipes, from which an explosion results, the failure of the company to turn off the gas constitutes negligence.—Id.

§ 19. — Contributory negligence.

[a] (Sup. 1894)

In an action for personal injuries caused by the explosion of natural gas, alleged to have been due to the negligent manner in which the pipe for conducting it was laid, evidence that before the explosion plaintiff had with other boys, though cautioned against doing so, meddled with the pipe after it was laid, so as to cause its joints to become loose, should be considered in determining the question of contributory negligence, it being claimed by the defenses that the accident was the result of such loosening of the joints.—Lebanon Light, Heat & Power Co. v. Leap, 139 Ind. 443, 39 N. E. 57, 29 L. R. A. 342.

[b] (Sup. 1896)

In an action for personal injuries caused by an explosion of natural gas, which, leaking from a sleeve in defendant's pipes, percolated through the ground and accumulated in plaintiff's cellar, 90 feet distant, where it appeared that plaintiff's house was supplied with gas by another company, the failure of the plaintiff to notify the defendant of the leak, even if she knew of its existence, did not constitute contributory negligence.—Consumers' Gas Trust Co. v. Perrego, 144 Ind. 350, 43 N. E. 306, 32 L. R. A. 146.

[c] (Sup. 1897)

Where a gas company, being notified of a leak in a pipe connecting a house with the main, sends one of its agents to repair the leak, and he assures the family that all is safe, and that the smell of gas in the house comes from a leak in the street, a member of the family remaining in the house is not negligent.—Richmond Gas Co. v. Baker, 146 Ind. 600, 45 N. E. 1049, 36 L. R. A. 683.

[d] (App. 1900)

A natural gas pipe on the surface of a highway had been there for years, and was covered by grass and weeds. Plaintiff, who was not a resident of the neighborhood, was injured by an explosion caused by taking a traction engine over the pipe in order to make a turn to enter a field on the other side of the highway. He sent one of his employes ahead to examine the way before he entered the field. The evidence was in conflict as to plaintiff's knowledge of existence of such gas pipe. Held sufficient to sustain a finding that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence.—Indiana Natural & Illuminating Gas Co. v. McMath, 57 N. E. 593, 59 N. E. 287, 26 Ind. App. 154.

[e] (App. 1903)

Where natural gas got into plaintiff's cellar from a leak in defendant's pipes, and its superintendent came to locate the cause, and plaintiff went into the cellar, at his request, to admit him, and remained no longer than necessary to point out the supposed leak, and he, without any warning to her, lighted a match, causing an explosion, which injured her, she was not guilty of contributory negligence.—Tip-ton Light, Heat & Power Co. v. Newcomer, 67 N. E. 548, 33 Ind. App. 42.

[f] (App. 1904)

It is not negligence to leave a natural gas stove burning at night, if proper care and caution are used in turning down and adjusting the key valve, and looking after the service pipes and appliances, so as to properly regulate the flow at a safe pressure.—Citizens' Gas & Oil Min. Co. v. Whipple, 60 N. E. 557, 32 Ind. App. 203.

§ 20. — Actions.

Expert testimony, see EVIDENCE, §§ 508, 513. For causing death, see DEATH, § 57.

[a] (Sup. 1891)

A complaint alleged that plaintiff was the owner of a dwelling house in the town of M., and that defendant so negligently laid its pipes in the streets of M. that the gas escaped therefrom into plaintiff's house, and exploded, setting fire to the house. Held, that the complaint showed that defendant owed plaintiff a duty, of which its negligence would be a breach, since the averment that defendant laid its pipes in the streets of M. showed that defendant owed it to the property owners of M. to use reasonable care.—Mississinewa Min. Co. v. Patton, 129 Ind. 472, 28 N. E. 1113, 23 Am. St. Rep. 203.

[b] (Supp. 1894)

Where the complaint in an action for injuries caused by an explosion of gas in defendant's street pipes alleged that plaintiff, prior to the injury, was a "strong, active, energetic boy of twelve years of age, in good health, and in full possession of all his faculties," and the evidence tended to support the allegation, it was error to charge that he was not guilty of contributory negligence if, at the time of the accident, he was a child of immature years, tempted by curiosity, and incapable of comprehending the danger of standing near the burning gas and touching or disturbing an exposed part of the pipe.—Lebanon Light, Heat & Power Co. v. Griffin, 139 Ind. 476, 39 N. E. 62.

[c] (Supp. 1895)

In an action for injuries resulting from an explosion of gas leaking from defendant gas companies' service pipe, mere evidence that the gas exploded was insufficient to show negligence, without showing what brought about the explosion.—McGahan v. Indianapolis Natural Gas Co., 37 N. E. 601, 140 Ind. 335, 29 L. R. A. 355, 40 Am. St. Rep. 199.

A complaint alleging negligence in defendant gas company's failure to turn off the gas supply for a tenement, after being directed so to do, that a defect in the pipe within the cellar might be located and remedied, and that plaintiff, a plumber, while searching for the defect, was injured by the explosion, does not show that the injury was the proximate result of defendant's negligence, as it will be presumed that there was an intervening responsible agency, for which defendant was not responsible.—Id.

[d] (App. 1896)

Where, in an action against a natural gas company for damages to plaintiff's house, caused by the explosion of gas which escaped from its pipe line through the ground into plaintiff's house, there is evidence that defendant was aware for several years of the leak, or could have discovered it by the exercise of reasonable care, a finding that defendant was negligent in the maintenance of its pipe line will not be disturbed.—Consumers' Gas Trust Co. v. Corbaley, 14 Ind. App. 549, 43 N. E. 237.

In an action against a gas company for the destruction of property from an explosion of natural gas, there being evidence tending to prove the existence of a leak for several years before the explosion, and that defendant knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have known, of the existence of the leak, there was no error in allowing plaintiff to prove the different kind of sleeves used in making connections at the time of the explosion, and whether the sleeve in question was commonly used when the connections were made, was immaterial.—Id.

[e] (App. 1896)

A complaint alleging that defendant natural gas company negligently and knowingly suffered its pipe lines to become rotten and incapable of retaining the gas, and continued to use them for conveying gas, knowing of such defective condition, and that, by reason of such carelessness and negligence, one of the pipes sprung a leak in front of the building in which plaintiff's intestate was employed, permitting the gas to escape into the earth, which it permeated, accumulating in said building, and exploding when it came in contact with fire, whereby the building was blown down, causing intestate to be buried under the debris, and to be burned by the fire immediately following the explosion, and to be injured, from the effects of which he died, charges the proximate cause of the death to be the negligence of defendant.—Alexandria Mining & Exploring Co. v. Irish, 44 N. E. 680, 16 Ind. App. 534.

A complaint for death caused by an explosion of gas escaping from the pipe line of a natural gas company need not allege that defendant knew gas was escaping from the broken pipes, and percolating through the ground to the place of explosion, or that it knew of the danger of an explosion, it being bound to know that gas would escape, and that there was danger of an explosion, if, as charged, it had knowledge of the imperfect condition of the pipes.—Id.

In an action against a natural gas company for death by explosion, evidence tending to show the condition of the pipe line prior to the accident was properly admitted on the theory that the condition of the pipe at the time of the examination, or when the defect was observed, was such as to indicate that the defects had existed prior to the time of the injury complained of.—Id.

Where a special verdict found that deceased was free from fault, and was lawfully occupying a building when the explosion occurred which resulted in his death, it was not necessary that it should find that the deceased had no knowledge of the dangerous, defective, or unsafe condition of the pipe line, and that it had burst and gas was escaping therefrom.—Id.

[f] (App. 1899)

A complaint against a natural gas company for negligently increasing the pressure, and setting fire to plaintiff's house, showed that plaintiff had control of all the gas appliances within her house, except the mixer; that the company changed, over plaintiff's protest, a No. 5 for a No. 7 mixer, but did not show that it was legally bound to furnish such a mixer as the consumer wished, or that the fire might not have occurred with either mixer; that the gas passed through the mixer into a burner, and in front of the mixer was a valve regulating the flow, and used to turn off the gas, but that the amount of the flow depended on the pressure, which was regulated by the company. It averred, further, that plaintiff had "carefully adjusted the valve to suit the pressure before her absence"; indicating that she knew the pressure was not uniform, and that it was controlled by the valve. Held not to show negligence of the company. —Ibach v. Huntington Light & Fuel Co., 55 N. E. 249, 23 Ind. App. 281.

[g] (App. 1899)

In an action against a natural gas company for negligently failing to control the pressure of gas, whereby a consumer's stove was overheated and his house burned, in a city where the pressure was uniform to all consumers, but each had "mixers" to regulate the quality of gas, and keys to regulate the pressure or cut it off altogether, it was error to admit proof that on the night in question certain other consumers noticed that their stoves were overheated; it not being shown that the mixers were the same as that of the consumer whose house was destroyed, nor that the keys were turned to admit the same pressure. —Indiana Natural & Illuminating Gas Co. v. New Hampshire Fire Ins. Co., 53 N. E. 485, 23 Ind. App. 208.

[h] (App. 1900)

A complaint is sufficient which states that defendant negligently maintained a natural gas pipe on the top of the ground on a public highway, and allowed it to be covered by grass and weeds, and that plaintiff, in the exercise of due care, without knowing of such pipe, while going from the highway into a field, with a traction engine, ran over and broke such pipe, and was injured by an explosion caused by the gas being ignited from the fire in the engine. —Indiana Natural & Illuminating Gas Co. v. McMath, 57 N. E. 593, 59 N. E. 287, 26 Ind. App. 154.

[i] (App. 1900)

Findings by the jury in an action for damages against a gas company that defendant's pipes were made of the approved kind of material, and such as were in general use, and that defendant maintained a sufficient force of men to keep its lines in repair, are not in irreconcilable conflict with a general verdict which finds that defendant had negligently allowed its lines to become rotten, decayed, and broken, and that the pipes were not properly inspected and repaired. —Indiana Natural & Illuminating Gas Co. v. Anthony, 58 N. E. 808, 26 Ind. App. 307.

[j] (App. 1901)

In an action against a gas company by a consumer for setting fire to his premises by too high pressure, plaintiff, in order to show that stoves other than the one causing the injury were overheated by the pressure, was not obliged to show that the conditions were precisely the same, but it was sufficient that he showed that they were substantially the same.

—Indiana Natural & Illuminating Gas Co. v. Long, 59 N. E. 410, 27 Ind. App. 219.

Evidence that certain stoves were supplied from the same low-pressure mains as plaintiff's stove, and with mixers furnished defendant, and were used in houses near plaintiff's residence, between which there was nothing to obstruct the flow of the gas, constituted a sufficient foundation to admit testimony that such stoves were overheated from high gas pressure on the night of the fire. —Id.

In an action against a gas company by a consumer for setting fire to his premises by too high pressure of the gas, an averment among other things, that the regulators were out of order, not being under the circumstances essential to plaintiff's cause of action, a special finding contrary to the allegation was not inconsistent with a general verdict for the plaintiff. —Id.

Plaintiff alleged that his house was destroyed by fire at night through failure of the defendant company, which furnished the gas, to diligently oversee the regulators for reducing the pressure of the gas, and that the regulators were out of repair. The jury, in answer to special interrogatories, found that the regulators were not out of repair, but that defendant had failed to employ a watchman to oversee the pressure in the nighttime. Held, that a motion by defendant for a judgment because a general verdict for plaintiff was inconsistent with the answers to the interrogatories was properly overruled, since the answer that defendant failed to oversee the regulators in the nighttime was sufficient to sustain the complaint. —Id.

[k] (App. 1902)

The complaint in an action for damages resulting from an explosion of natural gas alleged that defendant company's main from which the gas was alleged to have escaped was weak, and incapable of safely carrying gas, and that defendant continued to operate the main with knowledge thereof. Held, that evidence of leaks at other places in the pipes than that at which the accident occurred, and existing before the explosion, was admissible. —Logansport & W. V. Gas Co. v. Coate, 64 N. E. 638, 29 Ind. App. 209.

[l] (App. 1904)

In an action for damages alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence in regulating the flow of natural gas into the pipe leading to plaintiff's stove, any fact showing that defendant's gas system at the time in question was properly managed, that it was not negligent in any particular charged in the complaint, and that the plaintiffs were not without fault, could be shown under the general denial. —Citizens' Gas & Oil Min. Co. v. Whipple, 64 N. E. 557, 32 Ind. App. 203.

In an action for buildings burned by reason of negligence in furnishing natural gas fuel, there was evidence that the defendant was supplying gas at a ten-pound pressure, and that a pressure of about eight ounces was dangerous, and that, while there were regulators to control the pressure, they did not control it until it reached ten pounds; and an instruction declared that if, at the time of the burning, defendant was furnishing plaintiffs natural gas to be used for fuel in a stove in plaintiffs' office, and defendant suffered and permitted its regulator or regulators to be in such condition that it or they did not regulate or control the pressure, and the regulator admitted gas to the stove at a high and dangerous pressure, and plaintiffs' stove was thereby overheated, thereby causing the destruction and damages, without contributory negligence on the part of plaintiffs, defendant was liable. Held, that the instruction did not necessarily proceed on the theory that the regulators were out of order, but apparently on the theory that they may have been in proper repair, but were so adjusted as to permit a dangerous quantity of gas to pass through, and there was evidence to which the instruction was applicable.—Id.

In an action for buildings burned by reason of negligence in supplying natural gas thereto, instructions as to the use thereof as a fuel, declaring, in short, that it was a dangerous substance, and that the care must be commensurate with the danger, were not objectionable.—Id.

In an action for buildings burned by reason of negligence in supplying natural gas thereto, an instruction declared that if the jury found that defendant, when plaintiffs' property was burned, was furnishing plaintiffs natural gas for fuel for a valuable consideration, and negligently failed to provide appliances, etc., reasonably necessary to control the amount and pressure, and, on account of such failure, plaintiffs' property was destroyed by fire occasioned by an overheated stove, caused by failure to regulate the pressure, defendant would be liable for resulting damages, unless they found that plaintiffs were guilty of contributory negligence. Held, that this did not state what plaintiffs must prove to authorize a recovery, but stated only that certain conduct on defendant's part was actionable negligence.—Id.

In an action for buildings burned by reason of defendant's negligence in furnishing natural gas for fuel, an instruction that a corporation or person furnishing such gas "is bound to exercise such care, skill, and diligence in all its operations as is called for by the delicacy, difficulty, and dangerousness of the nature of its business, in order that injury may not be done to others; that is to say, if the danger, delicacy or difficulty is extraordinarily great, extraordinary skill and diligence is required"—Acid not erroneous, as being controlled by the concluding part thereof.—Id.

[m] (App. 1906)

Where, in an action by a tenant against a gas company for personal injuries resulting from an explosion of gas, the answers to interrogatories show that defendant's manager turned on the gas at the street valve and soon afterwards informed plaintiff that there was something wrong with the pipes under the house, that within a few minutes it was found gas was escaping into the house, that defendant's manager then told plaintiff that the gas would have to be turned off until the pipes under the house were repaired, and he turned the valve at the house, that the manager told plaintiff to allow no one to touch the house valve, and that when the pipes were repaired he would return and turn on the gas himself, and that plaintiff did not know that the gas had not been turned off at the street valve, and that a plumber employed by the owner of the building, without plaintiff's knowledge, undertook to repair the plumbing, and in doing so ignited the gas, thereby injuring plaintiff, such answers do not conflict with a general verdict for plaintiff.—Huntington Light & Fuel Co. v. Beaver, 37 Ind. App. 4, 73 N. E. 1002.

In an action against a gas company for personal injuries caused by an explosion of gas, answers to interrogatories showing that defendant negligently failed to turn off the gas after discovering a leak, and a failure by plaintiff to prove who ignited the gas which exploded and caused his injuries, do not overthrow a general verdict in favor of plaintiff.—Id.

[a] (App. 1905)

A complaint by a gas company, alleging that defendant opened plaintiff's pipe line, and, without permission, took its gas, is not in trespass, since natural gas extracted from the earth and contained in a pipe line is personal property.—*Crystal Ice & Cold Storage Co. v. SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gas, § 18.

§ 23. Offenses incident to production, supply, or use.

[a] (App. 1901)

Under Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 2312, declaring it unlawful for any person to turn off any valve belonging to any person furnishing gas to consumers without permission of the owner, the doing the act, without consent, is unlawful, without reference to the intent of the doer.—State v. Moore, 60 N. E. 955, 27 Ind. App. 83.

Where defendant executed to a company a gas and oil lease on his farm, and the company thereafter constructed a well thereon which produced gas which it piped to consumers without right to do so, and in violation of the contract, the defendant had no right to turn off the gas and prevent its wrongful use in view of Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 2312, forbidding any person to turn off gas or in any manner interfere with any gas line without permission from the person or corporation operating it.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1904)

In the early years following the discovery of natural gas, producers and consumers were prodigal in its use and reckless in its waste. Explorers who drilled a well that produced a small and unprofitable quantity of gas left it open, to go to another spot. Where oil and gas were struck in the same district, the gas was permitted to escape, while operations for oil proceeded. To stop this useless waste of gas and unnecessary contamination of the air, the Legislature enacted Acts 1893, p. 300, c. 36 (Burns' Ann. St. §§ 7510, 7511, 7512), which provides that it shall be unlawful for any one having control of a natural gas or oil well to allow the flow of gas or oil to escape into the open air, without being confined within such well, for a longer period than two days next after oil shall have been struck in the well, and that thereafter such gas or oil shall be safely and securely confined in such well, pipes, or other proper receptacle. Section 2 of the act provides that, on the abandonment of producing wells, the same shall be securely plugged in a specified manner, so as to effectually stop the escape of gas. Section 3, as amended by Acts 1899, p. 82, c. 61, declares any person violating any provision of the act guilty of a misdemeanor. Held, that the act requires three things to be done: (1) Oil or gas properly confined within two days next after it was struck; (2) oil or gas to be confined so long as it continued to flow; (3) abandoned wells to be plugged—and a failure to do any one of these acts is a separate and distinct offense, to which the penalty prescribed by section 3 applies.—Bailey v. State, 71 N. E. 655, 163 Ind. 165.

Burns' Ann. St. § 7510, requires persons having control of any gas or oil well to confine the same within proper pipes within two days next after gas or oil shall have been struck, and provides that thereafter such gas or oil shall be safely and securely confined in the well or other proper receptacle; and section 7512 makes a violation of any provision of the act a misdemeanor. An indictment in one count charged defendant with having allowed gas to escape into the open air, without being confined, for a longer period than two days after it was struck, and that he did "then and there" unlawfully fail to securely confine such gas in a well. The state's witness testified that he was at the well on the day when the gas was struck, and on each of the next five days, except one, and that on each visit the well was open and the gas escaping. Defendant's evidence was that gas was struck late Thursday evening, and that the well shot about noon on Saturday, and that the gas was immediately confined, and left confined until Monday morning, when the well was reopened for the purpose of doing further work upon it, during the progress of which the gas was allowed to escape for more than two days. Held, that, while if the state's evidence was true, defendant was guilty as charged, yet, under defendant's evidence, he was not guilty of the offense charged in the indictment, and the jury should have been instructed on that theory.—Id.

Where the evidence tended to show a purpose on the part of a husband to disclaim and relinquish all right in his deceased wife's estate in favor of her children, but it also appeared that he had parted with no possession, had made no delivery of the property, or assignment of his interest therein, to the alleged donees, and had made no declaration or promise which he was not at full liberty at any time to revoke, held, that the gift could not be sustained.—*Daubenspeck v. [a] (Sup. 1855)

Defendant executed and delivered an instrument under seal for the purposes expressed therein, "to show that I allow to give" a person named therein a specified sum at a certain time. Held, that this was a promise to give, and not enforceable.—Harmon v. James, 7 Ind. 263.

[b] (Sup. 1832)

Where a father and mother conveyed land to their son in consideration of an agreement by him, among other things, to pay a certain sum to a daughter one year after the death of the parents, the provision was not a gift inter vivos, but was a settlement of a portion of the estate upon the daughter which required no express acceptance on her part.—Henderson v. McDonald, 84 Ind. 149.

[c] (Sup. 1832)

An instrument: "This will certify that I do give to J. $100, the money to be paid as soon as my financial condition will allow; and, if I do not live to pay it, I wish it paid out of my estate,"—held to be a promise to make a gift.—Johnston v. Griest, 85 Ind. 503.

[d] (Sup. 1894)

A father conveyed an undivided two-thirds of a tract to his daughter as an advancement. Subsequently he conveyed another tract to his son also as an advancement. Subsequently he proposed that, if the daughter would reconvey the interest given her, he would cause the son to convey to her the land he had received, and, in order to induce her to make the exchange, he offered to pay her $200. The daughter accepted the terms, which were complied with. Subsequently she conveyed the same to the son, who reconveyed 80 acres of the tract to her paying her $100. Held, that the 80 acres came to the daughter by contract or purchase, and not by gift, and hence a mortgage executed by her and her husband to secure a debt due from her husband was valid under Acts 1879, p. 161, and Act May 31, 1852, § 5, relating to conveyances by married women.—Frazier v. Clifford, 94 Ind. 482.

[e] (Sup. 1891)

A writing signed and delivered recited: "I give to the trustees" etc., "the principal of a note for $700. * * * said sum of $700 to be given in trust to the said trustees when the said note falls due." The note was not delivered. Held, that there was no gift inter vivos, but merely an agreement to give when the note became due.—Gammon Theological Seminary v. Robbins, 128 Ind. 85, 27 N. E. 341, 12 L. R. A. 506.

[f] (App. 1893)

A will gave $200 to testatrix's niece. Prior thereto the niece had received money from the testatrix, for which she had receipted "as part of such amount as she may see fit to bequeath to me at her death." After executing the will, testatrix frequently stated that she intended her niece should have $200 out of her estate at her death. Held, that testatrix had before her death converted the payments evidenced by the receipts into absolute gifts.—Robbins v. Swain, 7 Ind. App. 486, 34 N. E. 670.

[a] (Sup. 1903)

A proper standard in case of a gift inter vivos is given by an instruction that one has mental capacity sufficient to make a valid conveyance if he understands what he is doing, the extent and value of his property, and recollects the property he is disposing of to the persons who are the objects of his bounty, and the manner in which he is distributing his property among them.—*Thorn v. The owner of real estate permitted, during his life, the use of it by the public as a burying ground, and expected that at some time a church would be erected thereon; but it was not shown that he intended to vest the title in any denomination exclusively. Held, that a church organization, not in existence until after the death of the owner, could not recover the real estate of the heirs or their grantees or compel a conveyance of the same to such organization.—*Hicks v. [a] (Sup. 1861)

Delivery is necessary to pass the title to a chattel by gift; but if, at the time, the donee is in possession as the donor's agent, he need not surrender it for a redelivery. If the donor relinquishes all dominion and control, and recognizes the donee's possession as being in his own right, and the donee so accepts and retains possession with the donor's consent, it is sufficient.—Tenbrook v. Brown, 17 Ind. 410.

§ 21. — To third person for donee.

[a] (Sup. 1839)

A., on his deathbed and about three days before he died, delivered to B. a certain sum of money for his (A.'s) wife, which B. said he would send to her. Held, that a suit for the money could not be sustained on these facts by the administrator of A. against B.—McGillivuddy v. Cook, 5 Blackf. 170.

[b] (Sup. 1893)

Where one clearly and intelligently manifests an intention to make a gift of personal property to another, and in consummation of his intention makes such a delivery to a third person, for the use of the intended donee, as he is then capable of making, considering the character and situation of the property, a person to whom delivery is thus made will be presumed, in the absence of countervailing circumstances, to take the property as trustee of the intended donee, and not merely as the agent of the donor.—Martin v. McCullough, 34 N. E. 819, 136 Ind. 331.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gifts, § 36.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 1198.

§ 22. — Constructive delivery.

[a] (Sup. 1891)

While a delivery is necessary to the validity of a gift, it is not essential that there should always be a manual delivery of the thing given, but it will be sufficient if the delivery is as complete as the thing and circumstances of the parties will permit.—Gammon Theological Seminary v. Robbins, 27 N. E. 341, 128 Ind. 85, 12 L. R. A. 506.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gifts, § 37.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 1199.

§ 25. Parol gift of land.

[a] (Sup. 1834)

A gift by parol of real estate, the donee being in possession and having made improvements, vests in the donee no interest in the property which a court of law or equity can recognize.—Adamson v. Lamb, 3 Blackf. 446.

A father made a parol gift of real estate to his son and the son went into possession. With the son's consent, the father sold the real estate to a third person, promising his son to appropriate part of the purchase money to payment of a note held by the father against the son and pay the balance to the son. The purchase money was received by the father, and he said he considered the note paid, and that he would give it up and pay the balance to his son, but he died without again seeing his son. Held, that these facts were no defense to an action on the note brought against the son by his father's administrator.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1834)

A parol gift of land may be so far executed that the donee, who has been put into possession and has made expenditures for lasting improvements, will be entitled to a decree for a conveyance.—Drum v. Stevens, 94 Ind. 181.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gifts, §§ 43-48.

§ 30. Gifts of deposits in bank.

[a] (Sup. 1867)

A. promised to give a bank certificate to B. Afterwards B. found the certificate in a room usually occupied by him and A. Held, that this was not sufficient to show a delivery of the certificate.—Buschian v. Hughart's Adm'r, 28 Ind. 449.

[b] (APP. 1902)

A gift of a portion of a deposit in a savings bank by the execution by the donor of a written form furnished by the bank, which directs the bank at the donor's death to pay the sum to the donee, and to enter the same in the donor's deposit book, which is given into the possession of the donee, is a sufficient relinquishment of right and title to the chose in action to pass title thereto, and renders it a valid gift inter vivos, as the clause relative to the death of the donor does not prevent the gift from taking effect at once, but only suspends the enjoyment thereof.—Jacobs v. Jolley, 62 N. E. 1028, 29 Ind. App. 25.

The return of the book to the donor to enable her to draw her portion of the deposit will not invalidate the gift.—Id.

The fact that the donor retains a portion of her deposit, which is evidenced in the deposit book delivered the donee, does not invalidate the gift, as there is as complete a transfer of possession of the portion thereof constituting the subject of the gift as it is capable of.—Id.

Where the donor, after the gift of a portion of her bank deposit and the delivery of the book to the donee, states to the latter, "You already have the bank book, and I give it all to you," it is sufficient to constitute a valid gift of the entire deposit, without the formality of a return of the bank book to the donor and its redelivery to the donee.—Id.

[c] (APP. 1903)

After visiting her son, a mother deposited money in a savings bank for him and in his name, which was placed to his credit on the books, and a passbook in the son's name was issued, which the mother retained. Held a sufficient delivery to a third person, in trust for the son, to constitute a gift inter vivos.—Goelz v. People's Sav. Bank, 67 N. E. 232, 31 Ind. App. 67.

A mother made a will, leaving her property to her three daughters. Later, after returning from a visit to her son, she deposited a sum in a savings bank for him and in his name, which was placed to his credit on the books. A passbook was issued in the son's name, and given to the mother, who retained it. A year later she sent the son a written order for him to sign, authorizing the payment of the money to either of them, which he returned unsigned. The mother stated to third persons that she had deposited the money for her son. Held, that there was a gratuitous and adequate surrender of dominion by the donor to constitute a gift inter vivos.—Id.

Where a completely executed gift of money deposited in a savings bank is shown, it is immaterial that the deposit book had not been delivered to the donee, but remained in the donor's possession.—Id.

[d] (App. 1909)

Depositing money to be credited to another and the delivery of the passbook to the other passes title to him.—Second Nat. Bank v. Gibboney, 43 Ind. App. 492, 87 N. E. 1064.

§ 31. Gifts of negotiable instruments.

Gift of donor's note or check, see post, § 32.

[a] (Sup. 1863)

A mother, having sold land, purchased with her share in her former husband's estate, had notes for part of the purchase money made payable to her infant son, and deposited them with his father to keep for him. On the father's decease, the mother, being his executrix, came into possession of such notes, and delivered them to the maker in part payment for land purchased of him by her in her individual name. Held, in an action by the son's guardian against her for the amount of the notes, that the gift to her son was operative, and a verdict and judgment in his favor were proper.—Rinker v. Rinker, 20 Ind. 185.

A mother, having sold her real estate, purchased with part of her share in her former husband's estate, had notes for part of the purchase money made payable to her infant son, and deposited them with his father to keep for him. Upon the father's death, the mother, being his executrix, came into possession of these notes, and delivered them up to the maker in part payment for land purchased from him by her in her own individual name. The son, by his guardian, sued her for the amount of the notes. Held that, even if she really committed a breach of trust in regard to the estate of her former husband in giving the notes to her son, yet she could not question the title of her donee.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1876)

A. delivered certain United States bonds and money to B., with directions for the latter to give the same to certain of his children upon his death. B. received them and agreed to execute the trust. Held, that this was a sufficient delivery to constitute a gift inter vivos.—Wyble v. McPheters, 52 Ind. 393.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

A note from a son to his father, given under an agreement that the son would apply the interest, and so much of the principal as was necessary, to the father's support during his life and after his death pay the balance to the son's sisters, is not an executed gift to them during the father's life; and on his death the note passes for collection to his administrator as a part of the assets of his estate.—Foglesong v. Wickard, 75 Ind. 258.

[d] (Sup. 1883)

S. delivered notes which she owned to F., directing him to use them and support her out of the proceeds, and on her death to pay her debts, erect a monument to her, and give the balance to his wife. S. reiterated her instructions the day before her death, about two years later. Held, that there was no gift to F. or his wife of such notes, or any part of them.—Smith v. Ferguson, 90 Ind. 229, 46 Am. Rep. 216.

Delivery of a note to a third person for future delivery to the donee does not constitute a valid gift inter vivos, as the authority to deliver may be revoked.—Id.

[e] (Sup. 1890)

The gift of a promissory note is not valid without delivery.—Bingham v. Stage, 123 Ind. 281, 23 N. E. 756.

A gift of a note may be made by simple delivery, and without writing.—Id.

[f] (Sup. 1893)

A father, desirous of making an antemortem settlement of all his notes and bonds on his children delivered the property to a son with direction to divide it equally among the children. All the notes and bonds regarded as solvent were accordingly distributed among the children, and the balance was by mutual consent of the children left in the son's hands for collection and subsequent distribution. Held that, by thus exercising dominion over the property, the children not only signified an acceptance of the gift, but constituted the son their agent for the collection and distribution of the balance, thus completing the delivery to them of the undistributed portion, and that, therefore, the death of the father before final distribution did not defeat the gift, nor revoke the son's authority to collect and distribute.—Martin v. McCullough, 136 Ind. 331, 34 N. E. 819.

[g] (App. 1896)

The fact that a note was payable in a bank did not render it an executed gift where it was made without consideration.—Mader v. Cool, 42 N. E. 945, 14 Ind. App. 299, 56 Am. St. Rep. 304.

§ 32. Gifts of donor's note or check.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

Where a testator gives a note simply to rectify an inequality in the provisions of his will in favor of the payee, this is not a sufficient consideration.—West v. Cavin, 74 Ind. 265.

[b] (App. 1906)

Where one delivered to plaintiff a check on a bank, which merely ordered the bank to pay plaintiff a certain sum of money, the check being delivered as a gift, and the bank refused payment, plaintiff had no cause of action against the drawer.—Roney v. Dunleary, 39 Ind. App. 108, 79 N. E. 398.

§ 33. Forgiveness of debt of donee.

[a] (Sup. 1876)

A mortgage drawn payable to the mortgagee when called for by him, and to no one else, held not enforceable after death of the mortgagee, unless upon proof of a demand made by him during his lifetime. Without such a demand, the mortgage debt became a gift.—Sebrell v. Couch, 55 Ind. 122.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 1208.

§ 34. Qualified or conditional gifts.

[a] (Sup. 1870)

A soldier, while at home on furlough, deposited a certain sum with a friend, who gave him a written agreement to return the money if the soldier should return alive; but, if he should die, then the money was to be paid to the soldier's infant sister. The soldier died, leaving the sister and a brother his only heirs. Held, that the brother could not maintain a suit against his sister for one-half of the money received by her.—Baker v. Williams, 34 Ind. 547.

[b] (Sup. 1872)

One who had entered the military service during the late war, a short time before starting for the army, in which he died, said to a friend, in regard to a gun which he had loaned to that friend, "Well, if I never return, you may keep the gun as a present from me." Upon a suit by his administrator for the recovery of the gun, held, that the facts did not make a gift inter vivos.—Smith v. Dorsey, 38 Ind. 451, 10 Am. Rep. 118.

§ 35. — Fraud, duress, and undue influence.

[a] (App. 1892)

Gifts obtained by fraud or imposition, as a rule, are voidable only, and by one specially injured.—Norris v. Norris, 3 Ind. App. 500, 28 N. E. 1014.

[b] (Sup. 1886)

In the absence of proof of any actual undue influence, the fact that a mother, 91 years of age, but of sound mind except as weakened by years, deeded her farm to an unmarried son, who had always lived at home, and had been most kind and attentive to her wants in her declining years, does not raise the presumption that undue influence or fraud was practiced in inducing the execution of the deed, so as to warrant its being set aside.—Slayback v. Witt, 50 N. E. 389, 151 Ind. 376.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gifts, § 74.

§ 41. Revocation and rescission.

[a] (Sup. 1898)

A mother deeded her son all her property, in consideration that he should pay her grandchildren $100 each when they became of age, reserving a life estate therein for herself. She also reserved the right to revoke the deed, but by mistake this was not expressed in the deed. The son, on her demand, reconveyed the property in consideration that he should not be required to pay the sums charged on the land. Held, that the grandchildren acquired no vested interest in the gift, as the deed was revocable in equity.—Richards v. Reeves, 40 N. E. 348, 149 Ind. 427.

§ 43. — As to parties.

[a] (Sup. 1882)

The plaintiff, in 1834, laid out a town on his own land, and on the recorded plat thereof he marked one lot "J. P.'s tanyard lot," and in the recorded notes and references were "Lot No. 4, in Square No. 1, is donated by M. H., Jr., to J. P. for the purpose of erecting a tanyard on it." Held, that under Rev. St. 1831, p. 530, § 2, which provided that every donation, noted as such on the plat of the town, should be considered as a general warranty to the donee for his use for the purposes intended by the donor, this had the force of a general warranty of the lot to the said J. P. for the purpose declared.—Hunt v. Beeson, 18 Ind. 380.

[b] (App. 1898)

Where one buys a piano to be paid for in monthly installments, the title to remain in vendor until final payment, and gives it to another before the price is fully paid, he is estopped, as to the donee, from afterwards claiming the property, on the ground that when he made the gift he had no title to the property, and, after he has paid all the installments, the title becomes absolute in the donee.—Fredericks v. Sault, 49 N. E. 909, 19 Ind. App. 604.

A. gave a mare with foal to B., stipulating that, if she should prove to be with foal, the colt was to be A.'s. B. sold the mare to C. without informing him of the reservation of the colt by A. Held, that the reservation of the colt by A. was a valid one.—Wolf v. Esteb, 7 Ind. 448.

§ 47. — Presumptions and burden of proof.

[a] (Sup. 1861)

In an action by a distributee of a testator to obtain a distribution of certain personal property claimed by the testator's son by gift from his father during his lifetime, fraud, undue influence, or unfair dealing will not be presumed because of the relationship existing between the donor and the donee, but must be proved by the plaintiff alleging the same.—Tenbrook v. Brown, 17 Ind. 410.

[b] (App. 1892)

Where a son was under obligation to pay his mother $300 annually, which was a lien on certain land at the time the mother contracted to release the land from the lien in consideration of a payment by the son of $50 annually, and it was claimed that the release constituted a gift inter vivos from the mother to the son, the burden was on those claiming the benefit thereof to establish that the same was freely executed without fraud or undue influence on the son's part.—Henes v. Henes, 31 N. E. 832, 5 Ind. App. 100.

[c] (Sup. 1896)

Notwithstanding a donor is insane, the burden is on one challenging his capacity to make a gift to prove the absence of such capacity.—Tegarden v. Lewis, 145 Ind. 98, 4 N. E. 1047, 44 N. E. 9.

The relation of parent and child as to presumption of fraud and the onus of proof rebut the same in business transactions between them does not stand upon the same footing as the relation of trustee and cestui quod trust, guardian and ward, attorney and client, principal and agent, and the like relations.—Id.

The burden of showing absence of undue influence is not cast on a daughter and her husband, to whom her father gave property when he was old, weak, and childish, because at the time he was making his home with them and depended on them for such home and for personal care and attention, and depended on the son-in-law to go with him and assist him in transacting all his financial business; there being no finding that they exercised any persuasion to obtain the gift, and it not appearing that he had no other property, or that he, in giving it, dealt unjustly with his other children.—Id.

[d] (App. 1903)

Where a mother deposits cash in a savings bank as a gift to her son, his acceptance will be presumed.—Goetz v. People's Sav. Bank, 100 N. E. 232, 31 Ind. App. 67.

§ 49. — Weight and sufficiency.

[a] (Sup. 1856)

The commencement of a suit for the recovery and enforcement of a note and mortgage by the mortgagee, who claims as a donee, is sufficient evidence of her acceptance of the gift.—Mallett v. Page, 8 Ind. 304.

[b] (App. 1905)

The mother repeatedly asserted that she intended the deposit as a gift, and the son told his own daughter that the mother had given him the money. Later he refused to sign an order authorizing his mother to withdraw and in a suit after his mother's death, in which a creditor sought to reach the money, he hired counsel and defended the action. Held to show a sufficient acceptance to constitute a gift inter vivos.

§ 51. Instructions.

[a] (Sup. 1861)

In a suit by a distributee for personal property of the testator claimed by the testator's son to have been given to him by his father in his lifetime, the plaintiff asked an instruction that if the son held the property as his father's agent prior to the time of the gift claimed, and there was no apparent change of ownership, there was no valid gift. For the latter words the court substituted, "It is evidence tending to prove that there was no valid gift." Held, that the charge as asked was properly refused, and that as given it was as favorable to the plaintiff as he could legally claim.—Tenbrook v. Brown, 17 Ind. 410.

II. CAUSA MORTIS.

Deposit of deed for delivery on death of grantor, see DEEDS, § 61.

§ 53. Requisites in general.

[a] (Sup. 1890)

A gift causa mortis is consummated when a person in peril of death, and under the apprehension of approaching dissolution from an existing disorder, delivers or causes to be delivered, to another, or affords the other the means of obtaining possession of any personal goods for his own use upon the express or implied condition that, in case the donor shall be delivered from the peril of death, the gift shall be defeated.—Devol v. Dye, 24 N. E. 246, 123 Ind. 321 7 L. R. A. 439.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gifts, § 104.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 1228, 1229.

§ 54. Gifts causa mortis distinguished from other transactions.

Will distinguished from gift causa mortis, see WILLS, § 90.

[a] (Sup. 1882)

Where a father and mother conveyed land to their son in consideration of an agreement by him, among other things, to pay a certain sum to a daughter one year after the death of the parents, the provision was not a donation causa mortis, but was a settlement of a portion of the estate upon the daughter which required no express acceptance on her part.—Henderson v. McDonald, 84 Ind. 149.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gifts, §§ 119-121.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 1230.

§ 55. — Gifts inter vivos.

[a] (Sup. 1890)

The chief distinction between gifts inter vivos and those causa mortis is that, while the former are consummated by delivery, the title to the property is irrevocably vested, while in the latter the title is ambulatory and inchoate until the death of the donor occurs.—Devol v. Dye, 24 N. E. 246, 123 Ind. 321, 7 L. R. A. 439.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gifts, § 120.

§ 59. Expectation of death.

[a] (Sup. 1872)

One who had entered the military service during the late war, a short time before starting for the army, in which he died, said to a friend, in regard to a gun which he had loaned to that friend, "Well, if I never return, you may keep the gun as a present from me." Held, that the facts did not make a gift causa mortis, as the gift was not made under immediate apprehension of death.—Smith v. Dorsey, 38 Ind. 451, 10 Am. Rep. 118.

[b] (Sup. 1894)

A transfer of land does not constitute a gift causa mortis, in the absence of evidence that at the time it was made decedent was in expectation or apprehension of death.—Brunson v. Henry, 140 Ind. 455, 39 N. E. 256.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

§ 62. Delivery in general.

[a] (Sup. 1890)

Before his death, deceased had placed $2,000 in gold coin in a sack, in a bank vault, marked: "$2,000. This belongs to P. G. D." Three days before his death, with knowledge of its probability, deceased declared that it had always been his purpose to give D. $5,000. He then directed the bank cashier to whom he had delivered the keys to his drawer in the vault, to place $3,000 more in another sack, to be similarly marked, and to place $1,000 in currency in an envelope for another person, to be marked with his name. When informed that his directions had been fulfilled, deceased replied approvingly. Held a sufficient delivery of the property to the cashier, as trustee for the donees, to constitute a valid gift causa mortis.—Devol v. Dye, 123 Ind. 321, 24 N. E. 246, 7 L. R. A. 439.

In the case of gifts causa mortis, the delivery need not be made to the donee personally, but may be made to another as his agent or trustee. A delivery thus made is as effectual as though it had been made directly to the donee.—Id.

[b] (App. 1899)

A wife, on her deathbed, called for her nephew, and, being told he was not present, informed her husband that she gave the nephew all her property, and directed him to deliver the nephew all her property, which he agreed to do. There was no manual delivery of the property, it being already in the husband's possession. Held to be a sufficient delivery of a gift causa mortis.—Caylor v. Caylor's Estate, 52 N. E. 465, 22 Ind. App. 666, 72 Am. St. Rep. 331.

§ 64. Gifts of rights of action in general.

[a] (Sup. 1883)

Delivery of a note to a third person for future delivery to the donee, where the donor is not in apprehension of death, does not constitute a valid gift causa mortis, although subsequently the donor, while in apprehension of death, charges such third person to carry out all previous instructions.—Smith v. Ferguson, 90 Ind. 229, 46 Am. Rep. 216.

§ 2. Elements and incidents.

[a] (Sup. 1883)

The good will is merely an incident of other property, and as a general rule is not an incident of a stock of merchandise, but of locality of the storeroom or place of business.—Rawson v. Pratt, 91 Ind. 9.

§ 5. — Requisites and validity.

[a] (Sup. 1879)

The good will of a business, like a trademark, is a species of property subject to sale by the proprietor, and which may be sold by order of court.—Smock v. Pierson, 68 Ind. 403, 34 Am. Rep. 269.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Good Will, § 2.

§ 6. — Rights and liabilities of parties.

[a] (Sup. 1885)

Where the seller of a stock of goods agrees with the buyers not to engage in a competing business for a certain time, the contract is binding, although the buyer does not continue the business in the same premises as occupied by the seller.—Johnson v. Gwinn, 100 Ind. 466.

[b] (Sup. 1896)

A bill of sale of a stock of goods recite that the vendor sells certain goods for a certain sum paid, and that the vendor will not engage in the same business within a certain distance of his former place of business. Held, that the consideration paid was not only for the goods, but also for the agreement not to engage in the business.—Eisel v. Hayes, 141 Ind. 41, 40 N. E. 119.

[c] (App. 1896)

In an action for breach of a contract whereby defendants sold their house-moving appliances to plaintiff, together with the good will of the business, and agreed not to compete with him thereafter in said occupation at that place, a finding that within a few days after the sale defendants, in violation of their contract, bought new tools and went into competition with plaintiff for work in said business, and performed contracts for house moving, and were taking contracts and moving houses in said city up to date, etc., is sufficient to show a breach of contract.—Van Valkenburgh v. Dean (Ind. App.) 44 N. E. 652, 15 Ind. App. 693.

In such action it will be presumed, in the absence of any finding to the contrary, that plaintiff continued to conduct his business after his purchase from defendants, and did not voluntarily abandon it.—Id.

another printing plant owned by them, and the wife commenced the publication of two newspapers, instead of the two which had been formerly printed on the mortgaged machinery; the papers being sent to the subscribers of the old ones. Previously the property covered by the mortgage was separated from the other property and placed in a different building. Held, that, though the mortgage included the good will of the business, the mortgagee could not enjoin the wife from carrying on the business in her name and with her property, with her husband as agent.—*Vinall v. The measure of damages for a breach of a contract of sale of the good will of a business, where the actual sales were represented to be about $30,000 annually, and the sales were in fact only $15,000 per year, is the difference between the rental value of a store where the annual sales of such business amount to $30,000, and of a store where such annual sales are only $15,000.—*Rawson v. [a] (Sup. 1882)

Act April 15, 1881, providing a new mode for selecting grand jurors, did not have the effect of terminating the existence and powers of grand juries then serving in courts in session at the time when the act took effect.—Williams v. State ex rel. Gudge, 86 Ind. 400.

Act April 15, 1881, providing a new mode for selecting grand jurors, and repealing "all laws within the purview of this act, and inconsistent with it," did not repeal 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 419, § 12, providing that no plea in abatement or other objection shall be taken to any grand jury duly charged and sworn for any alleged irregularity in their selection, unless such irregularity in the opinion of the court amounts to corruption, in which case such plea or objection shall be received.—Id.

§ 3. Number of jurors.

Number necessary to finding, see INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION, § 10.

[a] (Sup. 1824)

By statute the names of 18 jurors must be drawn from the box to be summoned as grand jurors. The jury, however, when convened, may consist of any smaller number not less than 12.—Hudson v. State, 1 Blackf. 317.

[b] (Sup. 1853)

It is no objection to an indictment that one of the grand jury was discharged, and another sworn and sent to the grand jury room in his stead, when there were still 14 grand jurors left, and it is not shown that the juror sworn in the place of the one discharged acted with the others in finding the indictment.—State v. Wingate, 4 Ind. 103.

[c] (Sup. 1875)

A grand jury of 12 persons selected at the first regular session of the board of county commissioners in 1875, in accordance with the law then in force, was the legal grand jury at the July term, 1875, of the criminal circuit court of the county, and authorized to find an indictment after the taking effect of Act March 13, 1875 (Acts 1875, Sp. Sess. p. 54), providing that the number of grand jurors shall be composed of 6 residents of the county, etc.; the proviso of such act that it shall not be construed to affect in any way pending indictments, or indictments which may be found by any grand jury "before this act takes effect," mean-

[d] (Sup. 1875)

Where no grand jury had been selected by the board of county commissioners for a term of criminal circuit court commencing on the first Monday of January, 1876, and the grand jury selected by the board at their December session in 1874 for the term commencing on the first Monday of July, 1875, and, continuing six months, had been finally discharged by the court on December 16, 1875, and the court on the first day of the January term, 1876, caused a grand jury to be selected by the sheriff and impaneled, the grand jury so selected properly consisted of 12 men as a grand jury consisting of six men could not be selected under the act of 1875 until the March session of the board of county commissioners, and until that time the number was regulated by former laws.—State v. Myers, 51 Ind. 145.

[e] (Sup. 1876)

Act March 4, 1852, § 9 (2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 417), "to limit the number of grand jurors," etc., is merely directory, and for the purpose of getting a grand jury into court.—Hughes v. State, 54 Ind. 95.

[f] (Sup. 1877)

Act March 13, 1875, regulating the number of grand jurors and the manner of their selection, did not go into effect until the regular decision of the board of commissioners of the county in March, 1876; and until that time a legal grand jury of the county consisted of 12 men.—Melers v. State, 56 Ind. 336.

Waiver of objections, see post, § 19.

[a] (Sup. 1839)

A person selected as a talesman to serve on a grand jury must be either a freeholder or householder.—State v. Herndon, 5 Blackf. 75.

If a grand juror have not all the qualifications required by statute, it is a good cause of challenge, or the defendant, before issue joined, may plead the objection in avoidance.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1879)

Under 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 417, note 1, reputable householders, as such, who are not also reputable freeholders of the county, are not competent grand jurors, either as members of the regular panel or as talesmen.—Wills v. State, 69 Ind. 286.

[c] (Sup. 1882)

Section 2216, Rev. St. 1881, does not require that grand jurors returning an indictment for a crime committed before the act of 1881 took effect shall have the qualifications required by the law in force at the date of the offense.—Powers v. State, 87 Ind. 144.

§ 6. Exemptions from service.

[a] (Sup. 1826)

§ 7. Authority to select and summon jurors.

[a] (Sup. 1905)

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 1443, authorizing the circuit court to hold an adjourned term where there is business pending at the close of the regular term for the transaction of business during the pleasure of the court and while the business requires it, and section 1717b, authorizing the judge of a circuit court to issue a venire for a grand jury to sit in any county whenever he deems it necessary, authorize a circuit judge to impanel a grand jury at an adjourned term.—Donabue v. State, 74 N. E. 906, 165 Ind. 148.

[b] (Sup. 1905)

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 1449, authorizes the appointment of jury commissioners, and section 1456 disqualifies persons interested in a cause pending in the county court, triable by jury, during the calendar year succeeding his appointment. Sections 1450 and 1452 provide for the preparation of jury lists and the drawing of grand and petit juries, and section 1457 provides a per diem compensation for such commissioners. Held that, where a jury commissioner was appointed in good faith in the belief that he was qualified, he was a de facto officer, whose acts were not subject to collateral attack by plea in abatement to an indictment found by a grand jury drawn by him on the ground that he was disqualified to serve.—State v. Sutherland, 75 N. E. 642, 165 Ind. 339.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gr. Jury, §§ 2, 16, 21.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 1295, 1314.

§ 8. Selection of jurors.

[a] (Sup. 1840)

The record of the board of county commissioners must show that grand jurors finding a certain indictment were selected according to the provisions of the statute, or the indictment will be quashed.—State v. Conner, 5 Blackf. 325.

[b] (Sup. 1843)

An indictment alleged that the defendant, being a justice of the peace, solemnized a marriage, and neglected to file in the clerk's office, for more than three months thereafter, a certificate of the marriage. It was pleaded in abatement that the names of the grand jurors who found the indictment were not selected by the county board, at their May session, from the list of taxable persons. Held, that the indictment was good, and the plea bad, since the jurors need not be selected as contended by defendant.—State v. Cain, 6 Blackf. 422.

[c] (Sup. 1876)

The fact that the grand jury, selected under 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 417, were selected after the commencement of the term of the circuit court at which the indictment was found, is not fatal to the indictment.—Kelley v. State, 53 Ind. 311.

[d] (Sup. 1877)

Irregularity, not amounting to corruption, in the selection or reassembling of a grand jury is not ground for a plea in abatement of their indictment.—Sater v. State, 56 Ind. 378; Dorman v. Same, Id. 454.

[e] (Sup. 1882)

Act April 15, 1881, provided a new mode of selecting grand jurors by commissioners. All laws within the purview of the act, and inconsistent with it, were declared repealed. Held, that section 12 of the law formerly in force was not repealed, because neither within the purview of, nor inconsistent with, the act of 1881, and that therefore no objection could be taken to a grand jury, duly charged and sworn, for any irregularity in their selection, short of corruption.—Williams v. State ex rel. Gudgel, 86 Ind. 400.

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gr. Jury, §§ 16-20;

27 CENT. DIG. Ind. & Inf. § 55.

§ 9. Summoning jurors in general.

[a] (Sup. 1875)

Where no grand jury had been selected by the board of county commissioners for a term of criminal circuit court, commencing on the first Monday of January, 1876, and the grand jury selected by the board at their December session in 1874, for the term commencing on the first Monday of July, 1875, and continuing six months, had been finally discharged by the court on December 16, 1875, it was proper for the court, on the first day of the January term, 1876, to cause a grand jury to be selected by the sheriff, and impaneled.—State v. Myers, 51 Ind. 145.

[b] (Sup. 1876)

Where grand jurors regularly selected are returned into court on a day subsequent to the first day of the term for which they were selected on a venire that day issued for them, or without the issuing or service of the venire they appear at such time and are impaneled, sworn, and charged, such want of venire and service thereof will not sustain a plea in abatement to an indictment found by such grand jurors.—Hughes v. State, 54 Ind. 95.

If a grand jury regularly selected, without a venire having been issued, without being summoned, and without any notice whatever, is returned into court, impaneled, sworn, and charged, their subsequent proceedings would not be irregular merely because they had not been summoned according to a directory statute.—Id.

[c] (Sup. 1877)

Where a grand jury has been illegally impaneled at the beginning of the term, the court may, at any time during the term, discharge it, and impanel another according to law.—Meiers v. State, 56 Ind. 336.

[d] (Sup. 1881)

The restriction of Act March 10, 1873 (2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 418), against the clerk issuing, without an order of the judge, a venire for the attendance of grand jurors already properly chosen by the county board, does not deprive the court of the power to organize the panel from those in attendance, though they have come in response to a summons issued without the required order.—Hess v. State, 73 Ind. 537.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gr. Jury, §§ 21-26.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 1311-1315; notes, 27 L. R. A. 779, 780, 783.

§ 11. Excusing and discharging jurors.

[a] (Sup. 1891)

When, under Rev. St. § 1640, authorizing courts to excuse jurors for certain reasons, a grand juror is excused, and the record does not show the reason, it will be presumed to be for one of the grounds prescribed by the statute.—Burrell v. State, 129 Ind. 200, 28 N. E. 699.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gr. Jury, §§ 28, 29.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 1331, 1332.

§ 12. Summoning talesmen.

[a] (Sup. 1875)

In March, 1874, the board of county commissioners selected two grand juries, one for the March term of 1874, and one for the June term of the same year, but selected none for the October term of 1874, or for the January term of 1875. At the October term of 1874, on order of court that the grand jury be summoned to appear, the grand jury selected for the June term of 1875 assembled for the January term of 1875. Held, that the order for January, 1875, was sufficient, under 2 Gav. & H. St. p. 433, § 10, providing that a panel of grand jurors may be filled in whole or in part when necessary, by summoning the requisite number of freeholders or householders of the proper county under the direction of the court, unless in consequence of delay in filling the panel, or for other satisfactory reasons, the court shall otherwise direct.—Willey v. State, 52 Ind. 246.

[b] (Sup. 1877)

Where, either on being first assembled, or, having been assembled and discharged, on being reassembled by order of court, any or all of the members of a grand jury fail to appear, the court may direct it to be filled from bystanders, even though the selection of such grand jury by the board of commissioners was irregular.—Dorman v. State, 56 Ind. 454.

[c] (Sup. 1891)

The fact that the court failed to interrogate a bystander called as a grand juror before permitting him to become one of the panel, as required by Rev. St. 1881, § 1651, providing that "before any talesman is accepted and sworn the court must inquire of him under oath as to his qualifications," is not sufficient cause for abating the prosecution if the juror was in fact qualified.—Sage v. State, 127 Ind. 15, 26 N. E. 607.

[d] (Sup. 1891)

The power to excuse grand jurors confers upon the court, by implication, the power to fill the vacancy.—Burrell v. State, 129 Ind. 200, 28 N. E. 699.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gr. Jury, §§ 30-32.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 1321.

§ 15. Competency of jurors.

Waiver of objections, see post, § 10.

[a] A grand juror who cannot conscientiously find a man guilty of an offense that would subject him to death is disqualified.—(Sup. 1831) Jones v. State, 2 Blackf. 475; (1850) Gross v. State, 2 Ind. 329.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gr. Jury, §§ 35-41.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 1296-1303.

§ 17. Challenge to panel.

[a] (Sup. 1841)

An objection to the mode in which the board doing county business discharged its duty, as to the selecting and drawing grand jurors, must be made by way of challenge before the grand jurors are sworn.—Bellair v. State, 6 Blackf. 104.

[b] An accused cannot afterwards plead in abatement the same grounds or facts upon which he has challenged the array of the grand jury.—(Sup. 1877) Meiers v. State, 56 Ind. 336; (1881) McClary v. State, 75 Ind. 200.

[c] (Sup. 1877)

Irregularity in the selection of a grand jury, not amounting to corruption, is not sufficient ground to sustain a challenge to the array.—Meiers v. State, 56 Ind. 336.

[d] (Sup. 1879)

An objection that the record did not show that the grand jury was drawn in the mode prescribed by law, or that the grand jurors were reputable freeholders and residents of the proper county, may properly be raised by challenging the array, or by plea in abatement.—Miller v. State, 69 Ind. 284.

[e] (Sup. 1881)

A challenge to the array of a grand jury must be supported by an affidavit setting forth the cause relied on in support of the challenge, under 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 419, § 11; an oral statement of such cause being insufficient.—McClary v. State, 75 Ind. 200.

[f] (Sup. 1883)

An accused who has had no opportunity of challenging the grand jury may plead in abatement any matter which would have been sufficient cause of challenge to that tribunal, or any member thereof.—Pointer v. State, 89 Ind. 255.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gr. Jury, §§ 42-47, 52.
See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 1323-1327.

§ 18. Challenge to polls.

[a] (Sup. 1824)

Grand jurors may be challenged by any person previous to his being indicted, provided he be at the time under a prosecution for an offense about to be submitted to the jury.—Hudson v. State, 1 Blackf. 317.

[b] (Sup. 1825)

A person under prosecution for a crime may challenge any of the grand jurors by whom the charge is to be examined, but he or his counsel must claim the privilege.—Ross v. State, 1 Blackf. 390.

[c] (Sup. 1831)

A person under a prosecution for a capital offense about to be submitted to a grand jury may challenge any of the grand jurors for cause, but not peremptorily.—Jones v. State, 2 Blackf. 475.

[d] (Sup. 1875)

Any person under prosecution for crime, and in custody or on bail, may, before he is indicted, challenge, for good cause, any person returned or placed upon the grand jury.—Mer-shon v. State, 51 Ind. 14.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gr. Jury, §§ 48-52.
See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 1327, 1328.

§ 19. Waiver of objections to jurors.

[a] (Sup. 1841)

Illegality of the proceedings of the court board in selecting and drawing grand jurors cannot be made the ground of a motion to set aside the indictment, since it must be made by way of challenge before the grand jurors are sworn.—Bellair v. State, 6 Blackf. 104.

[b] (Sup. 1845)

The objection that the grand jury was legally selected is waived if not made by way of challenge before the jurors are sworn.—State v. Hensley, 7 Blackf. 324.

[c] (Sup. 1875)

Where a defendant was neither in custody nor under recognizance when the grand jury which indicted was impaneled, and so had opportunity to challenge the grand jury, may take advantage of the disqualification of any one or more of them by plea in abatement to the indictment.—Mer-shon v. State, 51 Ind. 14.

[d] (Sup. 1879)

If objections to the manner of drawing the grand jury, or that the record failed to show that the grand jurors were reputable freeholders and residents of the county, are not raised by challenge to the array or plea in abatement, they are waived.—Miller v. State, 69 Ind. 284.

[e] (Sup. 1890)

Where, after the return of an indictment and before asking for a change of venue, a defendant entered his plea of not guilty, he thereby waived any irregularity in the organization of the grand jury.—O'Brien v. State, 25 N. H. 137, 125 Ind. 38, 9 L. R. A. 323.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gr. Jury, §§ 53-55.
See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 1328; note, 34 Am. Rep. 705.

§ 20. Impaneling and organization of grand jury, general.

[a] (Sup. 1870)

The fact that a grand jury was discharged until a certain future day, and did not appear on that day, but upon the day after, and without being reimpaneled, returned an indictment, does not vitiate the indictment, since a grand jury cannot dissolve itself by disregarding an order of the court.—Clem v. State, 33 Ind. 418.

[b] (Sup. 1873)

Act March 10, 1873, p. 158, regulating the convening of grand jurors, did not prohibit the impaneling of a grand jury summoned previous to its enactment.—Bell v. State, 42 Ind. 335.

[c] (Sup. 1877)

Matters relative to organizing, discharging and reconvening the grand jury are largely within the discretion of the circuit court; and its acts will be revised on appeal only in case of a gross abuse of such discretion.—Meiers v. State, 56 Ind. 336.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gr. Jury, §§ 56-58.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 1315; note, 27 L. R. A. 776.

§ 23. Charge.

[a] (Sup. 1865)

It is the duty of the court to instruct the grand jury, but the omission to do so does not affect the validity of their presentment or indictment.—Stewart v. State, 24 Ind. 142.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 1334-1337.

§ 26. — Offenses and accusations.

[a] (Sup. 1860)

Under our statutes, the grand jury is a local tribunal, and cannot inquire into offenses committed out of its jurisdiction.—Beal v. State, 15 Ind. 378.

[b] (Sup. 1899)

Where a person held by a justice of the peace to answer a charge of felony, under Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 1703 (Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 1634), gives a recognizance to appear at the November term of the circuit court, the grand jury at the September term after the recognizance was given has no jurisdiction to investigate the offense by virtue of the proceeding before the justice; hence their indorsement of "Ignoramus" on the papers does not terminate the prosecution.—Stark v. Bindley, 52 N. E. 804, 152 Ind. 182.

Grand jurors, by statute, can only serve for one year from the time they are selected.—Barger v. State, 6 Blackf. 188.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gr. Jury, § 67.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 1332.

§ 30. — Term of court.

[a] (Sup. 1826)

St. 1825, p. 21, authorizing special sessions of the circuit court, does not warrant the finding of an indictment at the special term against any other person than the one for whose trial the court was convened.—Wilson v. State, 1 Blackf. 428.

[b] (Sup. 1840)

Under 2 Rev. St. p. 363, providing that, whenever the grand jury is dismissed before final adjournment of the court, they may be summoned to attend again at the same term if necessary, an indictment may be found at an adjourned term.—Ulmer v. State, 14 Ind. 52.

[c] (Sup. 1873)

The law does not provide for a grand jury for a criminal court for each month during which, or any part of which, the court may be in session, but it does provide for a grand jury for each term; and, if the court at the same term can legally be in session in two or more months, the same grand jury may sit in each month.—Harper v. State, 42 Ind. 405.

[d] (Sup. 1874)

Where the grand jury has been dismissed before the final adjournment of the court, it may, if necessary, be reassembled to attend again at the same term.—Long v. State, 46 Ind. 582.

[e] (Sup. 1879)

An objection that the judge had no power to convene the grand jury in vacation may properly be raised by challenging the array, or by pleading in abatement; but, if not so raised, it is waived.—Miller v. State, 69 Ind. 284.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gr. Jury, § 68.

§ 31. — Adjournments.

[a] (Sup. 1873)

The criminal court in Floyd county can, under the act organizing that court (Davis' Rev. St. Supp. 1870, p. 178, § 1) and the act of February 12, 1855 (2 Gav. & H. Rev. St. p. 11), adjourn from a regular term of said court to some other certain time, and, if such time is in a month within which the grand jury has not already been in session 10 days, the grand jury may legally meet in connection with the court, and find and return indictments.—Harper v. State, 42 Ind. 405.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gr. Jury, § 69.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 1333.

§ 33. Conduct of proceedings in general.

[a] (Sup. 1865)

It is not necessary that a grand jury should take evidence in every case.—Creek v. State, 24 Ind. 151.

[b] (Sup. 1906)

Defendant cannot complain because the grand jury heard evidence as to a matter of defense after the indictment was returned, even if witnesses subsequently called by him were contradicted by their testimony before the grand jury.—Copenhaver v. State, 67 N. E. 453, 160 Ind. 540.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gr. Jury, §§ 70, 71, 79, 80.

§ 34. Participation of prosecuting attorney.

[a] (Sup. 1859)

The prosecuting officer may attend the sittings of the grand jury, examine witnesses, and advise in matters of law.—Shattuck v. State, 11 Ind. 473.

As the prosecuting officer may attend the sitting of the grand jury and advise in matters of law, where it is alleged that he advised, it will be presumed to have been merely on matters of law.—Id.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gr. Jury, §§ 73, 85.
See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 1338-1340.

§ 36. Attendance and examination of witnesses.

Contempt proceedings, see CONTEMPT, § 66.

Disobedience to subpoena as contempt, see CONTEMPT, § 31.

False swearing before grand jury as perjury, see PERJURY, § 6.

[a] (Sup. 1890)

Though no statute in express terms authorizes the clerk to issue subpoenas for witnesses to appear before the grand jury, the power is clearly implied under Rev. St. 1831, § 1064, giving the court power to compel the attendance of witnesses before the grand jury, and section 5854, fixing the fees of the clerk for issuing subpoenas therefor.—Baldwin v. State, 126 Ind. 24, 23 N. E. 820.

[b] (Sup. 1902)

The grand jury examining a witness under oath need not inform the witness of his constitutional privilege to refuse to testify in matters tending to incriminate him.—State v. Comer, 62 N. E. 452, 157 Ind. 611.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gr. Jury, §§ 75-78;
50 CENT. DIG. With. § 38.
See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 1342-1350.

§ 38. Presence and use of stenographers.

[a] (App. 1892)

It is no objection to an indictment that a stenographer, at the request of the prosecuting attorney, attended before the grand jury and took the testimony of witnesses, where it does not appear that the accused was prejudiced thereby.—Courtney v. State, 5 Ind. App. 356, 32 N. E. 335.

[b] (Sup. 1897)

The mere fact that a stenographer employed by the prosecuting attorney was present in the grand-jury room, and took down in shorthand the evidence on which the indictment was based, for the use of the prosecution, is not ground for quashing the indictment, unless it appears that the accused was prejudiced thereby.—State v. Bates, 48 N. E. 2, 148 Ind. 610.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gr. Jury, § 81.
See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 1341.

§ 39. Effect of presence or participation of unauthorized persons.

[a] (Sup. 1859)

Though the grand jury should exclude everybody while voting, yet the mere omission so to do will not vitiate an indictment.—Shattuck v. State, 11 Ind. 473.

[b] (App. 1892)

The fact that a stenographer, at the request of the prosecuting attorney, attended before the grand jury and took the testimony of witnesses, is no ground for quashing the indictment, where it does not appear that the accused was prejudiced thereby.—Courtney v. State, 5 Ind. App. 356, 32 N. E. 335.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gr. Jury, § 82; 27 CENT. DIG. Ind. & Inf. § 484.
See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 1341.

§ 40. Minutes or record of proceedings.

[a] (Sup. 1840)

Since the board of county commissioners is a court of record, and its acts can only be proved thereby, if the record of such board does not show that the grand jury who found an indictment were selected according to the statute, the indictment will be quashed on motion.—State v. Conner, 5 Blackf. 325.

[b] (Sup. 1865)

The return of an indictment into court by the grand jury, duly indorsed by the foreman, is evidence that the proper number have concurred in the finding.—Creek v. State, 24 Ind. 151.

[c] (Sup. 1863)

Giving the initial only, instead of the full Christian name, of one of the grand jurors, in the record, held no objection to the indictment.—Stone v. State, 30 Ind. 115.

[d] (Sup. 1877)

A record stating that the regular grand jury for said term of said court, having been duly impaneled and sworn, returned into open court, the indictment against defendant sufficiently shows the proper presentment of the indictment, and that it was found by a legal grand jury.—Beavers v. State, 58 Ind. 530.

[e] (Sup. 1883)

Where the record certified shows a due impaneling of the grand jury, it is sufficient, without a specific statement of the fact in the clerk's certificate.—App v. State, 90 Ind. 73.

[f] (Sup. 1833)

Where it is shown by the record that the indictment was returned by the grand jury into open court, and the indictment itself recites that the grand jury were duly impaneled, charged, and sworn, the impaneling is sufficiently shown.—Stout v. State, 93 Ind. 150.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 24 CENT. DIG. Gr. Jury, §§ 83-85;
27 CENT. DIG. Ind. & Inf. § 111.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 1356; note, 69 O. C. A. 488.

§ 41. Secrecy as to proceedings.

Competency of jurors as witnesses as to proceedings before them, see WITNESSES, § 72.

[a] (Sup. 1838)

Grand jurors may be required to testify as to the evidence given before the grand jury.—Burnham v. Hatfield, 5 Blackf. 21.

[b] (Sup. 1839)

Although the sittings of the grand jury are secret, their proceedings may be disclosed in evidence.—Shattuck v. State, 11 Ind. 473.

[c] (Sup. 1865)

The consultations of a grand jury are secret, and it is not competent to inquire into the amount of evidence on which they acted.—Stewart v. State, 24 Ind. 142.

[d] (Sup. 1873)

The oath of grand jurors does not prevent the public or individuals from proving by one of them in a court of justice what passed before the grand jury.—Burdick v. Hunt, 43 Ind. 381.

[e] (Sup. 1897)

The oath to grand jury, "And that you will not disclose any evidence given or proceedings had before the grand jury," does not prevent proof by one of them in court of what passed before them.—Hinshaw v. State, 147 Ind. 334, 47 N. E. 157.

Rev. St. 1894, § 1731 (Rev. St. 1881, § 1062), providing that a member of the grand jury may be required by any court to disclose the testimony of a witness examined before the grand jury "for the purpose of ascertaining whether it is consistent with that given by the witness before the court, or to disclose the testimony given before them by any person upon a charge against him for perjury in giving his testimony or upon his trial therefor," is not intended to cut off the right to require grand jurors to disclose testimony given before them in any other than the two cases specified, but rather to extend the power to require such disclosure to those two cases, under the supposition that the law did not already extend thereto.—Id.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 1351-1355.

§ 43. Liabilities of jurors.

[a] (Sup. 1872)

No action will lie against grand jurors in consequence of any finding by them, even though it may appear to be dictated by malice or without foundation.—Hunter v. Mathis, 40 Ind. 356.

Grand jurors are protected, during the entire time occupied by their sitting, from the consequences of any finding by them; and they may avail themselves of such protection under a general denial in an action against them for maliciously making such findings.—Id.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

§ 1. Nature of obligation.

[a] (Sup. 1890)

When an instrument resolves itself into a promise or undertaking of the person executing it to do a particular thing which another is bound to do, in the event such other person does not perform the act himself, it is an original undertaking, and not a strict or collateral guaranty.—Nading v. McGregor, 23 N. E. 283, 121 Ind. 465, 6 L. R. A. 686.

[b] (App. 1900)

In a strict or collateral guaranty, the obligation of the guarantor is that the principal shall perform his undertaking, or, if he fail, that the guarantor will pay the resulting damages; but, when the promise of the guarantor is to do what another is bound to do if he shall not do it himself, this is not a strict or collateral guaranty, but is distinguished as an original undertaking in the nature of suretyship.—Woody v. Ilaworth, 57 N. E. 272, 24 Ind. App. 634.

[c] (App. 1910.)

The word "guaranty" has an established meaning, and ordinarily implies an undertaking by one person that another will perform some engagement (citing 4 Words and Phrases, 3179).—Bailey v. Miller, 91 N. E. 24.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guar. § 1.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 1397-1400.

§ 3. Express and implied guaranties.

[a] (App. 1892)

An agreement by defendant "to stand good to plaintiff for the board of her son does not imply a guaranty or suretyship.—McNabb v. Clipp, 5 Ind. App. 204, 31 N. E. 858.

[b] (App. 1898)

Where the trustee of a school township wrote on its note, "The within warrant is K., and will be paid promptly when due," and signed his name thereto, such words do not constitute a guaranty, and the trustee is not liable to one who purchased the note on the faith of said written representation.—Fowler v. Bank of Lafayette v. Brown, 49 N. E. 833, Ind. App. 433.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guar. § 2.

§ 4. Guaranty distinguished from other contracts.

Indorsement distinguished from guaranty, see BILLS AND NOTES, § 246.

Suretyship distinguished from guaranty, see PRINCIPAL AND SURETY, § 6.

[a] (Sup. 1853)

One who, six days after the execution of a note, indorses thereon, "I guaranty payment of this note and costs, if any are made on it," is an absolute promisor, and not a guarantor.—Burnham v. Gallentine, 11 Ind. 295.

[b] (Sup. 1853)

Plaintiff lent his horse to B. under a parol promise by defendant that he would make good any agreement B. might make with plaintiff with regard to the horse. Held, that defendant's liability was only collateral.—Billingsley v. Dempewolf, 11 Ind. 414.

[c] (Sup. 1850)

A bond for the assumption and guaranty of payment of a promissory note given by the obligee is an original undertaking, and not a contract of indemnity merely, and implies a debt due the obligee from the obligor, which the latter agrees to pay by paying said note.—Kirk v. Ft. Wayne Gaslight Co., 13 Ind. 56.

[d] (Sup. 1876)

Defendants indorsed an order for goods by writing thereon, "We, the undersigned, do hereby recommend" the vendee, naming him, "for the inclosed bill," to which indorsement their names were signed. Held, that they were liable, if at all, only as guarantors, collaterally, and could not be held liable on the original debt.—Richwine v. Scovill, 54 Ind. 150.

[e] (Sup. 1876)

An indorsement of a note by the payee. "For value received, I assign this note and guaranty payment of the same when due," is not a guaranty, but a direct agreement by the payee to pay the note when due.—Studabaker v. Cody, 54 Ind. 586.

[f] (Sup. 1880)

Where a retiring partner, with others as sureties, executed an agreement to the remaining three partners, agreeing and guarantying to hold such partners harmless against one-fourth of the loss sustained by the firm up to date, and agreeing on his part to furnish security for the payment of one-fourth of such loss, when the agreement should be surrendered to him, was a contract for payment by him of his share of the loss, and not a contract of indemnity merely.—Lee v. Davis, 70 Ind. 464.

[g] (Sup. 1880)

A guaranty is a collateral undertaking, while a contract of indemnity is an original one.—Anderson v. Spence, 72 Ind. 315, 37 Am. Rep. 162.

[h] (Sup. 1885)

The bond of a bank cashier for the faithful performance of the duties of his office is a contract of guaranty that, in the event of failure, the guarantor will answer the consequences; and it is not a contract of suretyship, where the promisor engages to perform the original undertaking if the principal fails.—La Rose v. Logansport Nat. Bank, 102 Ind. 332, 1 N. E. 805.

[i] (Sup. 1885)

Where a debtor executes a bond with sureties conditioned for the performance of a previous contract by him, stipulating that the principal shall well and truly perform such contract, and that the bond shall be a continuous guaranty, the contract is in its nature and by its very terms a contract of guaranty.—Weed Sewing Mach. Co. v. Winchel, 107 Ind. 260, 7 N. E. 881.

[j] (Sup. 1889)

An instrument in the form of a promissory note, with an additional clause stating that it is given to secure the payment of a debt, does not thereby become a contract of guaranty.—Clanin v. Esterly Harvesting Mach. Co., 118 Ind. 372, 21 N. E. 35, 3 L. R. A. 803.

[k] (App. 1894)

An indorsement by defendant on an order for goods by one A., reciting that defendant, in consideration of A.'s being allowed 30 days for payment, "hereby guaranties payment of the amount within 30 days," is an original, and not a collateral, undertaking, and defendant is liable at once on his direct promise to pay.—Shearer v. R. S. Peale & Co., 9 Ind. App. 282, 36 N. E. 455.

[l] (App. 1896)

Where one agrees to hold himself responsible for any goods purchased of another by a third person, his contract is an original undertaking.—Lane v. Mayer, 15 Ind. App. 382, 44 N. E. 73.

[m] (App. 1897)

A letter written by defendant to plaintiffs, stating that "L. desires to make purchases from your firm. I will engage to secure sales you make [him] in the sum of $300," is not a guaranty, but an original undertaking to become binding on its delivery; so that notice of its acceptance is not necessary.—Newcomb Bros. Wall-Paper Co. v. Emerson, 17 Ind. App. 482, 46 N. E. 1018.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 1400-1403.

§ 6. Offer and acceptance in general.

[a] (Sup. 1887)

The acceptance of a guaranty and the performance of the condition on which it rests are all that are essential to make the contract complete and enforceable.—Snyder v. Click, 13 N. E. 581, 112 Ind. 293.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guar. § 8.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 1404; note, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 305.

§ 7. Notice of acceptance.

[a] Where a guaranty is absolute, for the payment of the debt if the debtor does not pay, no notice of acceptance is necessary.—(Sup. 1845) Jackson v. Yandes, 7 Blackf. 526; (1880) Kline v. Raymond, 70 Ind. 271; (1887) Snyder v. Click, 112 Ind. 293, 13 N. E. 581; (1890) Nading v. McGregor, 121 Ind. 465, 23 N. E. 283, 6 L. R. A. 686.

[b] Where a guaranty is an offer to become responsible for a credit which may or may not be given, the guarantor is not bound, unless notified within a reasonable time of the acceptance of the guaranty.—(Sup. 1879) Milroy v. Quinn, 69 Ind. 406, 35 Am. Rep. 227; (1881) Wills v. Ross, 77 Ind. 1, 40 Am. Rep. 279.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

Where a guaranty of an existing debt is definite as to time, amount, and the extent of the liability, the guarantor is not entitled to notice of acceptance.—Wills v. Ross, 77 Ind. 1, 40 Am. Rep. 279.

[d] (Sup. 1887)

Where a guaranty is for the fulfillment of a contract already, or contemporaneously, made, or for the payment of an existing debt, or upon a consideration distinct from the credit extended to the principal, and moving directly between the guarantor and guarantee, notice of acceptance is unnecessary.—Furst & Bradley Mfg. Co. v. Black, 111 Ind. 308, 12 N. E. 504.

Where there is a mere proposal on the part of those sought to be charged as guarantors to guarantee the faithful performance of some obligation which another may enter into, provided credit shall be extended or a duty undertaken, the contract remains incomplete until the original obligation is entered into and the proposition of guaranty accepted and due notice thereof given.—Id.

[e] (Sup. 1890)

An order reading "Please let my daughter, Mrs. H., have what goods she wants, and I will stand good for the money to settle the bills," given after a refusal to give the daughter credit, is an absolute, continuing guaranty, and requires no notice of its acceptance.—Wright v. Griffith, 121 Ind. 478, 23 N. E. 281, 6 L. R. A. 639.

When the contract of guaranty is executed contemporaneously with and is part of the consideration for the transaction guaranteed, the law imputes notice to all the parties immediately related to the transaction of its character and extent, and no further notice of the acceptance of the guaranty is required.—Id.

Where, on a fair construction of an instrument, it appears to be the personal undertaking of the guarantor to pay for goods sold or to be sold to a third person, it will be regarded as an absolute promise or conclusive guaranty, which when acted on makes the promisor immediately liable, and no notice is necessary of the acceptance of the guaranty.—Id.

[f] (App. 1891)

The plaintiff wired the defendant: "Send us order under your signature authorizing us to collect from you for M.'s order on completion. Amount, about $270." The defendant answered: "Fill M.'s order. I will guaranty payment within 30 days." Held, that the promise given varied from the one requested, and the defendant was entitled to notice of acceptance.—Hasselman v. Japanese Development Co., 2 Ind. App. 180, 27 N. E. 318, 23 N. E. 207.

[g] (Sup. 1892)

Where a contract of guaranty is executed on the same paper as the contract whose performance is guaranteed, and is an absolute contract to pay on failure of the contracting party, it must be regarded as being executed contemporaneously with such contract, and no notice of acceptance thereof is necessary.—Bechtold v. Lyon, 29 N. E. 912, 130 Ind. 194.

[h] (App. 1892)

Notice of the acceptance of an offer of guaranty need not be given by the guarantee himself, if it be not so stipulated; but it is sufficient if the guarantor receive information thereof from any source.—Webster v. Smith, 4 Ind. App. 44, 30 N. E. 139.

[i] (App. 1899)

In case of an absolute guaranty, no notice of acceptance by the guarantee is necessary.—Wheeler v. Rohrer, 52 N. E. 780, 21 Ind. App. 477.

A bond "to indemnify or make good any loss by reason of nonpayment of goods" sold the principal on such bond, and one conditioned that the parties thereto shall indemnify the obligee "against any and all loss that may arise * * * and all persons interested in said contract are hereby secured," are original undertakings and not collateral guaranties, and notice of acceptance thereof is unnecessary.—Id.

[j] (App. 1899)

A bond guaranteeing payment of money collected by an employé until notice from the obligor is absolute and continuous, and notice of the obligee's acceptance thereof need not be given.—Tapper v. New Home Sewing-Mach. Co., 53 N. E. 202, 22 Ind. App. 313.

[k] (Sup. 1904)

Where a contract of a guarantor on a building contractor's bond was executed contemporaneously with and as a part of the consideration of the transaction guaranteed, notice of acceptance was not required.—Closson v. Billman, 69 N. E. 449, 161 Ind. 610.

[l] (Sup. 1906)

An instrument addressed to plaintiff, signed by defendant, and stating, "Please let the bearer * * * have whatever he wants at any time, and I will see that the same is paid for," is a direct and original promise by defendant to pay for goods which plaintiff might sell to the person named therein, and became, when accepted by plaintiff, a binding contract of guaranty on which defendant was liable without any notice of plaintiff's acceptance thereof.—Stewart v. Knight & Jilson Co., 76 N. E. 743, 166 Ind. 498.

An agreement to guaranty an existing debt, if the creditor will give the debtor a little more time, is valid, without describing the debt particularly.—Wills v. Ross, 77 Ind. 1, 40 Am. Rep. 279.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. GUAR. § 10.

§ 11. — Conditional signature.

[a] (Sup. 1890)

In an action upon a guaranty, it is no defense that an agreement was made between the guarantor and the party for whose sake it was executed that other names should be added to it before its delivery, and that such names were not so added, unless it is also shown that the guarantee had notice of such an agreement.—Kline v. Raymond, 70 Ind. 271.

[b] (Sup. 1882)

Where the guarantors of a lease to a partnership signed it and delivered it to one of the firm, with instructions not to deliver it to the lessor until all the firm had signed, and one refused so to do, they are not liable, though the lease is delivered; the failure of all the parties named in the lease to join therein being notice to the lessor of the condition.—Markland Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Kimmel, 87 Ind. 560.

§ 16. — Sufficiency.

[a] (Sup. 1860)

The surrender of railroad bonds previously sold and guarantied by the guarantor is a good consideration for a written guaranty given in exchange for the bonds, irrespective of the question of the validity of the bonds.—Butler v. Edgerton, 15 Ind. 15.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

Where goods are sold in reliance on a verbal guaranty of payment, the obligation thereby incurred by the guarantor is a sufficient consideration to support a subsequent written guaranty of payment for the same goods.—Wills v. Ross, 77 Ind. 1, 40 Am. Rep. 279.

A promise to forbear to sue a third person may be a good consideration for defendant's promise to pay the third person's debt to plaintiff even though no definite term of forbearance is set; for the law would hold the creditor to forbear for a reasonable time.—Id.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

§ 20. Fraud, duress, and undue influence.

[a] (Sup. 1868)

There can be no recovery on a guaranty of payment of the price of articles sold where the seller was guilty of false and fraudulent representations in making the sale.—Webster v. Metropolitan Washing Mach. Co., 29 Ind. 453.

[b] (App. 1894)

A guaranty secretly executed in favor of one creditor, to enable a debtor to effect a composition with all of them, is invalid for fraud, and the guarantor may set up that fraud in an action on the guaranty.—Morrison, Plummer & Co. v. Schlessinger, 10 Ind. App. 663, 38 N. E. 493.

§ 21. Estoppel or waiver as to defects or objections.

[a] (Sup. 1885)

The fact that a bank cashier was addicted to drunkenness, gambling, and similar vices, notice of which was given the bank, will not discharge his guarantors from liability for a detalcation, if they knew at the time they executed the bond that the cashier was so addicted.—La Rose v. Logansport Nat. Bank, 102 Ind. 332, 1 N. E. 805.

[b] (Sup. 1887)

One who signs a guaranty, and intrusts it to the person for whom he thus becomes responsible, is estopped from claiming that he did not authorize its delivery to the obligee.—Snyder v. Click, 112 Ind. 293, 13 N. E. 581.

[a] Unless its terms forbid, a contract of continuing guaranty may be revoked on notice to the guarantee.—(App. 1891) Conduitt v. Ryan, 3 Ind. App. 1, 29 N. E. 160.

A promise of guaranty cannot be revoked by the guarantor so as to prejudice the other party in so far as he has already acted upon it, but only as to other or additional liability thereafter.—Id.

A notice of revocation of a guaranty by the guarantor need not be in writing.—Id.

§ 32. Negotiability and transfer of guaranty.

[a] (Sup. 1878)

On the back of a negotiable note, there was indorsed a guaranty of its prompt payment, signed by the guarantors. It was addressed to no particular person. An indorsement "pay to the order of" a certain bank, transferring the paper was below the guaranty. The instrument was delivered to the assignee. Held, that there was an assignment of the guaranty, as well as the note, in view of the Code provision relating to assignments of contracts.—Cole v. Merchants' Bank of Watertown, N. Y., 60 Ind. 350.

A contract of guaranty is assignable under the Code.—Id.

An order reading: "I have made a contract with D. for a lot of staves. Any white or burr oak timber you may sell him I will stand good for, or, in other words, will guaranty the pay for it,"—is an absolute undertaking.—Nading v. McGregor, 121 Ind. 465, 23 N. E. 283, 6 L. R. A. 686.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guar. § 38.

§ 36. Scope and extent of liability.

[a] (Sup. 1860)

In general, the liability of a guarantor is measured by that of his principal, unless a lesser or greater liability is expressly assumed by the guarantor.—Smith v. Rogers, 14 Ind. 224.

[b] (Sup. 1860)

A. and B. executed a chattel mortgage to secure certain debts owing by them jointly to C. Subsequently D. wrote to C., requesting, for the benefit of B., a release of the property, and promising, in case he would release it, to pay the amount of C.'s claim. In suit upon the guaranty, held, that the guarantor was not liable for a private debt owing by A. to C., especially if such debt accrued after the date of the guaranty, but that the guaranty must be construed to embrace the mortgage debt only.—Yater v. Judah, 15 Ind. 228.

[c] (Sup. 1879)

A written agreement set forth that A. assigned to B. a judgment bearing a specified rate of interest, and that C. guarantied payment at a certain time, and if not paid at that time guarantied 3 per cent. additional interest from that date. Held, that C. was bound by the contract to pay the judgment as well as interest.—Frash v. Polk, 67 Ind. 55.

[d] (Sup. 1892)

Defendant guarantied a contract by which, among other things, one F. agreed to return a stock of dry goods to plaintiff. The latter thereafter directed F. to ship the goods to him by a certain steamboat line, and F. employed a drayman for the purpose, who delivered the goods to a wharfman, who took charge of shipments generally, but did not represent or have any connection with the steamship line. The goods were left upon the wharf overnight, insufficiently protected, were damaged by rain, and were subsequently delivered to plaintiff in their damaged condition. Held, that F. was responsible for the goods while in the hands of the wharfman, and that defendant was liable for the damages sustained.—Bechtold v. Lyon, 130 Ind. 194, 29 N. E. 912.

[e] (App. 1894)

Plaintiff hired M. as salesman on commission, to pay his own expenses, and took from defendants a written guaranty of payment of all sums which M. might collect for plaintiff, and all moneys which plaintiff might from time to time advance to M., and any indebtedness which might thereafter become due from M. to plaintiff; defendants to accept a verified copy of plaintiff's books as correct and final between plaintiff and M. Held that, as against defendants, plaintiff must show, as to cash charges against M., that the money was advanced to enable him to carry on his work for plaintiff, and also, as to credits, that plaintiff had credited M. his proper commissions.—John A. Tolman Co. v. McClure, 10 Ind. App. 28, 37 N. E. 289.

§ 38. Continuing guaranty.

[a] (Sup. 1890)

Unless the words in which a guaranty is expressed fairly implies that the liability of the guarantor is to be limited, it continues until the guaranty is revoked.—Wright v. Griffith, 23 N. E. 281, 121 Ind. 478, 6 L. R. A. 639.

[b] (App. 1891)

A guaranty reciting, "I hereby guaranty the payment, when due, of all bills of goods sold, or that may be sold, on and after this date, by C. & Sons * * * to B.," is a continuing guaranty of the absolute kind.—Conduitt v. Ryan, 3 Ind. App. 1, 29 N. E. 160.

[c] (Sup. 1894)

A guaranty of payment "for all sales which may be made" to one who was about to engage in selling periodicals, and providing that the liability thereon shall not "exceed in any event" a sum named, will be treated as a continuing guaranty, in the absence of anything to show a contrary intention of the parties.—Trustees of the Presbyterian Board of Publication and Sabbath-School Work v. Gilliford, 139 Ind. 524, 38 N. E. 404.

[d] (App. 1896)

Defendant signed and delivered to plaintiff a writing as follows: "I hereby agree to hold myself responsible for, and agree to pay for, any goods and merchandise which may be purchased of you by L., to the amount of $500." L. purchased of plaintiff a bill of goods amounting to more than $500, and paid for them. Afterwards he purchased other goods, and failed to pay for them. Held, that the liability of defendant was a continuing one, limited in amount only, but not in time, and was not terminated by the first purchase by L.—Lane v. Mayer, 15 Ind. App. 382, 44 N. E. 73.

[e] (App. 1899)

A bond guarantying payment of money collected by an employé until notice from the obligor is absolute and continuous.—Tapper v. New Home Sewing-Mach. Co., 53 N. E. 202, 22 Ind. App. 313.

§ 42. Conditions.

[a] (Sup. 1885)

The guarantors of the faithful performance by a bank cashier of his duties are not relieved from liability on default of the cashier because the latter did not have exclusive possession of funds and moneys of the bank, access thereto being given to other officers, though a by-law provided that the cashier should be held liable for the funds and moneys of the bank.—La Rose v. Logansport Nat. Bank, 102 Ind. 332, 1 N. E. 805.

§ 44. Default of principal.

Notice of default to guarantor as fixing liability, see post, § 46.

[a] (Sup. 1904)

A building contract required the contractor to furnish all materials, and it was provided that a portion of the contract price should be paid on presentation of receipted bills for materials furnished, and the balance after completion of the work. The contract called for a bond conditioned on the construction and completion of the work according to the contract. Held, that the guarantor on the bond was liable for a failure of the contractor to pay for materials, whereby a lien was filed on the building.—Closson v. Billman, 69 N. E. 449, 161 Ind. 610.

§ 45. Demand on principal.

Condition precedent to action against guarantor, see post, § 77.

[a] (Sup. 1841)

Where a letter of credit states that the writer will guaranty the payment for goods to be afterwards sold to another, or that he will see the goods paid for, the plaintiff must, in order to sustain a suit on such promise, show that he had, within a reasonable time after the note became due, demanded payment of the principal debtor.—Smith v. Bainbridge, 6 Blackf. 12.

[b] (Sup. 1878)

No demand is necessary to charge an absolute guarantor of payment.—Taylor v. Taylor, 64 Ind. 356.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

Guarantors in a note are not liable except upon proof of a demand on the maker, and notice of nonpayment within a reasonable time after default or proof that no harm had or reasonably could have accrued to them on account of the failure to make the demand and give them notice thereof.—Kealing v. Vansickle, 74 Ind. 529, 39 Am. Rep. 101.

§ 46. Notice of default to guarantor.

Failure to give notice as discharge of guarantor, see post, § 67.

[a] Where the guaranty is of a future indebtedness of uncertain amount, notice of default is required.—(Sup. 1841) Smith v. Bainbridge, 6 Blackf. 12; (1879) Milroy v. Quinn, 69 Ind. 406, 35 Am. Rep. 227.

[b] (Sup. 1860)

Where a surety binds himself to a direct performance of the contract of his principal for the payment of goods to be sold the principal, it is not necessary for the creditor to notify the surety of the principal's failure to pay to render him liable.—Kirby v. Studebaker, 15 Ind. 45.

[c] A guarantor is entitled to reasonable notice of nonpayment.—(Sup. 1860) Virden v. Ellsworth, 15 Ind. 144; (1873) Gaff v. Sims, 45 Ind. 262.

[d] Notice to the guarantor of nonpayment of the debt is not necessary, when his undertaking to pay is absolute.—(Sup. 1878) Taylor v. Taylor, 64 Ind. 356; (1880) Kline v. Raymond, 70 Ind. 271; (1890) Nading v. McGregor, 121 Ind. 465, 23 N. E. 283, 6 L. R. A. 686.

[e] (Sup. 1879)

Where defendants guaranteed the payment of a judgment on a certain day, and also agreed that, if it was not paid at that time, they guaranteed the payment of additional interest from that date, it was not necessary in order to recover on the guaranty that defendants should have had notice of the judgment.—Frash v. Polk, 67 Ind. 55.

[f] (Sup. 1881)

Where a debt is due, and absolute, when the guaranty is given, no notice of default is necessary.—Wills v. Ross, 77 Ind. 1, 40 Am. Rep. 279.

[g] (Sup. 1887)

Where the guaranty is of the performance of a contract by the principal, which cannot be performed by the guarantor on the principal's default, but for which he is only to respond in damages, which are not liquidated, he is entitled to notice of default, to the end that he may be advised of the nature and extent of the unliquidated and unascertained liability of the principal.—Furst & Bradley Mfg. Co. v. Black, 111 Ind. 308, 12 N. E. 504.

Direct engagements on the part of guarantors or sureties themselves to pay or perform absolutely, and, at all events, the contract of their principal, are, in their nature, original, direct, and absolute, and the promisor must himself take notice of the default of his principal.—Id.

[h] (Sup. 1906)

Where a guarantor has unqualifiedly promised to pay for goods sold to his principal, and the contract of guaranty has been accepted by the obligee, the guarantor is not entitled to notice of his principal's default in order to fix his liability for goods sold to his principal.—Stewart v. Knight & Jillson Co., 76 N. E. 743, 166 Ind. 498.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

III. DISCHARGE OF GUARANTOR.

§ 49. Subsequent release or agreement.

[a] (App. 1893)

The waiver, by the guarantor of a note, of the right to pay the note, and sue the maker, and collect it, made at the request of the holder, who is desirous of saving the maker from the annoyances of suit, is a sufficient consideration to uphold a release of the guarantor from all liability to the holder.—Ditmar v. West, 7 Ind. App. 637, 35 N. E. 47.

[b] (Sup. 1906)

Where defendant promised to pay for goods sold by plaintiff to a third person, and plaintiff, after furnishing goods to the third person for some time, delivered the instrument containing defendant's promise to the third person, telling him that it was "no good" and directing him to take it to defendant and have a change made therein, defendant was discharged from any liability as surety for goods thereafter furnished by plaintiff to the third person, and his liability could not be revived by any subsequent arrangement made without his consent between plaintiff and the third person, such as by a mere redelivery of the instrument by the latter to the former.—Stewart v. Knight & Jillson Co., 76 N. E. 743, 166 Ind. 498.

§ 67. Neglect to give notice of default to guarantor.

Necessity of notice to fix liability, see ante, § 46.

[a] Where at the time of default the principal was solvent, and afterwards became insolvent, failure to give notice of default will discharge the guarantor.—(Sup. 1841) Smith v. Bainbridge, 6 Blackf. 12; (1873) Gaff v. Sims, 45 Ind. 262.

[b] A guarantor will not be discharged by failure of the guarantee to give him notice of default, unless there is a resulting injury, and then only to the extent of the injury.—(Sup. 1869) McMillan v. Bull's Head Bank, 32 Ind. 11, 2 Am. Rep. 323; (1885) Ward v. Wilson, 100 Ind. 52, 50 Am. Rep. 763; (1887) Furst & Bradley Mfg. Co. v. Black, 111 Ind. 308, 12 N. E. 504.

[c] (Sup. 1870)

Certain persons guaranteed that the lessee should perform agreements which he had entered into a lease, one of which agreements was that he should execute two notes for rent at a certain time. He failed to do so, and the guarantors were not notified of his default for 10 months thereafter. Held, that the neglect of the lessor to notify them at an earlier date was no defense to their liability on the guaranty.—Leonard v. Shirts, 33 Ind. 214.

[d] (Sup. 1873)

Certain parties guaranteed the performance of a contract for the purchase of a lot of cattle and the payment therefor. For 18 months after the maturity of the contract the principal was solvent, but afterward, and before suit, he became insolvent. No notice of his default was given to the guarantors. Held, that the guarantors were discharged.—Gaff v. Sims, 45 Ind. 262.

[e] (Sup. 1878)

Unless neglect to give notice of the principal's default produced some loss or prejudice to the guarantor, such neglect is no defense to an action on the guaranty.—Cole v. Merchants' Bank of Watertown, N. Y., 60 Ind. 350.

[f] (Sup. 1885)

A failure of the guarantee to give notice of the default of the principal, and damage resulting therefrom, must both concur in order that the guarantor may be discharged.—Ward v. Wilson, 100 Ind. 52, 50 Am. Rep. 763.

[g] (Sup. 1885)

In an action on a guaranty a failure to give notice, except in cases governed by commercial rules, is a matter of defense, and with such failure resulting damages must concur in order to work a discharge of the guarantor.—La Rose v. Logansport Nat. Bank, 1 N. E. 805, 102 Ind. 332.

Proceeding against principal as condition precedent to action on guaranty, see post, § 77.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. GUAR. §§ 78-81.

See, also, 20 Cyc. pp. 1446-1458.

§ 70. — In general.[a] (Sup. 1841)

A guarantor will not be liable under a letter of credit stating that he will guaranty the payment of goods to be afterwards sold to another, or that he will see the goods paid for, without demand on his principal and notice to him, if it appears that the principal debtor was solvent when the debt fell due and afterwards became insolvent.—Smith v. Bainbridge, 6 Blackf. 12.

[b] (App. 1899)

Where, in consideration of plaintiff's releasing certain lots from a mortgage, defendant guaranteed that a note secured thereby would be paid, it was not necessary, in an action on such guaranty, to allege diligence, and a failure to collect the note from the maker, since the consideration for the guaranty was distinct from the credit extended to the principal debtor, and moved directly to the guarantor.—Hernley v. Brannum, 53 N. E. 512, 23 Ind. App. 388.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. GUAR. §§ 78-80.

§ 71. — After request of guarantor.

[a] (Sup. 1874)

One who indorses a guaranty on a note is not discharged by failure of the holder to use diligence to collect the note of the maker, although the guarantor requested him to sue the maker.—Sample v. Martin, 46 Ind. 226.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. GUAR. § 81.

IV. REMEDIES OF CREDITORS.

Joinder of causes of action as affected by parties, see ACTION, § 50.

§ 75. Nature and form.

[a] (Sup. 1341)

If a letter of credit state that the writer will guaranty the payment of goods to be afterwards sold to another, or that he will see the goods paid for, or that he will be security for their payment, the promise is only collateral. In such cases, the person to whom the goods are sold is liable on a general count for goods sold and delivered; but the writer of the letter can only be sued on the special contract.—Smith v. Bainbridge, 6 Blackf. 12.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. GUAR. § 85.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 1482.

§ 76. Rights of action.

[a] (Sup. 1845)

A guaranty directed to Messrs. B. & D. may be sued on by A. B., C. D., and E. F. D.; the declaration averring the promise to have been made to the plaintiffs by the name of Messrs. B. & D.—Jackson v. Yandes, 7 Blackf. 528.

[b] (Sup. 1858)

Suit upon a lease, assignment, and guaranty. The lessee agreed to make certain improvements on the premises. The lessor assigned the lease or agreement, and guaranteed that the lessee would perform his part of the contract within $10 worth of work. The assignee sued the lessor. Held, that the lease, assignment, and guaranty were a sufficient cause of action.—Harper v. Pound, 10 Ind. 32.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. GUAR. § 86.

§ 77. Conditions precedent.

[a] (Sup. 1878)

Suit against the principal is not a condition precedent to action on an absolute guaranty of payment.—Taylor v. Taylor, 64 Ind. 356.

[b] (Sup. 1885)

A guarantor of a lease is entitled to notice of default; but this is not a condition precedent to an action upon the guaranty, and the failure to give it discharges only to the extent of damage suffered in consequence, and must be pleaded.—Ward v. Wilson, 100 Ind. 52, 50 Am. Rep. 763.

[c] (Sup. 1887)

If loss results to a guarantor on account of failure to give notice of the nonperformance of the contract guaranteed, the fact of such loss and want of notice constitutes matter of defense, and notice and demand are therefore not necessary before an action can be brought on the contract of guaranty.—Stanley v. Stanley, 112 Ind. 143, 13 N. E. 261.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. GUAR. §§ 87-90.

§ 82. Parties.

[a] (Sup. 1860)

Where one guaranties the payment of rent by the lessee, by an indorsement on the back of the lease, the undertaking of the guarantor is distinct from that of the lessee, and they cannot be properly joined in the same suit.—Virden v. Ellsworth, 15 Ind. 144.

[b] (Sup. 1869)

A guarantor cannot be sued with his principal, for his engagement is not jointly with the latter, but is strictly an individual contract.—McMillan v. Bull's Head Bank, 32 Ind. 11, 2 Am. Rep. 323.

[c] (Sup. 1878)

Under 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 35, § 6, a contract of guaranty on a promissory note is assignable, and the payee of such note is not a necessary party defendant in an action thereon.—Cole v. Merchants' Bank of Watertown, N. Y., 60 Ind. 350.

C. executed a note, payable to a sewing machine company, and having on the back a stipulation signed by L. and P., "We jointly or severally, for value received, hereby guaranty the prompt payment of the within note," below which was an indorsement signed by J., as treasurer, "Pay to the order of the M. Bank." Held, in an action against C., L., and P. jointly, brought by the bank in the county where L. and P., but not C., resided, that L. and P. were guarantors only, and, their contract being distinct from the note, they could not be sued thereon jointly with C., over whom the court had no jurisdiction.—Id.

[d] (Sup. 1906)

In an action on a promise to pay for goods sold by plaintiff to a third person, the third person was not a necessary party defendant.—Stewart v. Knight & Jillson Co., 76 N. E. 743, 166 Ind. 498.

§ 85. — Declaration, complaint, or petition.

[a] (Sup. 1838)

The consideration of the assignment of a lease need not be set out in a suit on a guaranty made by the assignor for the lessee at the time of the assignment.—Harper v. Pound, 10 Ind. 32.

[b] (Sup. 1874)

A complaint by the assignee against the assignor of a note, upon a parol agreement by the latter to guaranty prompt payment thereof, and to collect the note and pay the amount over to the assignee, if not paid by the maker, is insufficient, where it contains no averment of a consideration for such promise, further than that it was "for a full and valuable consideration."—Leach v. Rhodes, 49 Ind. 291.

[c] (Sup. 1878)

A complaint in an action on a note, alleging nonpayment by the maker and due notice thereof to the guarantors, sufficiently states a cause of action against the latter.—Cole v. Merchants' Bank of Watertown, N. Y., 60 Ind. 330.

[d] (Sup. 1879)

Where a written agreement sets forth that one party has assigned to the other a judgment bearing a specified rate of interest, and that a third party guaranties payment at a given time, and, if not then paid, guaranties 3 per cent. additional interest from that date, a complaint thereon by the assignee against the guarantor need not allege notice to the latter of the nonpayment of the judgment, nor contain an offer to assign the judgment to the guarantor.—Frash v. Polk, 67 Ind. 55.

[e] (Sup. 1885)

Although a guarantor is entitled to notice of the principal's default, yet, in an action upon his contract, a guarantor cannot demur to the complaint on account of its failure to aver such notice.—La Rose v. Logansport Nat. Bank, 102 Ind. 322, 1 N. E. 805.

[f] (App. 1899)

From an averment that a guaranty bond was executed and delivered, its acceptance will be implied.—Tapper v. New Home Sewing-Mach. Co., 53 N. E. 202, 22 Ind. App. 313.

[g] (App. 1899)

Where the complaint in an action against guarantors of a note alleged that defendants had failed and refused to comply with their contract to pay plaintiff the sum of $1,000 on a certain date, and that such sum was due, it being due on such note, and remaining wholly unpaid, such allegation constituted a sufficient averment that the note guarantied was unpaid to the amount of $1,000.—Hernly v. Brannum, 55 N. E. 512, 23 Ind. App. 388.

Plaintiff was the holder of P.'s note for $1,523.81, secured by a mortgage on certain lots on which payments had been made reducing the amount due to about $1,000. Defendants, in consideration of plaintiff's releasing certain of the lots from the mortgage, guarantied that a note executed by P. for $1,000, payable to plaintiff's order on a certain date, would be paid. In an action on such guaranty the complaint charged that plaintiff held P.'s note for $1,523.81, which was the only note due plaintiff from P., executed on the date referred to in the guaranty, and that there remained due and unpaid on such note about $1,000. Held, that the complaint was not subject to demurrer, as failing to show that the note described was the note guarantied, in the absence of an averment of mistake or fraud or a prayer for the reformation of the contract of guaranty, since it appeared from the allegations that the note sued on was that intended to be guarantied.—Id.

§ 86. — Plea or answer and subsequent pleadings.

[a] (Sup. 1874)

An answer raising the defense that the guarantor has been discharged by an extension of time of payment of the principal must allege that the extension was for a definite time and on a valuable consideration.—Sample v. Martin, 46 Ind. 226.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guar. § 100.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 1488.

§ 87. — Issues, proof, and variance.

[a] (Sup. 1885)

In an action on a guaranty of a lease, the guarantor cannot defend on the ground that no notice of default was given without pleading it.—Ward v. Wilson, 100 Ind. 52, 50 Am. Rep. 763.

[b] (Sup. 1887)

In an action on a guaranty, evidence is not admissible of the failure of the plaintiff to give notice of nonpayment, where no allegation of such failure is made in the complaint.—Furst & Bradley Mfg. Co. v. Black, 111 Ind. 308, 12 N. E. 504.

§ 89. — Presumptions and burden of proof.

[a] (Sup. 1887)

The failure to give notice of default to a guarantor, and resulting damages, are matters of defense, as to which the burden of proof is upon the guarantor, in an action on the guaranty.—Snyder v. Click, 112 Ind. 293, 13 N. E. 581.

[b] (Sup. 1904)

On an issue as to the liability of the guarantor on a building contractor's bond, the burden was on the guarantor to show omission to give notice of default, and that he was damaged by the omission.—Closson v. Billman, 69 N. E. 449, 161 Ind. 610.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guar. § 102.

See, also, 20 Cyc. p. 1489.

§ 91. — Weight and sufficiency.

[a] (App. 1894)

In an action for the value of three car loads of goods on a written guaranty by defendants that S. & D., who were agents for the sale of plaintiff's goods, and had received them, would fulfill their agreements, there was evidence that plaintiff refused to deliver any goods to S. & D. to fill their orders unless they gave a guaranty; that when the guaranty, signed by defendants, was handed plaintiff's officer, he did not express his satisfaction with it, but said that he would investigate, and that "your three cars are loaded and stand on the switch," and that the company would ship them immediately; that defendants refused to indorse notes of S. & D. for goods ordered, and plaintiff refused to make any more shipments. In a previous action on the notes, plaintiff's officers testified that they shipped the three cars in reliance on a verbal agreement of S. & D. to secure indorsers on the notes. Held, that there was evidence from which the jury could find that plaintiff never accepted the guaranty or acted upon it.—Currie Fertilizer Co. v. Byfield, 9 Ind. App. 180, 34 N. E. 451, 36 N. E. 438.

§ 92. Trial.

Right to open and close, see TRIAL, § 25.

[a] (Sup. 1845)

In a suit on a guaranty, whether the notice to the defendant of the principal debtor's nonpayment was reasonable, or not, is a question for the jury.—Jackson v. Yandes, 7 Blackf. 526.

[b] (Sup. 1858)

The question whether credit is given to the principal or guarantor is for the jury.—Billingsley v. Dempewolf, 11 Ind. 414.

[c] (App. 1891)

A guaranty of sales to M. to the amount of $270 was given by defendant March 18th. On the 25th plaintiff wired: "M. orders $100 more. Will you guaranty on same terms?" Defendant replied: "Will not assume payment for any more." On the 26th plaintiff again wired: "M. has exceeded guaranty $107. You must guaranty that amount in addition, or will attach at once." Defendant answered: "$270 is the full amount of goods we will take and pay for on our account." The court found generally for plaintiff, and, special findings having been requested, it recited therein these telegrams, and found that there was no notice of acceptance, except such as might be implied from the telegrams. Held, that the telegrams were merely evidence of acceptance, which should have been found as an ultimate fact; that the special findings could not be disregarded, and the judgment sustained, on the general findings; but that it should be reversed, and entered for defendant on the special facts, properly found.—Hasselman v. Japanese Development Co., 2 Ind. App. 180, 27 N. E. 318, 28 N. E. 207.

[d] (Sup. 1904)

In an action on a written guaranty of a note, where the answer of the maker of the note pleaded an individual set-off, it was not the duty of the court, in a charge on the right to recover on the set-off, to charge that the defendant pleading it must prove that he was the principal and his codefendant surety on the guaranteed note, where he charged that all the material averments of the set-off must be proved, and the complaint alleged that the contract in suit was security for the separate note of the defendant pleading the set-off.—Long & Allstatter Co. v. Barnes, 69 N. E. 454, 162 Ind. 22.

§ 94. Judgment.

[a] (Sup. 1878)

A complaint on a guaranty of rent stated a cause of action against the guarantor alone.

An occupant of the premises was made a party defendant on her own petition, and answered. A verdict was rendered against "the defendant," but in rendering judgment the words "the defendants" were inadvertently used. Held, that the occupant could not on appeal secure a reversal of the judgment on the ground that the complaint stated no cause of action against her, but the verdict and judgment would be deemed to run against the guarantor alone.—Taylor v. Taylor, 64 Ind. 356.

§ 2. Power to control guardianship.

[a] (Sup. 1828)

The guardianship of minor heirs and the adjustment of their accounts form a conspicuous branch of chancery jurisdiction, and, although particular statutes have given a common-law remedy in many cases, they have not excluded the jurisdiction of the court of chancery.—Peck v. Braman, 1 Blackf. 344.

[b] (Sup. 1894)

The circuit court has, independently of statute, jurisdiction of the subject of the guardianship, custody, and control of minors.—Board of Children's Guardians of Marion County v. Shutter, 139 Ind. 268, 34 N. E. 665, 31 L. R. A. 740.

§ 3. What law governs.

[a] (Sup. 1847)

Where an orphan female ward, domiciled in a state where the age of majority is 18, removes during her minority to a state where such age is 21, and there a guardian is appointed and the ward chooses it as a permanent home, the law of her chosen domicile controls, and she cannot appoint an attorney or make a settlement with her guardian while under the age of 21.—Hiestand v. Kuns, 8 Blackf. 345, 46 Am. Dec. 481.

[b] (Sup. 1854)

Rev. St. 1852, p. 324, § 9, making it the duty of the guardian to file inventories within three months after his appointment, is applicable to all guardians, appointed before or since its publication, and regulates the time within which they shall file inventories.—*Markel v. § 8. Jurisdiction of courts.

[a] (Sup. 1869)

Under Rev. St. 1824, p. 314, the equity side of the circuit court had complete original jurisdiction of the relation of guardian and ward. By Acts 1825, p. 55, the act of 1824 was so amended that the associate judges should constitute a court of probate to hear and determine all matters in relation to the estates of deceased persons. In 1826 it was enacted that in the appointment of a guardian it should not be lawful for a circuit court or a probate court to appoint as a guardian the administrator or executor of an estate in which the ward was interested. Held, that the probate court had jurisdiction to appoint guardians for infants.—Dequindre v. Williams, 31 Ind. 444.

[b] (Sup. 1873)

A guardian may be appointed for minors having real estate in the county where the real estate lies, though the minors may be nonresidents.—Maxwell v. Campbell, 45 Ind. 360.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

Under the statute authorizing the court of common pleas to appoint guardians for minors resident in the county, that court has no authority to appoint a guardian of the "unknown heirs of A." Such appointment is void, and sales by such guardian will pass no title.—State ex rel. Ross v. McLaughlin, 77 Ind. 335.

In a proceeding to appoint a guardian, the infancy of the ward is a jurisdictional fact to be ascertained by the court.—Id.

§ 13. Proceedings for judicial appointment.

[a] (Sup. 1813)

The informal appointment of a guardian cannot be assigned for error.—Findley v. Buchanan, 1 Blackf. 12.

[b] (Sup. 1864)

The requirement in the statute that, before any one shall be appointed guardian, he shall file a statement of the ward's estate, is directory only, and failure to file such statement will not of itself render an appointment void.—Lee v. Ice, 22 Ind. 384.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

Where it affirmatively appears that the court, in appointing a guardian, had not before it the means of ascertaining the heirs for whom the guardian was to be appointed, their age, etc., such appointment will be held void.—State ex rel Ross v. McLaughlin, 77 Ind. 335.

[d] (Sup. 1894)

In a proceeding for the appointment of a guardian of an infant, service of process on her parents will give jurisdiction of her person, without service on her.—Board of Children's Guardians of Marion County v. Shutter, 139 Ind. 268, 34 N. E. 665, 31 L. R. A. 740.

§ 17. Operation and effect of appointment.[a] (Sup. 1855)

Where one was appointed "guardian of N. C., infant and minor heir of J. C.," under the act of 1838, and the ward, before arriving at majority, became insane; and the same guardian continued to act as such, styling himself "guardian of N. C., an idiot," and was so regarded by the probate court, which had appointed him guardian, it was held that the guardian's trust expired with the minority of the ward, and that all his subsequent acts as guardian were illegal.—Coon v. Cook, 6 Ind. 268.

[b] (Sup. 1868)

An inquiry as to whether infants were at the time of appointment of their guardian residents of this or another state could not be raised collaterally.—Dequindre v. Williams, 31 Ind. 444.

Where a guardian, who has received his appointment from a court of superior jurisdiction having authority to make such appointment and jurisdiction of guardians' petitions to sell lands, but without jurisdiction to make the particular appointment, sells land of his ward under an order of such court to one who purchases and pays for the land, relying in good faith on such order, the purchaser will be protected in the title so acquired, if the guardian applies the proceeds properly.—Id.

[c] (Sup. 1880)

An assignee from the mother of a judgment against the putative father of a bastard child cannot collaterally attack an order appointing a guardian for such child and removing it from the custody of its mother, in a suit by such guardian for the possession of money paid into court by the father upon such judgment.—*Heritage v. § 20. Majority of ward.[a] (Sup. 1856)

The fact that, though the probate court appointed a person as guardian on account (as was alleged in the order of appointment) of the infancy of his ward, yet that it always regarded him as guardian of an idiot, is a circumstance of no weight in determining the validity of acts done by him after the arrival of the ward at full age.—Coon v. Cook, 6 Ind. 268.

A guardian appointed by the probate court, on account of the infancy of his ward, cannot, after the arrival of the ward at full age, continue under such appointment to act as guardian by reason of the insanity of such ward.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1883)

In general guardianship of an infant terminates when the ward attains the age of 21 years.—Jones v. Jones, 91 Ind. 378.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

See, also, 21 Cyc. p. 50.

§ 21. Marriage of ward.

[a] (Sup. 1873)

Under Davis' Rev. St. Supp. 1870, p. 283, providing that the marriage of a female ward to a person of full age puts an end to the guardianship and authorizes the guardian to account, the marriage puts an end to the guardianship and requires the guardian to account.—Kidwell v. State ex rel. Boyden, 45 Ind. 27.

[b] (Sup. 1874)

An infant female when married to a man of full age can have no guardian, and she may receive her estate from her guardian, and may also receive her distributive share of her father's estate, with the assent of her husband.—State ex rel. Wade v. Joest, 46 Ind. 233; State ex rel. Hutson v. Same, Id. 235.

[c] (Sup. 1874)

A married woman, though an infant, cannot have a general guardian of her person and property, if her husband be of lawful age.—Ex parte Post, 47 Ind. 142.

[d] (Sup. 1880)

The fiduciary relation of a guardian ceases upon the marriage of his ward, and the maturity of her claim for a settlement following such marriage; and the guardian is thereafter merely a debtor for the balance remaining in his hands not previously accounted for.—Spicer v. Hockman, 72 Ind. 120.

[e] (App. 1891)

Where a female ward marries, the fiduciary relation ceases, and her guardian becomes her debtor for the balance in his hands not previously accounted for.—State ex rel. Haines v. Parrish, 27 N. E. 652, 1 Ind. App. 441.

The marriage of a female ward to a man of full age terminates the guardianship, and the guardian must then account.—Id.

[f] (Sup. 1896)

Rev. St. 1894, § 2600 (Rev. St. 1881, § 2526), providing that the marriage of any female ward to a "person of full age" shall operate as a legal discharge of the guardianship, necessarily implies that, if the husband is a minor, the marriage shall not discharge the guardianship.—Decker v. Fessler, 146 Ind. 16, 44 N. E. 637.

Under Rev. St. 1894, § 2673 (Rev. St. 1881, § 2512), providing that the court having probate jurisdiction in each county shall appoint guardians of minors resident in such county, or having estate therein, the circuit court has jurisdiction to appoint a guardian for the estate of a female minor having a husband who is also a minor.—Id.

§ 25. Removal.

Appealability of order of, see APPEAL AND ERROR, § 77.

Removal as condition precedent to action on bond, see post, § 182.

[a] The probate court cannot remove a guardian, except in cases relating to the faithful performance of his trust, or to the sufficiency of the security given by him.—(1841) Morgan v. Anderson, 5 Blackf. 503; (1844) Pickens v. Clayton, 7 Blackf. 321.

[b] (Sup. 1854)

A large discretion is necessarily left to the courts having original jurisdiction of removing guardians for a breach of their duties, and their decision will not be interfered with unless their discretion has been grossly abused.—Young v. Young, 5 Ind. 513.

[c] A guardian appointed by the court while the minor is under 14 is not necessarily removed at the instance of such minor when he attains that age. He can only be removed for good cause shown. Five days' notice must be given, and any action of the court removing the guardian without notice or appearance is a nullity.—(1856) Dibble v. Dibble, 8 Ind. 307; (1857) 9 Ind. 161.

[d] (Sup. 1859)

The failure of a guardian to make his inventory at the proper time, though he afterwards makes it before his removal is asked, together with his neglect to account for interest, may be cause for his removal.—Barnes v. Powers, 12 Ind. 341.

[e] (Sup. 1859)

A judge of the common pleas has no authority to hear and determine during vacation an application to revoke letters of guardianship.—Lunger v. State ex rel. Hathaway, 12 Ind. 483.

[f] (Sup. 1859)

Under 2 Rev. St. § 11, p. 325, authorizing the removal of a guardian who has left the county, a guardian who removes from the state becomes liable to be removed from his office.—Nettleton v. State, 13 Ind. 159.

[g] (Sup. 1861)

Where application is made for the removal of a guardian, and he appears in court, and takes no exception to the order for his removal, the judgment will be affirmed on appeal.—Myers v. Pearsoll, 17 Ind. 405.

[h] (Sup. 1864)

Where a guardian is appointed by the clerk in vacation, the court, at its next term, without notice, may remove him and appoint another; but a guardian appointed by the court in term, or by the clerk in vacation, and afterwards approved by the court, cannot be removed by the court without notice.—Lee v. Ice, 22 Ind. 384.

[i] (Sup. 1870)

The failure of a guardian to give a bond sufficient to secure to his ward, when the period of his wardship shall terminate, the amount of a pension coming to the ward from the government, is a sufficient cause for the removal of the guardian, without regard to the fact that the amount of the pension may be needed for the maintenance and education of the ward.—West v. Forsythe, 34 Ind. 418.

[j] (Sup. 1874)

On the trial of a proceeding to remove a guardian for failure to file, within three months after his appointment, an inventory, verified by oath, of the real and personal estate of his ward, the clerk testified that no inventory had been found among the papers, and that it was not his habit to make a record of the filing of such inventories, but merely to mark them filed. Held that in the absence of evidence showing affirmatively that such inventory had been filed, this sufficiently showed that none had been filed.—Kimmel v. Kimmel, 48 Ind. 203.

[k] (Sup. 1876)

A complaint, in an action by a minor against his guardian, asked the court to discharge and remove the guardian, and did not allege that he had any specific money in his hands; and the court found that it would be for the interest of the ward to have the guardian removed. Held, that the court could not order the guardian to immediately pay into court any assets in his hands.—Hancock v. Heaton, 53 Ind. 111.

[l] (Sup. 1881)

A guardian should not be removed on the sole ground that he has failed to furnish suitable homes for his wards, where he has done as well as he could in that regard under the circumstances.—Rooker v. Wise, 75 Ind. 306.

[m] (Sup. 1882)

A guardian's failure to keep proper and separate accounts for each ward, because of ignorance and illiteracy, is sufficient ground for removal.—Wood v. Black, 84 Ind. 279.

Rev. St. 1881, § 2521, providing that "it shall be the duty of every guardian to file an inventory," is imperative, and a person neglecting so to do should be removed.—Id.

[n] (Sup. 1882)

An order for the removal of a guardian, the original entry of which was read in evidence without objection, will be presumed to have been made before suit brought, where the date of the order is not shown in the bill of exceptions on appeal from a judgment rendered in a suit on the guardian's bond.—Moody v. State ex rel. Burton, 84 Ind. 433.

[o] (Sup. 1884)

The Supreme Court will not interfere in the matter of removing or refusing to remove a guardian, unless it appears that the trial court has abused its discretion in regard thereto.—Johnson v. Metzger, 95 Ind. 307.

A guardian will not be removed for failure to file an inventory within three months from his appointment, as required by Rev. St. 1881, § 2521, if no personalty had come to his hands, or rents from the realty which had been leased under order of the court.—Id.

[p] (Sup. 1888)

A guardian is personally liable for the costs of the proceeding for his removal.—Bernhamer v. Miller, 114 Ind. 501, 17 N. E. 115.

Rev. St. 1881, § 2524, providing that guardians may be removed for any cause which, in the opinion of the courts of probate jurisdiction, or the judges thereof in vacation, renders it for the interest of the ward that the guardian shall be removed, gives a large discretion to such courts, and their act in this respect will not be disturbed unless that discretion is abused.—Id.

[q] (App. 1902)

Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 2688, provides that the court by whom any guardian has been appointed may remove such guardian, on application of his ward, for habitual drunkenness, neglect of his duties, incompetency, fraudulent conduct, removal from the state, "or any other cause which, in the opinion of said court, renders it for the interest of the ward that such guardian shall be removed." An application by a ward stated the manner in which the guardian had acted detrimental to the estate, and he demurred, and on an overruling of the demurrer refused to answer. Held, that his removal was proper.—Voliva v. Moffit, 65 N. E. 754, 30 Ind. App. 225.

[r] (Sup. 1906)

Where a guardian of a minor whose parents are dead is not a fit person to have the custody of the minor, the proper remedy is by the removal of the guardian on petition of the ward or any person in his behalf, as expressly authorized by Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2688.—Cottrell v. Booth, 76 N. E. 546, 166 Ind. 460.

[a] (Sup. 1838)

An infant, after his guardian's death, has a right to compel a settlement of his accounts, as if he were of age; the guardian's trust being personal, and terminating at his death.—Peck v. Braman, 2 Blackf. 141.

§ 29. Custody and control of person.

[a] (Sup. 1845)

A petition which was sworn to, for a writ of habeas corpus, stated that the petitioner was the guardian, etc., of a certain infant; that the infant was the daughter of one A., deceased, and his wife, Abigail, who had, after her said husband's death, married Lorenzo D. Hovey; that the infant was by said Lorenzo and wife illegally restrained of her liberty, and detained from the custody of the petitioner. The petition prayed that the writ be directed to said Lorenzo and wife, commanding them to have the infant before the court, etc. The writ was granted accordingly. Held, that the act of 1845, entitled "An act for the relief of Abigail C. Hovey and Lorenzo D. Hovey of Carroll county," supposing it to be a public act (it not having been pleaded) and to be constitutional, of which no opinion was given, could not benefit the defendants in this proceeding; they not having shown that they had given the security required by that act.—Hovey v. Morris, 7 Blackf. 559.

[b] (Sup. 1851)

A., the grandfather of certain children under 14 years named in the petition, whose parents were dead, was duly appointed guardian. The children, since their father's death, have continued to live with their stepmother, the appellee, whose character is unexceptionable, and who has taken good care of them. A. and his wife are fit persons to have the care of the children, and well able to support them. The children wish to remain with the appellee. Held, that the guardian was entitled to their custody.—Bonnell v. Berryhill, 2 Ind. 613.

[c] (Sup. 1872)

In proceedings by a mother to recover the custody of her child from the guardian, evidence was proper to inform the court how the child had been treated by the guardian, and by those in whose custody he had placed her, and how she would probably be treated if the petitioner received the child in her charge.—Garner v. Gordon, 41 Ind. 92.

On a petition by a mother against the guardian for the custody of her children, it is error for the court, pending an appeal from a finding in favor of petitioner, to change the custody of the children; all proceedings being stayed on the perfecting of the appeal.—Id.

Where the question as to custody is between the mother of female children and their guardian, the wishes of the parties should not control, but the best interest of the children should be considered.—Id.

[d] (Sup. 1878)

Upon an application by J., the guardian of D., an illegitimate orphan child, for a habeas corpus to obtain her custody from E., an answer by E. that, more than four years previously, and when D. was 4 years old, D.'s mother had transferred the care and custody of D. to E. until D. should be 21 years old; that D.'s father was unknown; that E. had ample means to support and educate D.; that D. had become attached to E. and his wife; and that J. was illiterate and could not read or write,—held not to show that E. was entitled to the custody of D., as against her guardian.—Johns v. Emmert, 62 Ind. 533.

[e] (Sup. 1887)

Rev. St. § 2518, relating to the appointment of statutory guardians, provides "Every guardian, so appointed, shall have the custody and tuition of such minor, and the management of such minor's estate, during minority, unless sooner removed or discharged from such trust: provided, that the father of such minor, or, if there be no father, the mother, if suitable persons, respectively, shall have the custody of the person and the control of the education of such minor." Held, that to render this section conclusive, as against the father's right to the custody of his child, it must appear in some way that he was in court in such manner that the court, in appointing the guardian, must have passed upon the question of his fitness to have such custody.—Brooke v. Logan, 112 Ind. 183, 13 N. E. 669, 2 Am. St. Rep. 177.

[f] (Sup. 1902)

Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 2682, providing that, where a minor has no father nor mother living, the guardian is entitled to the minor's custody, is mandatory, and the wishes of the ward as to who shall have custody of her are not controlling.—Palin v. Voliva, 63 N. E. 760, 158 Ind. 380.

[g] (Sup. 1905)

The appointment of a legal guardian for a minor child is ineffectual to deprive the father of the child of his right to its custody.—Gilmore v. Kitson, 165 Ind. 402, 74 N. E. 1083.

[h] (Sup. 1906)

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2682, declaring that every guardian shall have the custody of the minor ward, except that the father or mother, if suitable, shall have the custody of the minor's person, and section 2688, authorizing the removal of a guardian where it is for the best interest of the minor, a guardian of a minor whose parents are dead is entitled to the child's custody as an incident of the office of guardian.—Cottrell v. Booth, 76 N. E. 546, 166 Ind. 469.

§ 30. Support and education.

[a] (Sup. 1848)

In an action against a guardian upon his individual undertaking to pay the board of his wards, pleas that he had no assets of his wards, and that he was not guardian when the board was furnished are bad on demurrer.—Clark v. Casler, 1 Ind. 243, Smith, 150.

[b] (Sup. 1861)

If a ward be physically unable to earn his own support, or cannot do it without encroaching upon the time necessary for acquiring a good English education, the guardian may and should use the principal of his ward's property for the expenses of support and education.—State ex rel. Druliner v. Clark, 16 Ind. 97, 102.

[c] (Sup. 1880)

A guardian and his sureties are entitled to the amount, with interest, of a debt lawfully contracted by him as such guardian for the maintenance and education of the ward, and which has been personally released to him by the creditor without his having paid the same.—Kinsey v. State ex rel. Shirk, 71 Ind. 32.

[d] (Sup. 1881)

If children possess an estate and their father and guardian none, and both children and father are unable to work, the estate of the children may justly be applied to their education and maintenance.—Corbaley v. State ex rel. Holmes, 81 Ind. 62.

Where both a father and children were unable to work, and the children had an estate, though the father and guardian did not apply to the court for an order directing the use of the children's money for their education and maintenance, the father and guardian might, when sued on his bond, show in defense a just and reasonable application of the money of the wards to that purpose.—Id.

Prima facie a father has no right to charge his children for their support and maintenance, and it is for him to show why such prima facie case shall not prevail against him.—Id.

[e] (Sup. 1882)

Where the guardian, in reporting himself entitled to compensation for boarding his ward, concealed the fact that his ward was not only capable of supporting himself, but was in fact rendering him services of great value, he committed a wrong which fully justified the ward in invoking the assistance of the court.—Marquess v. La Baw, 82 Ind. 550.

[f] A guardian cannot have credit for the education and maintenance of his ward, unless the latter had no parents, or they were unwilling to provide.—(Sup. 1883) State ex rel. Dunham v. Roche, 91 Ind. 406; (1884) Id., 94 Ind. 372.

[g] (App. 1893)

An infant's relative cannot recover for its support from its guardian, though its father refused to support it, and though the guardian had estate of the ward which he failed to use for its support, unless the father's failure to support it was brought to the notice of the guardian.—Turner v. Flagg, 6 Ind. App. 563, 33 N. E. 1104.

[h] (App. 1893)

Where a guardian takes his ward to live with him as a member of his family, there is no implied obligation on the ward's part to pay for board.—Doan v. Dow, 8 Ind. App. 324, 35 N. E. 700.

[i] (App. 1900)

Where a person furnishes goods, necessities etc., to a ward, at the instance and request of the guardian, a judgment therefor should not be against the ward's estate, but against the guardian personally.—Hall v. Ferguson, 57 N. E. 153, 24 Ind. App. 532.

[j] (App. 1903)

The father of a minor secured the services of a physician for the minor, of which the guardian of the minor had no knowledge, and subsequently the physician sought to settle his claim with the father. The minor had no estate. Held, in an action by the physician against the guardian, that there was nothing to take the case from the rule that the father was chargeable with the care and maintenance of the minor.—Leach v. Williams, 66 N. E. 172, 30 Ind. App. 413.

§ 31. Services and earnings.

Estoppel of guardian to claim services of ward, see ESTOPPEL, § 90.

[a] (Sup. 1859)

An infant, without an appointed guardian or an estate of inheritance, living in the family of his mother, a widow, is subject to her control as his natural guardian, and she has a right to his wages.—Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Tindall, 13 Ind. 366, 74 Am. Dec. 259.

[b] (Sup. 1861)

Guardians should keep their wards employed when able to earn their own support, rather than permit them to consume in idleness the principal of their patrimony.—State ex rel. Druliner v. Clark, 16 Ind. 97, 102.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

Where the ward is of limited fortune, and is able to earn his support, it is the guardian's duty to keep him so employed, rather than to allow him to remain in idleness or expend his limited patrimony.—Brown v. Yaryan, 74 Ind. 305.

[d] (Sup. 1882)

A guardian who receives his infant ward into his family cannot appropriate his services and at the same time charge him for board.—Marquess v. La Baw, 82 Ind. 550.

A guardian must keep his ward employed when he is of suitable age and capacity in order that he may earn his support, and not exhaust his estate in his maintenance.—Id.

§ 33. Collection of assets.

[a] (Sup. 1878)

A guardian is liable to his ward for accepting from an administrator or other party a note or other obligation in lieu of money coming to the ward's estate, where the same proves uncollectible.—Bescher v. State ex rel. Hammann, 63 Ind. 302.

[b] (App. 1893)

A guardian has power to release from liability a guarantor of a note taken by himself, but forming a part of his ward's estate.—Ditmar v. West, 7 Ind. App. 637, 35 N. E. 47.

[c] (App. 1907)

Where one is appointed guardian of a minor's estate, who at the time of assuming the trust is personally indebted to the estate, the guardian must pay the debt, separate the amount of it from his own funds, and invest it for the benefit of the ward; and his failure to so invest it is a conversion of that amount of the ward's funds to his own use.—United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. State ex rel. Smith, 40 Ind. App. 136, 81 N. E. 226.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

See, also, 21 Cyc. pp. 70-81.

§ 35. Possession and use of property.

[a] (Sup. 1860)

A testator made his children residuary legatees, to whom all his property after the payment of debts and specific legacies, was to pass as legatees, not as heirs, and gave his executor control of the property during their minority. Held, that under Rev. St. p. 280, § 137, providing that where the deceased shall die intestate the surplus remaining after the payment of all debts, and in case of a will after the payment of all debts and legacies, shall be distributed to the legal heirs thereof according to the law of descent in force in this state, does not apply so as to pass the control of the property to the guardian.—Branch v. Holcraft, 14 Ind. 237.

§ 37. — In general.

[a] (App. 1891)

The degree of care and prudence required of a guardian acting without fraud in the affairs of his trust is not higher than that which an ordinarily prudent man exercises in his own affairs of a like nature.—Wainright v. Burroughs, 27 N. E. 591, 1 Ind. App. 393.

[b] (App. 1895)

A guardian must manage the property in his hands to the best interest of his ward, and he should, if possible, make the income pay the expenses, but the law does not require that he shall keep two separate and distinct funds, or separate the income from the principal.—Rountree v. Pursell, 30 N. E. 747, 11 Ind. App. 522.

[c] (App. 1908)

Under the express provisions of Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2685, subd. 2, it is the duty of a guardian to manage the estate for the best interest of his ward; the discharge of such duty depending largely, if not wholly, on the condition of the estate.—Alcon v. Koons, 42 Ind. App. 537, 82 N. E. 92, 84 N. E. 1104.

§ 41. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1872)

Where a father has procured himself to be appointed guardian of the persons and estates of his children, a sale of property belonging to such estates, if proved to have been made for the benefit of the father, will be set aside.—Lane v. Taylor, 40 Ind. 495.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. § 172.

§ 42. — Real property.

[a] (Sup. 1878)

Where a person, acting as the guardian of one of the joint owners of realty and as the agent of another, has sold such realty, accepting in part payment an obligation held by the purchaser against him individually, the fact that a contract provided that such obligation was to be applied as a payment upon the purchase money due him as principal does not render the payment valid.—Bevis v. Heflin, 63 Ind. 120.

As against the ward, the sale of his real estate by the guardian, the note of the purchaser being accepted in part payment, is not made valid by the facts that the residue of the purchase money was paid in cash, and the guardian reported the sale of the ward's real estate as made for cash.—Id.

A sale by a guardian of the ward's land, taking in part payment the individual obligation of the purchaser, divests the ward of no rights so long as the property or its proceeds can be traced and identified in the hands of those who have full knowledge of all the existing equities.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

A petition for partition is not bad because it alleges that defendants claim under a guardian's sale made without the order or approval of the court, as such a sale cannot divest the ward's title.—White v. Clawson, 79 Ind. 188.

[c] A guardian has no power to give his ward's lands to a railroad company for a right of way.—(Sup. 1884) Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. v. Brittingham, 98 Ind. 294; (1885) Indiana, B. & W. Ry. Co. v. Allen, 100 Ind. 409.

[d] (Sup. 1884)

Although a guardian has no right to give a deed before his sale has been confirmed, if he does so, and the sale is then confirmed, the deed is good.—Hannemann v. Mink, 99 Ind. 279.

The omission to comply with the requirement of 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 531, that a guardian's deed shall specify the page of the order book containing the order of sale, does not make a deed invalid which in all other respects conforms to the law; the book itself being referred to, etc.—Id.

[e] (App. 1891)

The authority of a guardian to sell real estate depends on express authority from the court under whose jurisdiction he acts, granted in strict conformity to the statutes regulating the guardianship upon such matters.—Morris v. Goodwin, 27 N. E. 985, 1 Ind. App. 481.

[f] (Sup. 1893)

A guardian, being powerless to convey without an order of the proper court, has no power to do such acts in ratification as are the equivalent of the contract to convey.—Funk v. Rentschler, 33 N. E. 364, 898, 134 Ind. 68.

§ 44. Lease.

[a] (Sup. 1848)

Under Rev. St. 1838, p. 193, § 51, authorizing the court to appoint guardians for the protection of estates of minors, and page 194, § 54, authorizing the court, on the application of the guardian, to permit him to sell the real estate for better investment, a guardian has authority to lease real estate of his ward.—Huff v. Walker, 1 Ind. 193, Smith, 134.

[b] (Sup. 1867)

A guardian who removes his minor wards from their father's dwelling within the year after his decease cannot maintain an action against the widow to recover any part of the rental value thereof for the year.—Weaver v. Low, 29 Ind. 57.

[c] (Sup. 1894)

A guardian is liable for the difference between the reasonable rent of his ward's property and the reasonable value of necessary improvements made by him.—Taylor v. Calvert, 138 Ind. 67, 37 N. E. 531.

§ 48. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1882)

Where a guardian applies or uses money belonging to his wards to discharge liens on his own lands, or in redeeming liens on other lands, his wards are not entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the lienholders.—French v. Shepler, 83 Ind. 266, 43 Am. Rep. 67.

[b] (Sup. 1883)

A guardian cannot make any contract for his ward, except for necessities for the ward, that the latter may not repudiate when he arrives at age.—State ex rel. Dunham v. Roche, 91 Ind. 406.

[c] (App. 1893)

The estate of the ward is not, in any instance, bound by the terms of an agreement which may have been made by the guardian. The court is to determine whether the necessities were furnished under such circumstances that the law will imply an obligation on those on whom the duty rests to pay therefor.—Turner v. Flagg, 33 N. E. 1104, 6 Ind. App. 563.

[d] (App. 1907)

An administrator of an estate who is also the guardian of a minor heir cannot bind his ward by a settlement as administrator with himself as guardian.—Kinnick v. Coy, 40 Ind. App. 139, 81 N. E. 107.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. §§ 101, 219–226.

§ 49. — Services.

[a] (App. 1891)

Where services were rendered a ward under a contract with the guardian, in an action to recover for them, plaintiff was entitled to a personal judgment against the guardian, and there should, in the judgment, have been no reference to the ward's estate.—Baker v. Groves, 27 N. E. 640, 1 Ind. App. 522.

[b] (App. 1899)

The ward's estate is not liable for services of an attorney in procuring the appointment and the bond of a guardian, so that the guardian is not entitled to credit therefor, though contracting for and making payment therefor from such estate.—In re Kitchen, 89 N. E. 375.

A guardian cannot claim credit for the entire payment to an attorney for services to the estate, though made according to his contract with the attorney, the contract for payment of half the proceeds of the estate not having been approved by the court, having been unreasonable, and having been made without the guardian knowing, or making effort to learn, the condition of the estate.—Id.

§ 50. — Borrowing money.

[a] (Sup. 1882)

One lending money to a guardian, who is authorized by the court to borrow for the purpose of removing liens from his ward's land, may recover from the ward's estate the amount so lent and expended.—Ray v. McGinnis, 81 Ind. 451.

[b] (Sup. 1885)

Where taxes on the lands of a ward are paid at the request of the guardian and upon his promise to repay the same, the guardian is personally liable.—Elson v. Spraker, 100 Ind. 374.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. §§ 228, 229.

§ 53. Investments.[a] (Sup. 1886)

A guardian is not an insurer of the safety of investments made of his ward's funds, nor is he held to an extraordinary degree of care and diligence, but he is required to exercise ordinary care and diligence.—Slauter v. Favorite, 107 Ind. 291, 4 N. E. 880, 57 Am. Rep. 106.

A guardian lending money on mortgage examined the records 10 days before closing the loan, and found no incumbrance on the property. The borrower was a man in active business, well and favorably known in the community, and of excellent financial standing. Held, that the guardian was not negligent in accepting the borrower's word that there was no incumbrance prior to the guardian's loan.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1889)

Where a guardian employs trust funds belonging to his ward in the purchase of realty, the trust therein arises at the inception of the title, and must depend on the transaction as it occurred up to that time, and cannot be changed by any subsequent transaction, except as such subsequent transaction may throw light on the original.—Hughes v. White, 20 N. E. 157, 117 Ind. 470.

[c] (Sup. 1890)

A guardian is not an insurer of the safety of the investments made by him, nor is he to be held to an extraordinary degree of care, but, in order that he may be exonerated from loss on account of insolvent securities taken in the course of the guardianship, it is his duty to keep the trust estate separate from his own fund, and to act in good faith, and observe that sound discretion and prudence usually exercised by diligent men about their own business. In making loans of the trust funds it is his duty to take security.—Line v. Lawder, 23 N. E. 758, 122 Ind. 548.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. §§ 232-241.

See, also, 21 Cyc. pp. 87-92.

§ 54. Interest on funds of estate.[a] (Sup. 1879)

In a suit brought upon a guardian's bond for his failure to pay over the ward's money to his successor, it is error to instruct the jury to allow 10 per cent. interest on the amount due; the evidence having failed to show any written contract for the payment of interest at that rate.—Baldrige v. State, 69 Ind. 166.

[b] (Sup. 1880)

Where a guardian under the authority of the court sells his ward's real estate, he is chargeable with the moneys received, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, deducting proper credit at the proper date, and, on the balance found due at the date of the verdict in an action on his bond of principal and interest, he is chargeable with a sum equal to 10 per cent. of the whole amount assessed and found to be due as damages.—Kinsey v. State ex rel. Shirk, 71 Ind. 32.

[c] (Sup. 1882)

Where the guardian could have loaned the ward's money in his hands, or used the money himself, which could have been safely invested by the use of reasonable diligence, he should account for a just rate of interest.—Marquess v. La Baw, 82 Ind. 550.

[d] (Sup. 1893)

A guardian who converts to his own use his ward's money is chargeable with the highest legal rate of interest which he could have obtained by the use of reasonable diligence.—Hays v. Walker, 90 Ind. 105.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. §§ 242-253.

See, also, 21 Cyc. pp. 93-95.

§ 56. Loans.[a] (Sup. 1886)

Ordinary care requires that a guardian should not accept a second mortgage. If, however, he exercises care and diligence in endeavoring to secure a first mortgage, but by false representations is induced to accept a mortgage believing in good faith it is a senior one, he is not liable, although it turns out to be a junior one.—Slauter v. Favorite, 107 Ind. 291, 4 N. E. 880, 57 Am. Rep. 106.

[b] (Sup. 1890)

Loans made by a guardian on the credit of individuals or firms, without security, or with doubtful security, are ordinarily at the risk of the guardian.—Line v. Lawder, 23 N. E. 758, 122 Ind. 548.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. §§ 255-260.

See, also, 21 Cyc. pp. 90, 91; note, 91 C. C. A. 622.

§ 58. Expenditures.

Compensation of guardian, see post, §§ 140, 150.

[a] (Sup. 1852)

The money of the wards being in the hands of their father's administrator, who expended the same, under the direction of the guardian, in the completion of a distillery, it was held that the administrator was entitled to a credit in his settlement, so far as his expenditures were made with reasonable care and judgment.—Powell v. North, 3 Ind. 392, 56 Am. Dec. 513.

An order of the probate court to a guardian to invest a sufficient sum of money of his wards, without limiting the amount, to complete an unfinished distillery, was held to justify a reasonably prudent expenditure for the purpose.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1867)

Where, after a sale by a guardian of the ward's land, the same land is, upon the petition of the administrator of the estate of the ancestor, sold to pay debts, the guardian is not authorized to protect the title of the purchaser at his sale by buying in the land at the administrator's sale. The payment of money by the guardian for such a purpose is no answer to the suit upon his bond.—State ex rel. Chesser v. Clark, 28 Ind. 138.

[c] (Sup. 1872)

A father, procuring himself to be appointed guardian of the persons and estates of his children, cannot claim a credit for the improvement of the estates.—Lane v. Taylor, 40 Ind. 415.

[d] (Sup. 1877)

The guardian of a girl, whose whole estate in his hands amounted to $170, advanced to her, during the period of about six years and a half, while she was between 11 and 18 years of age, the whole of said amount in sums of $5 at a time. Held, that there was no abuse of discretion on the part of the guardian, though during such period said ward was gratuitously furnished by her relatives with the actual necessities of life in the matters of boarding, clothing, and schooling.—Karney v. Vale, 56 Ind. 542.

[e] (Sup. 1877)

An infant ward, who has married a man of full age, is bound by a payment made by her guardian to her husband by her direction.—Haines v. State ex rel. Shope, 60 Ind. 41.

[f] (App. 1908)

It is not only the statutory duty of a guardian to manage the estate for the ward's best interest, but the guardian is specifically required to pay all just debts due from the ward out of the estate in his hands by Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2685, subd. 5.—Alcon v. Koons, 42 Ind. App. 537, 82 N. E. 92, 84 N. E. 1104.

§ 61. Estoppel.

[a] (Sup. 1879)

Where a guardian has knowledge of an agreement between his minor ward and her mother and a third person that such ward shall serve such third person at a certain price, to be paid to the minor, and allows such agreement to be executed, and the amount paid to the minor without objection, he is estopped to collect the amount as guardian.—Boulton v. Black, 68 Ind. 269.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. §§ 283-287.

See, also, 21 Cyc. pp. 108, 109.

§ 62. Individual interest in transactions.

[a] (Sup. 1828)

Where a guardian invests the money of his ward in land, and takes a deed in his own name, the claim of the ward against the estate of his guardian is a lien on the land, and takes precedence of all others.—Peck v. Braman, 1 Blackf. 544.

[b] (Sup. 1882)

Where a guardian purchased land for himself on his own credit, taking a conveyance in his own name, and afterwards used his ward's money in paying therefor, no trust in the land resulted or arose in favor of the latter.—French v. Shepler, 83 Ind. 266, 43 Am. Rep. 67.

[c] (Sup. 1894)

Where it is the duty of guardian to protect his ward's interest by buying a certificate of purchase and he makes an investment for himself, he should be held as trustee for the ward.—Taylor v. Calvert, 37 N. E. 531, 138 Ind. 67.

Whenever a guardian assumes a position in relation to his wards' funds by which he puts his personal interest in conflict with theirs or acquires any interest or title adverse to that of his wards, he will not, whether he intended any fraud or not, be permitted to retain the advantage, but the same will inure to the benefit of his wards, and he will hold what he has acquired in trust for them subject only to his right to be reimbursed for what he invested.—Id.

Where a guardian held as a part of the ward's estate a mortgage, he could not assume, in relation to the land mortgaged, any position in conflict or inconsistent with the ward's interest, and, where he assumed to purchase the certificate which was adverse and superior to the mortgage, the purchase would inure to the ward's benefit, and the guardian would be adjudged to hold the certificate as trustee and that too, whether he bought it with his own money or the ward's money. It was the guardian's duty to make good the mortgage lien if he could, and, if need be, to take steps to ripen it into a title by foreclosure, and, when he bought an adverse and senior lien, he put himself in a place where it was to his interest to prevent a redemption from the certificate or a foreclosure of the ward's mortgage.—Id.

§ 63. Fraud.

[a] (Sup. 1886)

The fact that a guardian as mortgagee took a note payable to himself, without any designation of his official character, may be considered, with other facts stated in the special finding, in determining whether he was guilty of fraud in the transaction.—Slauter v. Favorite, 4 N. E. 880, 107 Ind. 291, 57 Am. Rep. 106.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. § 107.

§ 64. Waste, conversion, or embezzlement by guardian.

[a] (Sup. 1876)

For a guardian to take notes for money belonging to his ward, payable to himself in his own name, is not in law a conversion, though the fact may deserve consideration as tending to show a conversion.—Richardson v. State ex rel. Crow, 55 Ind. 381.

[b] (Sup. 1878)

Guardians are answerable for any mismanagement or unauthorized dealings with the trust moneys in their hands, under 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 592, § 13, and any misapplication of such moneys is a conversion thereof within the meaning of the statute.—State ex rel. Cavins v. Sanders, 62 Ind. 562, 30 Am. Rep. 203.

[c] (Sup. 1878)

The act of a guardian in commingling his ward's estate with his own money or otherwise disposing of such estate, and destroying the identity of the ward's money, as a separate and distinct fund, is a conversion of the estate of the ward, for which the guardian is liable either in a separate action or upon his bond.—Covey v. Neff, 63 Ind. 391.

[d] (Sup. 1878)

The use by a guardian of the money of his ward in his own business is a conversion of such money to his own use, for which he is liable on his bond.—Lowry v. State ex rel. Hill, 64 Ind. 421.

[e] (Sup. 1882)

The failure of a guardian in his report to disclose that he has received money for his ward amounts to a conversion thereof.—Asher v. State ex rel. Applegate, 88 Ind. 215.

[f] (Sup. 1889)

A guardian invested his ward's money in a mortgage, and afterwards bought the mortgaged land himself, agreeing to pay the mortgage, which he entered satisfied of record, and then mortgaged the land to a third person. Held, that this constituted a conversion of his ward's money, for which his bondsman was liable.—Hogshead v. State ex rel. Allen, 120 Ind. 327, 22 N. E. 330.

§ 66. Torts.

[a] (Sup. 1884)

A guardian is not liable for a tort of his ward.—Garrigus v. Ellis, 95 Ind. 598.

[b] (Sup. 1884)

Where a guardian, knowing that his ward was chaste, uneducated, feeble-minded, and ignorant of the meaning of sexual intercourse, worked on her passions while she was acting as servant in his family by undue familiarities, and negligently permitted his son to have intercourse with her, whereby she became pregnant, he was liable to her for the injuries thereby resulting.—Brattain v. Cannady, 96 Ind. 266.

See, also, 21 Cyc. p. 73.

§ 67. Presentation and payment of claims.

Rights of action against guardian or ward, see post, § 119.

[a] (Sup. 1874)

An order, made by a court without notice to a guardian, requiring him to pay a debt claimed to be due from him or his ward, as to pay taxes on land of his ward's ancestor sold by the administrator of said ancestor's estate, is void.—Martin v. Beasley, 49 Ind. 280.

[b] (App. 1893)

Where a person has a legal and equitable claim against the estate of an infant ward, he may present his claim against the guardian in the probate court having jurisdiction of the estate of the ward and of the person of the guardian, and secure an order of such court for the payment of such amount out of the trust estate as the court may, in its discretion, see fit.—Turner v. Flagg, 6 Ind. App. 563, 33 N. E. 1104.

§ 68. Reimbursement and indemnity to guardian.

[a] (Sup. 1886)

Where after a guardian, as such, secured a judgment, and the ward, after becoming of age, satisfied it, and the guardian sued to enforce an equitable lien on the trust estate for the satisfaction of expenses incurred in the litigation, whether there was any fraud between the ward and her assignee was immaterial.—Curran v.

Abbott, 40 N. E. 1091, 141 Ind. 492, 50 Am. St. Rep. 337.

A trustee has an equitable right to be reimbursed for all reasonable expenses properly incurred in the execution of his trust, and the expenses of a trustee in the execution of his trust are a lien upon the estate, and he will not be compelled to part with the property until the disbursements are paid, and this principle is applicable to a guardian; he being in effect a trustee.—Id.

Where a guardian as such obtained a judgment, and the ward, after reaching majority, satisfied the same, if the guardian had other funds of his ward's in his hands, sufficient to reimburse him for his expenses, the ward and her assignees could compel him to first exhaust such funds.—Id.

Where a guardian, as such, recovers a judgment, his right to be reimbursed and to enforce an equitable lien for his expenses against the trust estate is the same whether he is personally liable for the expenses and attorney's fees or only in a fiduciary capacity.—Id.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. §§ 264-262, 497.

§ 69. Conveyances, contracts, and other transactions between guardian and ward.

[a] (Sup. 1852)

A guardian contracted with his ward to sell him a tract of land, at a price fixed, 2 years before he became of age, and the ward went into possession, and hence knew the location, quality, and price of the land, and, with this knowledge, and without any undue influence on the part of his guardian, he accepted, after arriving at majority, a deed for said land, and afterwards retained the possession and use of it for 15 months without objection. Held, that the ward could not have the sale set aside and compel the guardian to account for the purchase money.—Sherry v. Sansberry, 3 Ind. 320.

A ward may, on arriving at majority, purchase property from his late guardian, and such a purchase, if fairly made, will stand.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1874)

Where an infant female is married to a man of full age, a payment made by her guardian to her husband with her assent and direction is good as to her.—State ex rel. Wade v. Joest, 46 Ind. 233; State ex rel. Hutson v. Same, Id. 235.

Where a husband and wife are both infants, a payment made by the guardian of the wife to the husband is not good as to the wife.—Id.

[c] (App. 1891)

A female ward is bound by a payment made by her guardian to her husband by her consent and direction.—State ex rel. Haines v. Parrish, 27 N. E. 652, 1 Ind. App. 441.

[d] (Sup. 1894)

All arrangements between a guardian and his ward soon after the arrival of the ward of age will be closely scrutinized.—Taylor v. Calvert, 37 N. E. 531, 138 Ind. 67.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. §§ 261, 305-307.

See, also, 21 Cyc. pp. 104-114; note, 21 Am. St. Rep. 94.

§ 70. Ratification of unauthorized acts.

[a] (Sup. 1852)

A guardian may invest the money of his ward in real estate under an order of the proper court; but, if he convert it without such order, he may be liable to answer for any loss that may occur, and the ward will have the option, on coming of age, of refusing the realty, conveying it to his guardian, and requiring the purchase money and interest. If he accepts the real estate with a full knowledge of all the facts and without fraud on the part of the guardian, he will be bound by such acceptance.—Sherry v. Sansberry, 3 Ind. 320.

[b] (Sup. 1860)

An alleged guardian's sale, though invalid because the seller had ceased to be a guardian, may yet be binding on the supposed ward by long acquiescence (15 years) on her part after coming of age, by her husband's receipt of the price, and by their permitting the purchaser to make valuable improvements.—Morris v. Stewart, 14 Ind. 334.

[c] (Sup. 1878)

Recovery by a ward, in an action against the guardian and his sureties to recover the purchase money of the ward's real estate sold by the guardian, is prima facie a ratification of the sale.—Bevis v. Heflin, 63 Ind. 129.

[d] (Sup. 1880)

Where a guardian and trustee sold his ward's land with her full knowledge and without objection, paid over to her the purchase money, and made his final settlement, which was approved; and the purchaser and his grantee held peaceable possession for seven years, the ward, whose motion to have her guardian's settlement set aside on the ground that said sale had been made while she was of age had been denied, could not recover the land.—Webster v. Bebinger, 70 Ind. 9.

[e] (Sup. 1884)

Where a ward, after majority, without fraud or undue influence, executes to his late guardian a receipt for the value of property obtained by him from the guardian during minority under a voidable contract, this is a ratification, although he was ignorant that he might disaffirm.—Clark v. Van Court, 100 Ind. 113, 50 Am. Rep. 774.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. §§ 308–315.

See, also, 21 Cyc. pp. 106, 107.

§ 72. Successive guardianships.

[a] (Sup. 1875)

A guardian may follow his ward's money, and recover it from one who obtained it from a former guardian under a contract made by such former guardian in his individual capacity, and not as guardian.—Fox v. Kerper, 51 Ind. 148.

[b] (Sup. 1878)

A guardian contracted with his wife to maintain and care for his wards, and promised to compensate her therefor out of the wards' estate. The guardian subsequently absconded without paying his wife. Held, that she could collect for such care and maintenance from his successor as guardian.—Rooker v. Rooker, 60 Ind. 550.

[c] (Sup. 1886)

A guardian who accepts from his predecessor in the trust a note payable to such predecessor individually is guilty of a breach of duty which renders him liable on his bond.—State ex rel. McIntosh v. Greensdale, 106 Ind. 364, 6 N. E. 926, 55 Am. Rep. 753.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. §§ 318–321.

See, also, 21 Cyc. pp. 273, 274.

§ 73. Representatives of deceased guardians.

[a] (Sup. 1878)

Under an order of court, made on motion of the surety of a deceased guardian, his administrator reported that the estate was chargeable with $311 belonging to the ward, that the estate was insolvent, and that the deceased guardian had so mingled the ward's estate with his own that it could not be identified. Held, that an order, thereupon made, that the administrator pay into court for the benefit of the ward said sum of $311, was erroneous.—Covey v. Neff, 63 Ind. 391.

[b] (Sup. 1882)

Where a guardian died without paying sums due to his wards, it is the duty of the guardian's administrator to pay such sum to the guardian succeeding his intestate, without demand therefor.—Higgins v. State ex rel. Smith, 87 Ind. 282.

[c] (Sup. 1886)

In an action by a newly-appointed guardian against the administrator of the former guardian to recover money belonging to the ward, no penalty can be collected unless there have been a demand and refusal to pay.—

Buchanan v. State ex rel. Roberts, 106 Ind. 251, 6 N. E. 614.

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. §§ 322–324; 22 CENT. DIG. Ex. & Ad. § 1646.

See, also, 21 Cyc. p. 119.

§ 74. Mortgage or lien of ward on property of tutor.

[a] (Sup. 1866)

Where a guardian gives a mortgage to his successor to secure "the amount ascertained to be owing" from himself to his successor, he cannot go behind the mortgage for the purpose of testing his liability.—O'Haver v. Shidler, 20 Ind. 278.

Where a guardian gives a mortgage to his successor to secure "the amount ascertained to be owing," from himself to his successor, and also delivers certain notes taken for loans of the ward's money, the mortgagee is not bound to pursue his remedy on the notes assigned before resorting to the mortgage.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

A special act authorizing the probate court of a certain county to sell certain specified real estate of a ward named in the act, on petition of his guardian, is valid.—Davidson v. Koehler, 76 Ind. 398.

Where a special act authorizing the sale of a ward's real estate does not specify that the petition shall be verified, it is not necessary to verify it, although similar petitions under the general rule are required to be verified.—Id.

Power to order sale as affected by duration of trust, see WILLS, § 686.

Sales without order of court, see ante, §§ 40–42.

§ 77. Purposes for which authorized.

[a] (Sup. 1851)

On an application by guardian for the sale of a portion of his ward's real estate, the reasons alleged were the indebtedness of the heirs and a benefit to their estate by changing the overplus above their indebtedness into a different investment. The heirs were in debt for their maintenance and for damages recovered by their mother in her application for dower; but it did not appear that payment ever passed, and it was shown that the heirs have other property, the income of which might pay the debts in a reasonable time, and the sale of which, should it become necessary to sell any, would be more to their advantage than that prayed for. Held, that an order of sale was correctly reversed.—Lindner v. Holmes, 2 Ind. 629.

[b] (Sup. 1884)

A guardian, acting under the order of a court of competent jurisdiction, has authority to lay out additions to cities and to dedicate lands to the public for streets and alleys.—City of Indianapolis v. Kingsbury, 101 Ind. 200, 51 Am. Rep. 749.

[c] (Sup. 1896)

Rev. St. 1894, § 2692 (Rev. St. 1881, § 2528), providing that the proper court may, on application of the guardian, order the ward's real estate to be sold, whenever a better investment of the value thereof can be made, authorizes the court to direct an exchange of the ward's lands for other lands.—Decker v. Fessler, 44 N. E. 657, 146 Ind. 16.

[d] (App. 1908)

Whenever necessary to pay debts of a ward or to discharge liens, the court may, on the application of the guardian, order a sale of the ward's real estate, or a portion thereof, as authorized by Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2692.—Alcon v. Koons, 42 Ind. App. 537, 82 N. E. 92, 84 N. E. 1104.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. §§ 327-329.

See, also, 21 Cyc. p. 122.

§ 81. Jurisdiction.

Exclusive or concurrent jurisdiction, effect of priority of jurisdiction, see COURTS, § 475.

[a] (Sup. 1840)

Under Rev. Code 1831, p. 173, authorizing a sale of a minor's interest in land on petition of the guardian showing certain facts, the evidence of the facts authorizing the sale need not appear upon the record to support the jurisdiction of the court.—Doe ex dem. Graeter v. Wise, 5 Blackf. 402.

[b] (Sup. 1880)

During the existence of the common pleas courts, a common pleas court had jurisdiction to order the sale by a guardian of real estate belonging to his ward and situate within the county.—McKeever v. Ball, 71 Ind. 398.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. §§ 334-336.

See, also, 21 Cyc. pp. 119-121.

§ 86. Petition or other application.

[a] (Sup. 1840)

Under Rev. Code 1831, p. 173, providing that, upon petition of "any guardian of a minor," etc., for sale of real estate, if certain facts shall appear, the probate court may decree a sale thereof, a joint petition by the respective guardians of several minors, joint owners of land, is sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the court to order a sale of the land.—Doe ex dem. Graeter v. Wise, 5 Blackf. 402.

[b] (Sup. 1873)

Where the interest of a ward in real estate under Acts 1843, pp. 529, 530, §§ 234, 239, was described in a petition to sell the same, as a reversionary interest created by a will which was referred to, and it was alleged that it would not accrue until after the decease of the guardian, who, by the will, had a life estate in the land, a mistake in calling the interest a reversionary one, instead of an interest in remainder, was immaterial.—Worthington v. Dunkin, 41 Ind. 515.

[c] (Sup. 1880)

Where a court had jurisdiction by statute to authorize guardians to sell real estate of their wards, the fact that it authorized a sale upon an insufficient and defective petition does not constitute a defect of jurisdiction.—McKeever v. Ball, 71 Ind. 398.

Under Act May 14, 1852 (2 Gav. & H. Rev. St. p. 20) § 4, providing that the court of common pleas of the proper county shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction to authorize guardians to sell and convey real estate of their wards, a petition to the proper court by a guardian for the sale of real estate of her wards gives the court jurisdiction, notwithstanding it does not contain a statement of the matters which the statute (2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 594, § 15) provides shall be set forth specifically.—Id.

[d] (Sup. 1890)

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 2528, which provides that a court may order the land of a minor to be sold on application of his guardian whenever a better investment of its value can be made, an application stating that it would be for the interest of the minor to exchange his land for certain other land is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction to order a sale of the minor's land for cash.—Nesbit v. Miller, 125 Ind. 106, 25 N. E. 148.

[e] (App. 1908)

On an application by a guardian for a sale of the ward's real estate to pay debts, the guardian must set forth in detail the facts connected with the estate, as required by Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2693.—Alcon v. Koons, 42 Ind. App. 537, 82 N. E. 92, 84 N. E. 1104.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. §§ 340-344.

See, also, 21 Cyc. pp. 125, 126.

§ 88. Hearing of application in general.[a] (Sup. 1854)

In the case of a guardian's application to sell real estate, it was not necessary, under the Revised Statutes of 1843, that the record should show that evidence was offered to support the matter set out in the petition.—Adkins v. Sidener, 5 Ind. 228.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. § 346.

See, also, 21 Cyc. p. 128.

§ 89. Determination as to necessity for sale, mortgage, or lease.[a] (Sup. 1854)

In proceedings by a guardian for the sale of his ward's real estate, it seems that evidence to sustain the averments in the petition is not necessary in order to authorize an order of sale, and, if the court is satisfied with the propriety of selling the real estate, it is sufficient.—Adkins v. Sidener, 5 Ind. 228.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. § 347.

See, also, 21 Cyc. p. 120.

§ 90. Order or decree.

Jurisdiction of one state court to modify decree of another state court, see COURTS, § 481.

Record of sale as documentary evidence, see EVIDENCE, § 332.

[a] (Sup. 1854)

It is not sufficient, under the Revised Statutes of 1843, to set aside the order for sale of the real estate of a ward, that the guardian filed his petition, the appraisers were appointed and sworn, the appraisal made and returned, and the order of sale made on the same day.—Adkins v. Sidener, 5 Ind. 228.

[b] (Sup. 1871)

An order for the sale of land of a minor does not operate in presenti, and convert the land into assets in the hands of the guardian, so as to prevent judgment against the minor obtained after the order, but before the sale, from becoming a lien on the land; nor does the title of a purchaser at a guardian's sale relate back to the order of sale, so as to prevent any intervening liens or rights being acquired by a creditor.—Shaffner v. Briggs, 36 Ind. 55, 10 Am. Rep. 1.

[c] (Sup. 1873)

Under Acts 1843, pp. 529, 530, §§ 233, 239, as amended by Acts 1845, p. 17, and Acts 1840, p. 52, the court is authorized to make an order allowing the guardian to sell the land of his ward at private sale for two-thirds of its appraised value; but, if the land be sold for its appraised value, such an order is not absolutely necessary, and would not void the sale in the lands of an innocent purchaser.—Worthington v. Dunkin, 41 Ind. 515.

[d] (Sup. 1856)

An order for the sale of the real estate of a ward, made upon the petition of a guardian, operates only upon the interest of the ward in the real estate held by him at the time of making the order, and does not operate upon the interest which vests in him, at the death of his mother, by virtue of the statute of descents, as her forced heir.—Erwin v. Garner, 108 Ind. 488, 9 N. E. 417.

[e] (Sup. 1887)

A guardian's sale of his ward's realty cannot be collaterally attacked with success on the ground that the guardian, in procuring the order of the court therefor, did not give the additional bond required by statute, and that the proceeds thereof were never accounted for by him.—Davidson v. Bates, 111 Ind. 391, 12 N. E. 687; Same v. Hutchins, 112 Ind. 322, 13 N. E. 106.

[f] (Sup. 1889)

A guardian obtained an order for the sale of his ward's real estate in order to pay debts incurred on behalf of the ward. Before the sale was made the ward died; and, upon report of the fact being made to the court, the guardian was ordered to proceed and settle the estate without letters of administration, as provided by Rev. St. 1881, § 2523. The guardian, in pursuance of the order before made, gave due notice, and sold the real estate, which sale was duly confirmed by the court. Held, that the sale was not invalidated by the fact that no new order therefor was obtained after the death of the ward.—Wingate v. James, 121 Ind. 69, 22 N. E. 735.

[g] (App. 1891)

An order of court authorizing a guardian to sell his ward's land, providing for the giving of a deed, but fixing no terms for the payment of the purchase price, and which shows an appraisal of the land at $16,000 and the filing of an additional bond for only $25,000, is so irregular that title founded upon it is not marketable.—Morris v. Goodwin, 1 Ind. App. 481, 27 N. E. 985.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. §§ 349-355.

See, also, 21 Cyc. pp. 129, 130.

§ 92. Special bond for sale.

Liabilities on bonds for sale, see post, § 110.

[a] (Sup. 1880)

A guardian's special bond for the sale of the ward's real estate, executed under 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 595, § 18, requiring the bond to be conditioned for the faithful payment and accounting for all moneys received from the sale, is not invalidated because conditioned only for the faithful discharge of his duties in view of the Act June 9, 1852 (2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 588), § 5, providing that the guardian's bond shall not be void on account of any informality or defect thereof but shall have the same force and effect as if it had been legally executed, or Code (2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 311), § 790, providing that no bond taken by an officer in the discharge of the duties of his office shall be void for want of form or substance or recital or condition, nor the principals or surety be discharged, but that the principals and surety shall be bound by such bond to the full extent contemplated by the law requiring the same and to the sureties to the amount specified in the bond, even though section 5 be applicable only to guardian's general bonds.—Stevenson v. State ex rel. Ruddell, 71 Ind. 52.

The bond of a guardian for the sale of his ward's real estate, conditioned merely "for the faithful discharge of his duties," is valid and binding.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1880)

A ward brought an action against the purchaser to have a sale made by his guardian set aside because no additional bond had been given and because the proceeds of the sale had been lost and unaccounted for. Held, that the sale was void.—McKeever v. Ball, 71 Ind. 398.

Where a sale of a ward's real estate is made by a commissioner, instead of the guardian, under 2 Rev. St. 1876, § 20, no bond is required of such commissioner; and the fact that he gives one does not relieve the guardian from executing the bond required by sections 18, 19 of said act.—Id.

[c] (Sup. 1888)

A bond for the sale of a ward's realty was filed by the guardian with one surety, instead of two, as required by Rev. St. § 2532, and the court approved it, and ordered the sale, which was made to a purchaser for value, but with knowledge that there was but one surety, and he in failing circumstances. The guardian converted a portion of the proceeds to his own use, and both he and the surety were insolvent at the time of sale, and so remain. Held that, the court having passed on the sufficiency of the bond and ordered the sale, the purchaser was protected.—Marquis v. Davis, 113 Ind. 219, 15 N. E. 251.

[a] (Sup. 1840)

Under Rev. Code 1831, p. 173, providing that, upon the petition of "any guardian of a minor" for sale of real estate showing certain facts, the probate court may decree a sale thereof, where a petition was presented by the respective guardians of several minors, joint owners of a tract of land, setting up the necessary facts, and a sale of the land as an entire tract was decreed, the sale was valid.—*Doe ex dem. Secondary evidence to show award of custody of infant, see EVIDENCE, § 162.

[a] (Sup. 1868)

Where a sale of land of an infant under order of court procured by the guardian was made by him for the purpose of obtaining to himself the title to the land, the proceedings appearing upon the record being regular and valid, upon false reports of the sale by the guardian, held, that a good title passed by a subsequent sale of the land by the guardian to a purchaser for a valuable consideration and without notice of the fraud.—Gwinn v. Williams, 30 Ind. 374.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. GUARD. & W. §§ 370, 371.

See, also, 21 Cyc. p. 135.

§ 100. — Requisites and validity in general.

[a] (Sup. 1840)

That the property of minors sold by guardians was appraised at $400 and sold for $100 is no objection to the validity of the sale.—Doe ex dem. Graeter v. Wise, 5 Blackf. 402.

[b] (Sup. 1873)

Where the court having jurisdiction over the subject-matter and the ward, who was represented by his guardian, erred in holding an insufficient petition to sell real estate of the ward to be good, it was a mere error, and not a defect of jurisdiction.—Worthington v. Dunkin, 41 Ind. 515.

[c] (Sup. 1897)

Rev. St. 1894, § 2697 (Rev. St. 1881, § 2533), provides that an order for sale of real estate by a guardian shall provide for reasonable notice of sale, but that, if the appraised value of the land does not exceed $1,000, the court may order it sold at private sale without notice. Held, that where the court had jurisdiction, and an order for a private sale by a guardian of land appraised at $3,600 did not provide for notice, and the sale was made without notice, and reported to and confirmed by the court, the sale was not void.—Eliason v. Bronnenburg, 147 Ind. 248, 46 N. E. 582.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. GUARD. & W. §§ 372, 373.

See, also, 21 Cyc. p. 136.

§ 103. — Confirmation.

[a] (Sup. 1861)

A ward cannot bring a complaint for a review of the proceedings had by his guardian for the sake of selling his real estate, for these proceedings are ex parte, and the ward was no party thereto, which the statute requires from one who would be complainant in such a case.—Davidson v. Lindsay, 16 Ind. 186.

[b] (Sup. 1862)

The proceedings upon a guardian's petition for the sale of real estate of his ward are ex parte in their character, and hence a suit will not lie by the ward to review a judgment therein.—Williams v. Williams, 18 Ind. 345.

[c] (Sup. 1873)

Though under Rev. St. 1843 a guardian, in making sale of the ward's realty, was not required to give notice thereof, he should have reported the sale to the court for confirmation before making a conveyance.—Maxwell v. Campbell, 45 Ind. 360.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. GUARD. & W. §§ 378-381, 391.

See, also, 21 Cyc. pp. 136-139.

§ 104. — Ratification and curing defects.

[a] (Sup. 1867)

The report of the sale of a ward's real estate was confirmed by the court, and at a subsequent term of court an application was made, on notice and motion, for an entry nunc pro tunc of a formal order directing the sale of the land. Held, that it was not necessary that the affidavits upon which the motion was based should be filed before the motion was made, and that as the record failed to show that the additional bond, which the statute requires before a sale is ordered, was filed, an order of sale would have been irregular, and hence there was nothing in the prior proceedings authorizing the amendment asked.—Makepeace v. Lukens, 27 Ind. 435, 92 Am. Dec. 263.

§ 105. — Opening, vacating, or setting aside, and resale thereon.

[a] (Sup. 1880)

In an action to recover real property, a deed of the property by a commissioner appointed by the court to make it, on sale of the ward's property by the guardian on the latter's petition, is sufficient evidence that the sale was approved by the court.—Edwards v. Powell, 74 Ind. 294.

[b] (Sup. 1891)

If the wards permit an irregular sale of their land by their guardian to stand, persons holding adverse title to the land cannot attack it, as they are not injured by such irregularity.—Meikel v. Borders, 129 Ind. 529, 29 N. E. 29.

[c] (Sup. 1896)

Where a guardian, appointed by a court of superior jurisdiction having authority to appoint guardians and order the sale of real estate of minors, but without jurisdiction to make the particular appointment, sells lands of the ward, under an order of such court, to one who purchases in good faith, the purchaser will be protected in his title, if the guardian applies the proceeds properly.—Decker v. Fessler, 146 Ind. 16, 44 N. E. 657.

[d] (Sup. 1897)

Where a complaint charges a fraudulent conspiracy between the guardian and the purchaser at the guardian's sale, to cheat the ward out of her land by means of a pretended sale, it is indispensably necessary that it contain an averment that the purchaser at the guardian's sale never paid the purchase money for the land.—Eliason v. Bronnenburg, 46 N. E. 582, 147 Ind. 248.

§ 106. — Operation and effect.

[a] (Sup. 1873)

Where a purchaser of real estate sold by a guardian under a valid order of sale has paid the purchase money and is in possession of the real estate, and the sale has been confirmed, he has an equitable title to the same, and is entitled to retain possession as against the wards.

—Marwell v. Campbell, 45 Ind. 360.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. § 390.

See, also, 21 Cyc. pp. 139, 140.

§ 107. — Collateral attack.

[a] (Sup. 1873)

Where the probate court entertained and granted a petition of a guardian to sell his ward's real estate, it must be presumed that it was shown to the court that the guardian was duly appointed and qualified.—Worthington v. Dunkin, 41 Ind. 515.

[b] (Sup. 1880)

On a collateral attack of a guardian's sale, it will be presumed that a petition for the sale was filed.—Webster v. Bebinger, 70 Ind. 9.

[c] (Sup. 1887)

However irregular the proceedings and orders of a probate court of general jurisdiction may be in relation to the sale and conveyance of real estate of wards, the sale cannot be questioned collaterally.—Walker v. Hill, 12 N. E. 387, 111 Ind. 223.

[d] (Sup. 1887)

A guardian's sale of his ward's realty cannot be collaterally attacked with success on the ground that the guardian, in procuring the order of the court therefor, did not give the additional bond required by statute, and that the proceeds thereof were never accounted for by him.—Davidson v. Bates, 111 Ind. 391, 12 N. E. 687; Same v. Hutchins, 112 Ind. 322, 13 N. E. 106.

[e] (Sup. 1891)

Where a guardian presents to the court a petition for an order to sell his wards' land, and the sale is ordered and approved by the court, it is valid as against collateral attack, notwithstanding certain irregularities by which the purchaser got the land for less than its appraised value.—Meikel v. Borders, 129 Ind. 529, 20 N. E. 29.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. §§ 392, 393.

See, also, 21 Cyc. p. 144.

§ 108. Rights and liabilities of purchasers.

[a] (Sup. 1863)

A guardian, being mother of her ward and having a dower interest in his real estate, applied for a sale of her ward's real estate, describing it as the entire title, without mention of her own interest. The order was made, and the sale completed accordingly, without any mention of her interest. Held, that she was estopped from setting it up against the title and interest which she had caused to be sold and conveyed.—Wiseman v. Macy, 20 Ind. 239, 31 Am. Dec. 316.

[b] (Sup. 1872)

If a guardian sell the real estate of his ward by order of the proper court, all the proceedings being formal and regular, and receives his own individual notes in payment, and fails to account to the proper court for the proceeds of the sale, the purchaser may be held accountable for the trust property, or for its proceeds, if sold by him to an innocent purchaser.—Wallace v. Brown, 41 Ind. 436.

[c] (Sup. 1873)

On trial of an action to recover land sold by a guardian, on the ground that the proceedings were void, plaintiff offered to prove that no sale was ever made; that the guardian's report of the sale and receipt of the purchase money was untrue; that the transactions set forth in the probate record were the result of an exchange between the guardian and the purchasers, the guardian taking the land received in exchange in his own name; and that no money was ever paid or agreed to be paid by the purchasers from said guardian. Held, that the evidence was inadmissible against defendant, who was a purchaser in good faith, and who had a right to rely on the record, unless a knowledge of its falsity was brought home to him.—Worthington v. Dunkin, 41 Ind. 515.

The failure of the appraisers to sign their appraisement was a defect which did not avoid a guardian's sale of his ward's land, as against purchasers in good faith, under Rev. St. 1843, p. 458, § 27.—Id.

[d] (Sup. 1878)

A purchaser, who knows that a vendor has made the sale of real estate as the guardian of one joint owner and the agent of another, has no right to presume that the payment will be applied on the amount due to the principal, and not on the amount due to the ward.—Bevis v. Heflin, 63 Ind. 129.

[e] (Sup. 1896)

Where a guardian who has received his appointment from a court having authority to make such appointment, but without jurisdiction to make the particular appointment, sells lands of his ward under an order of such court, the one who purchases and pays for such land, relying in good faith on such order, is to be protected in the title that he acquires thereby, if the guardian has properly applied the proceeds.—Decker v. Fessler, 44 N. E. 657, 146 Ind. 16.

§ 110. Liabilities on bonds for sale.

Estoppel of sureties, see PRINCIPAL AND SURETY, § 46.

[a] (Sup. 1863)

Suit may be instituted on a special sale bond of a guardian, whenever it is broken, without first resorting to the original bond.—State ex rel. Mount v. Steele, 21 Ind. 207, 83 Am. Dec. 346.

[b] (Sup. 1876)

An action can be maintained on a special bond given by a guardian for the sale of real estate before the general bond is exhausted or the sureties shown to be worthless.—Shook v. State ex rel. McCampbell, 53 Ind. 403.

An action may be maintained on a special guardian's bond for the sale of real estate without a previous demand for the money due.—Id.

[c] (Sup. 1878)

Where the assets converted by a guardian are the proceeds of his ward's real estate, the guardian's liability arises on the bond given to secure such proceeds.—Lowry v. State ex rel. Hill, 64 Ind. 421.

[d] (Sup. 1879)

A guardian's bond for the sale of the real estate of his ward, though not in terms conditioned for "the faithful payment, and accounting for, of all moneys arising from such sale according to law," as required by 2 Rev. St. 1876, pp. 595, 596, § 18, was good, as section 5 of the same statute gave it the same effect as if it had contained the proper condition.—Stevenson v. State ex rel. McDowell, 69 Ind. 257.

[e] (Sup. 1881)

An action by a ward on the bond of his guardian, given on an application to sell real estate, is a waiver of irregularity in the sale, and the sureties cannot avail themselves of such irregularity to avoid liability on the bond.—Gray v. State ex rel. Mills, 78 Ind. 68, 41 Am. Rep. 545.

[f] (Sup. 1881)

Where a guardian who has given an additional bond for the proceeds of land sold by him is in default, so that it is impossible to ascertain whether the money unaccounted for consisted of the proceeds of the land or not, the ward may recover, to the extent of the defalcation, from whichever set of bondsmen he may choose.—Yost v. State ex rel. Bouslog, 80 Ind. 350.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. §§ 589, 637.

§ 111. Deed to purchaser.

[a] (Sup. 1867)

A guardian's deed of the real estate of his ward, made under the order of the court on the guardian's petition for a sale of the land, has only the effect of a deed of quitclaim. The guardian cannot bind his ward by any covenants in the deed.—State ex rel. Chessier v. Clark, 28 Ind. 138.

[b] (Sup. 1873)

Under Act 1847, p. 117, § 2, a guardian's deed on sale of his ward's real estate need contain only succinct statements of the order of the court directing the sale, or the order confirming the same, or the order directing the conveyance.—Worthington v. Dunkin, 41 Ind. 515.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. §§ 180, 185.

See, also, 21 Cyc. p. 139.

§ 114. Proceeds.

[a] (Sup. 1863)

The guardian, and not the judge or clerk of the court, is the proper custodian of the moneys arising from the sale of the ward's real estate.—State ex rel. Mount v. Steele, 21 Ind. 207, 83 Am. Dec. 346.

[b] (Sup. 1882)

In an action to recover the purchase money of land of a ward, which it was averred had not been paid, but in lieu thereof certain indebtedness of the guardian to the defendant had been received and applied in its payment, an averment that, as agent for another party interested in the land and as the guardian of the ward, the defendant's proposition was accepted, which was not to apply the note of the guardian on the purchase money of the other party's interest, but to apply it on the purchase money of both interests, did not show that defendant paid the money on the ward's interest and therefore the paragraph was insufficient.—Hedfin v. Bevis, 82 Ind. 338.

§ 117. Rights of action between guardian and ward.

[a] (Sup. 1874)

Where a husband and wife are both infants, a payment made to the husband by the guardian of the wife need not be tendered back before suit is brought by the wife to recover the same of the guardian.—State ex rel. Wade v. Joest, 46 Ind. 233; State ex rel. Hutson v. Same, Id. 235.

[b] (Sup. 1876)

In an action against a guardian, his surety, and the assignee of the judgment on the note and mortgage wrongfully taken by the guardian in his own instead of in the name of his ward for a decree against them vesting the title of the judgment in the ward, the fact that the guardian's offer to deliver to the plaintiff the note and mortgage if they would credit the amount of them on the guardian's defalcation was declined, did not have the effect of vesting the ownership of the property in the guardian as his individual property, nor authorize him to convert it to his own use, where the offer was not followed up by bringing the note and mortgage into court.—Moon v. Martin, 53 Ind. 111.

[c] (Sup. 1883)

The right of a ward who has attained his majority to maintain an action against his guardian for a wrongful conversion of money received during the guardianship is clear. The ward may sue on the bond in the name of the state if he elects, or may proceed against the guardian individually for breach of duty.—Hays v. Walker, 90 Ind. 105.

[d] (Sup. 1883)

In order to give a ward a right of action against his guardian for moneys received by the guardian, it was not necessary that there should be a settlement of the guardian with the proper court and a formal discharge of the guardian by that court, nor was it necessary that the guardian should disavow his trust.—Jones v. Jones, 91 Ind. 378.

[e] (Sup. 1886)

Money in the hands of a guardian, belonging to his ward, at the time of his death, may be recovered from his administrator and his bondsmen, where they have failed to pay over the same, by the newly appointed guardian, without demand.—Buchanan v. State ex rel. Roberts, 106 Ind. 251, 6 N. E. 614.

§ 118. Rights of action by guardian or ward or both.

[a] (Sup. 1857)

Under 2 Rev. St. p. 27, § 4, providing that executors, administrators, or guardians of lunatics may sue, the guardian of a minor, though not named, is clearly within the meaning of the act.—Shepherd v. Evans, 9 Ind. 260.

The duty imposed upon guardians to collect all debts of their wards implies the right to sue to enforce such collection.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1871)

A guardian may maintain an action against the executors of an estate, who hold property to which his wards are heirs, for a proper sum for the maintenance and education of his wards.—Miller v. Duy, 36 Ind. 521.

[c] (Sup. 1877)

The guardian of an infant defendant in partition proceedings is not authorized to maintain an action to review such proceedings.—Bundy v. Hall, 60 Ind. 177.

[d] (Sup. 1878)

Where a guardian sells real estate of the ward, taking in part payment his own individual note or obligation held against him by the purchaser, and fails to pay over the amount thereof in money, the ward may maintain an action against the purchaser for the purchase money or to set aside the sale.—Bevis v. Heflin, 63 Ind. 120.

[e] (Sup. 1879)

Except when suing on the bond of a former guardian, a guardian may sue in his own name to recover a debt due his infant ward.—Potts v. State ex rel. Morgan, 65 Ind. 273.

[f] (App. 1891)

Where a guardian converts the funds of his wards and dies, the succeeding guardian may sue the estate of the former guardian, and is not restricted to an action on the former guardian's bond.—Harshman v. McBride, 2 Ind. App. 382, 28 N. E. 564.

[g] (Sup. 1896)

Under Rev. St. 1894, § 267 (Rev. St. 1881, § 266), providing that a father may sue for the injury of a child, and a guardian for the injury of his ward, but when the action is by a guardian the damages shall inure to the benefit of the ward, a guardian may sue for injuries to his ward, though the father of the ward be living.—Cleveland, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Moneyhun, 146 Ind. 147, 44 N. E. 1106, 34 L. R. A. 141.

[h] (Sup. 1898)

A guardian who is required to file the valuation of his ward's real estate, and of the annual rents and profits, and to give bond in four times the annual value of the rents and profits (Rev. St. 1894, § 2076; Rev. St. 1881, § 2515), and has the management of the ward's estate during minority (section 2682, Rev. St. 1894; section 2518, Rev. St. 1881), and has the duty to manage the estate for the best interest of the ward (section 2685, Rev. St. 1894; section 2521, Rev. St. 1881), can maintain suit in her own name to enjoin injury to the ward's real estate in her possession; right of action in favor of infant not being limited to suit by next friend by section 256, Rev. St. 1894 (section 255, Rev. St. 1881), providing that, "when an infant shall have a right of action, such infant shall be entitled to bring suit thereon," and section 257, Rev. St. 1894 (section 254, Rev. St. 1881), providing that, before any process shall be issued in the name of an infant who is a sole plaintiff, a person shall consent to appear as the next friend of such infant.—Kinsley v. Kinsley, 49 N. E. 819, 150 Ind. 67.

(I) (App. 1904)

Under the statutes, a guardian has the right to enforce by suit the collection of debts due his ward.—Bryson v. Collier, 71 N. E. 220, 33 Ind. App. 494.

(J) (Sup. 1907)

A guardian is not a trustee of an express trust within Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 252, providing that a trustee of an express trust may sue without joining with him the person for whose benefit the action is prosecuted.—Campbell v. Fichter, 168 Ind. 645, 81 N. E. 661.

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, §§ 265, 267, 1208, 2707, providing for actions by guardians, and section 2684, authorizing the appointment of a guardian ad litem to defend the interests of an infant, and section 2685, prescribing the duties of guardians, when considered in connection with the general provision of the Code as to parties plaintiff, a guardian having no authority over his ward's property, except such as is conferred on him by statute, has no authority to maintain on behalf of his ward a suit to contest a will.—Id.

(a) (Sup. 1858)

A suit against a guardian upon a contract touching his ward's estate is personal against him.—Stevenson v. Bruce, 10 Ind. 397.

(b) (App. 1893)

When a person has a legal and equitable claim against the estate of wards, whether infants or persons of unsound mind, he may present his claim by proper complaint or petition against such guardian in the probate court having jurisdiction of the estate of the wards and of the person of the guardian, and secure an order of such court for the payment of such amount out of the trust estate, as the court may, on the evidence, under the circumstances, see fit, in the exercise of a sound discretion to allow.—Turner v. Flagg, 33 N. E. 1104, 6 Ind. App. 563.

(c) (App. 1898)

Though it is the duty of a guardian to defend actions brought against his ward, and for that purpose he must appear in the case, all actions seeking to affect the title of the infant real estate must be brought directly against the infant, and process must be served upon him the same as if he were an adult, or the court obtains no jurisdiction.—Harrison v. Western Const. Co., 41 Ind. App. 6, 83 N. 236.

§ 126. Parties.

[a] (Sup. 1857)

Where a promissory note is made payable to "E, guardian of the estate of R.," upon its face E. is the real party in interest, and may sue in his own name; and the above words may be regarded as surplusage or as descriptive personæ.—Shepherd v. Evans, 9 Ind. 260.

[b] (Sup. 1857)

The general guardian, in a suit against minor heirs to foreclose a mortgage, need not be made a party. The infants alone are sufficient.—Alexander v. Frary, 9 Ind. 481.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

In an action by a county treasurer against a guardian to recover back taxes on property of the wards, it was not necessary to make the wards parties, though the property should be assessed in their names.—Vogel v. Vogler, 78 Ind. 353.

[d] (Sup. 1881)

A ward is not a proper party to a suit against his guardian by the treasurer of the county to recover unpaid taxes due by the ward.—State ex rel. Ferguson v. Howard, 80 Ind. 466.

[e] (Sup. 1882)

A ward is neither a necessary nor a proper party to an action against the guardian upon a claim due from him as guardian.—Ray v. McGinnis, 81 Ind. 451.

[f] (Sup. 1884)

A guardian, in behalf of his infant ward, may represent the ward in partition proceedings.—Miller v. Smith, 98 Ind. 226.

[g] (Sup. 1885)

Under R. S. 1881, §§ 255, 256, 287, when an infant has a cause of action for waste, suit must be brought in his own proper name by next friend, and not in the name of the guardian.—Wilson v. Galey, 103 Ind. 257, 2 N. E. 736.

[h] (Sup. 1889)

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 1194, which allows guardians to act for their wards in suits for partition, and section 2542, which allows them to assent to a partition of their wards' lands, a guardian may bring suit in partition in his own name for the benefit of his ward.—Howen v. Swander, 121 Ind. 164, 22 N. E. 725.

[i] (App. 1891)

Where a guardian converts the funds of his wards, his successor may maintain a suit therefor in his own name, under Rev. St. § 2521, subd. 5, making it the duty of the guardian to collect all debts due the ward.—Harshman v. McBride, 2 Ind. App. 382, 28 N. E. 564.

§ 128. Termination of guardianship pending action.

[a] (App. 1907)

An action to recover real estate belonging to a ward, upon the death of the ward, revives in favor of his heirs at law.—Hurst v. Hawkins, 39 Ind. App. 467, 79 N. E. 216, 80 N. E. 42.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. § 438.

See, also, 21 Cyc. p. 206.

§ 130. Pleading.

In suit against guardian to recover taxes, see TAXATION, § 592.

[a] (Sup. 1866)

In an action by a guardian against the maker of a note assigned by his ward, it is not necessary to allege that the infant disaffirmed the assignment before payment by the maker to the assignee.—Briggs v. McCabe, 27 Ind. 327, 80 Am. Dec. 503.

[b] (Sup. 1869)

A complaint against a guardian to recover for maintaining and providing for his ward, which does not contain any averment of a request or promise made by the defendant, or any allegation that he had failed to provide, within the means in his hands as guardian for the reasonable wants of his ward, is bad on demurrer for want of sufficient facts.—Gwaltney v. Cannon, 31 Ind. 227.

[c] (Sup. 1874)

A ward cannot maintain an action against her guardian for credits and assets in his hands alleged to belong to the ward, in the absence of any averment that they have been collected by the guardian or of negligence on his part, or some other allegation that would render the guardian legally responsible therefor.—Sanders v. State ex rel. Bucher, 49 Ind. 228.

[d] (Sup. 1877)

In an action to recover for work and labor performed for the defendant, the answer alleged that such services had been performed while the defendant was the guardian of the plaintiff; that the defendant had fully settled his trust, received the receipt of his ward in full, and been discharged from his trust by the proper court on filing his final report; and that said report had been approved more than three years prior to the commencement of the action. Held that, for want of a direct averment that the matter in controversy had been included in such settlement, the answer is insufficient.—Voiles v. Beard, 58 Ind. 510.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

A complaint by a guardian is not defective because it does not show plaintiff's appointment.—Favorite v. Slaughter, 79 Ind. 562.

[f] (Sup. 1885)

A complaint by a relator as an heir of the decedent on the bond of a guardian for failure to pay over money to which the relator was entitled is not defective because it does not aver that the person referred to therein as the heir was the relator, where it fairly appeared that the relator and the person mentioned in the complaint were, in fact, one and the same person.—Naugle v. State ex rel. Burton, 101 Ind. 284.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. §§ 440-446.

See, also, 21 Cyc. pp. 200-211.

§ 131. Evidence.

Admissions as evidence, see EVIDENCE, §§ 222, 224.

Competency of witnesses to testify as to transactions with decedent, see WITNESSES, § 149. Resignation of guardian as affecting his competency as a witness in a suit against him, see WITNESSES, § 112.

Stipulations and agreed statements for purpose of trial, see TRIAL, § 35.

[a] (Sup. 1854)

Courts will presume strongly in favor of the ward, and against the guardian, if he has been delinquent or guilty of neglect.—Jennings v. Kee, 5 Ind. 257.

[b] (Sup. 1874)

In a suit against a guardian, by a party claiming to be an heir of a deceased ward, for money alleged to have belonged to the ward, where the guardian answered that he received the money by the terms of a will (made a part of the answer) bequeathing it, in case of the death of the ward to persons other than the plaintiff, the will, purporting to have been executed in another state, and the certificate of probate thereon, certified by the clerk of the court of common pleas of the county in which said suit was brought to have been filed in open court, and to be on file in his office, and to be a true copy of the will and of the certificate of probate thereon as made in said state, was admitted in evidence without objection. Held, that this showed that the money was held by the guardian under the terms of the will.—State ex rel. Splain v. Joyce, 48 Ind. 310.

[c] (Sup. 1883)

In all cases of delinquency and neglect courts will presume in favor of a ward against the guardian as strongly as the fact will warrant.—State ex rel. Dunham v. Roc, 91 Ind. 406.

[d] (Sup. 1885)

In an action by a guardian for an amount found due his ward on a settlement made with defendant at a certain date, and as to which an issue has been made, proof of such settlement and the matters which entered into it are admissible.—Binford v. Miner, 101 Ind. 1.

[e] (Sup. 1885)

That a sum of money in a guardian's hands was paid over to the ward is not established by the guardian's final report showing such sum, with a prayer for his discharge, and an order of the court approving his report and discharging him.—Naugle v. State ex rel. Burton, 101 Ind. 284.

[f] (Sup. 1886)

Where a guardian contracts or deals directly with his ward, he must show fair dealing on his part, as in other cases of fiduciary relationship; but no such burden is upon him in a suit to set aside his final settlement report for negligence or misconduct.—Wainwright v. Smith, 106 Ind. 239, 6 N. E. 333.

[g] (Sup. 1886)

As a general rule, the guardian should require the wife of a mortgagor to whom he loans his ward's funds to join in executing a mortgage, and, if she does not, the burden of showing that the husband's interest in the land furnished ample security is upon the guardian.—Slaughter v. Favorite, 107 Ind. 201, 4 N. E. 383, 57 Am. Rep. 106.

[h] (App. 1891)

In an action against a guardian for the value of land belonging to his wards, alleged to have been sold for taxes because of his negligence in failing to pay the same, a special verdict found that the fair value of the land was $350; that the lien thereon was $250; that the defendant did not apply for any order to satisfy his wards' interest in the land, but that he endeavored unsuccessfully to obtain a purchase for it at more than the tax lien; and that there was no fraud or collusion between defendant and the purchaser at the tax sale. One of the owners gave defendant $18, to be used in paying the taxes, if he could get enough to make up the balance, but he returned it. He at the time had enough money to pay them, and it does not appear that he could have raised enough.—Held, that judgment was improperly entered for plaintiffs.—Wainwright v. Burroughs, 1 Ind. App. 393, 27 N. E. 591.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. § 452.

See, also, 21 Cyc. p. 217.

§ 133. Judgment.

Conclusiveness, as against ward, of judgment against guardian, see JUDGMENT, § 692.

[a] (Sup. 1848)

In an action against a guardian as such, the judgment, if any against him is rendered, should be against him personally, and not to be made of the goods and estate of the wards in his hands.—Clark v. Casler, 1 Ind. 243, Smith, 150.

Judgment in an action against a guardian upon his individual undertaking to pay for supplies furnished to his ward should be against him personally.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1860)

In a suit against a guardian by his ward for failure to report as required by law, the statute does not authorize a judgment for 10 per cent. on the amount of trust funds in his hands.—Ely v. Hawkins, 15 Ind. 230.

[c] (Sup. 1862)

In a widow's suit for partition of her husband's lands, service was made on the testamentary guardian of one of his minor children, who were the defendants. Held, that a rendition of judgment for want of an answer by this guardian, without proof, was error; that the guardian could have been compelled to answer, or otherwise could have been removed.—Richards v. Richards, 17 Ind. 636.

[d] (Sup. 1876)

Where a guardian wrongfully procures a judgment in his own name on a chose in action belonging to his ward, and the penalty of the guardian's bond has been exhausted, leaving an unsecured balance due the ward, after the guardian's insolvency, the ward may have a decree against such guardian, his surety, and the assignee of such judgment, who took the assignment with knowledge of the facts, vesting in such ward the title to the judgment.—Moon v. Martin, 55 Ind. 218.

[e] (Sup. 1886)

Unless there has been a demand and a refusal to pay, no penalty as for conversion can be recovered in an action by a ward, against the administrator of his guardian to recover money belonging to the ward in the hands of his guardian at the time of the latter's death.—Buchanan v. State ex rel. Roberts, 100 Ind. 251, 6 N. E. 614.

[f] (Sup. 1895)

Where a guardian sues for libel, and obtains a judgment, and pending an appeal the ward, having attained her majority, settles the suit, and executes a satisfaction of the judgment, such satisfaction, to the amount expended by the guardian and the liabilities incurred by him in the suit, will be set aside if he has no funds belonging to the ward to pay the same.—Curran v. Abbott, 141 Ind. 492, 40 N. E. 1091, 50 Am. St. Rep. 337.

[g] (App. 1906)

A judgment that "plaintiff recover of and from defendant F., guardian of H., the sum of $152, together with his costs and charges, * * * with relief from valuation laws," shows on its face that it is a personal judgment against F.—Hall v. Ferguson, 57 N. E. 133, 24 Ind. App. 532.

[h] (App. 1907)

While it is not necessary to make the ward a party with his guardian, a judgment affecting the ward's title to real estate is properly rendered in favor of the ward.—Hurst v. Hawkins, 39 Ind. App. 407, 79 N. E. 216, 80 N. E. 42.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. §§ 453-450.

See, also, 21 Cyc. pp. 217, 218.

§ 134. Execution and enforcement of judgment.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

Where a guardian shows that he has no funds belonging to his ward's estate, it is error to order him to pay a judgment rendered against him for clothing furnished the ward; and the fact that such guardian is the surety on the bond of his predecessor, who is insolvent and against whom he holds a judgment for funds of the estate converted by him, affords no reason for granting such order.—Stumph v. Gæpper, 76 Ind. 323.

[b] (Sup. 1895)

Where the guardian of a minor recovers a judgment for libel against the proprietor of a newspaper, and, after the minor attains her majority, she settles with the proprietor, and executes a release of the judgment, an ex parte order forbidding the issuing of an execution on the judgment is not binding on the guardian.—Curran v. Abbott, 141 Ind. 492, 40 N. E. 1091, 50 Am. St. Rep. 337.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. § 457.

See, also, 21 Cyc. p. 218.

§ 135. Appeal and error.

Appellate jurisdiction as between particular courts, see COURTS, § 220 (11).

[a] (Sup. 1861)

Where a jury has declared that expenditures for the support of a ward from the principal of the ward's estate are proper, the supreme court will not disturb such finding, where it would not set aside a verdict in other cases.—State ex rel. Druliner v. Clark, 16 Ind. 97, 102.

[b] (Sup. 1877)

An action to review a proceeding for partition of lands cannot be maintained by the guardian of an infant defendant.—Bundy v. Hall, 60 Ind. 177.

[c] (Sup. 1884)

A guardian may appeal in behalf of his ward from a decision in partition proceedings.—Miller v. Smith, 98 Ind. 226.

[d] (App. 1907)

Service of notice of appeal on a guardian in his official capacity is not service upon such guardian in his personal capacity.—Hurst v. Hawkins, 39 Ind. App. 467, 79 N. E. 216, 80 N. E. 42.

Failure to account as contempt, see CONTEMPT, § 10.

Right to trial by jury on exceptions to guardian's report, see JURY, § 19.

Sales of property of infants under statute or order of court, see INFANTS, §§ 35-41.

Subrogation of ward to rights of creditor of guardian on payment of debt from property of ward, see SUBROGATION, § 25.

§ 137. Duty to account in general.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

A statutory requirement that a guardian shall render a biennial account under a penalty of 10 per cent. damages is reasonable, and should be strictly enforced against the guardian.—Eiceman v. State ex rel. Leonard, 75 Ind. 46.

[b] (App. 1891)

Where it was alleged that the guardian had received rent from the ward's realty, and had occupied it, without rendering any account therefor, it was a sufficient answer that the guardian was then the husband of the ward, that they had lived together on such property during the alleged occupancy, and that the only money received as rent therefor was used by them, with the wife's consent, for domestic purposes.—State ex rel. Haines v. Parrish, 1 Ind. App. 441, 27 N. E. 652.

The right of an infant ward to money held in trust for her by her husband, as guardian, is not affected by their subsequent divorce.—Id.

[c] (Sup. 1886)

By the express provisions of Rev. St. 1881, § 2521, when a ward arrives at majority, the guardian must fully account and pay over to the estate remaining in his hands.—Curran Abbott, 40 N. E. 1091, 141 Ind. 492, 50 A. St. Rep. 337.

[d] (App. 1905)

A guardian is bound to make full disclosure to the court of his transactions, and the law requires of him the exercise of the utmost good faith.—State ex rel. Millice v. Peterse, 36 Ind. App. 269, 75 N. E. 602.

[e] (App. 1907)

Guardianship is ended by the death of the ward, and it then becomes the duty of the guardian to account for and pay over to the proper person all of the estate of the ward remaining in his hands, unless the ward's personal estate does not exceed $500, in which case the guardian may settle the estate himself.—Hurst v. Hawkins, 39 Ind. App. 467, 79 N. E. 216, 80 N. E. 42.

[f] (App. 1908)

Under the express provisions of Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2685, subd. 3, if a guardian fails to render an account of his trust every two years, he is liable to a penalty of 10 per cent. of the entire estate, and to a forfeiture of allowance for services.—Alcon v. Koons, 4 Ind. App. 537, 82 N. E. 92, 84 N. E. 1104.

The purpose of Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2685, subd. 3, requiring guardians to account every two years, was to obtain in permanent and reliable form from time to time statements of the condition of estates for the information of the court and the protection of the ward.—Id.

§ 138. Who entitled to require accounting.

[a] (Sup. 1828)

Though, in general, a ward must be of age before he can require his guardian to account, yet in chancery, he may during minority call for an accounting for cause.—Peck v. Braman, 2 Blackf. 141.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. § 465.

See, also, 21 Cyc. p. 153.

§ 139. Who liable.

[a] (Sup. 1828)

Though as a general rule a ward cannot compel an accounting by his guardian until after he becomes of age, yet, where the guardianship terminates by the death of the guardian before the ward reaches his majority, he may in chancery compel an accounting by the personal representatives of the guardian.—Peck v. Braman, 1 Blackf. 544.

[b] (Sup. 1837)

An infant has the right to compel any person who enters upon his lands and receives the proceeds thereof to account for the same in a court of chancery as his guardian.—Grimes v. Wilson, 4 Blackf. 331.

§ 144. Jurisdiction of courts.

[a] (Sup. 1828)

The guardianship of minors and the adjustment of their accounts is within the jurisdiction of a court of equity.—Peck v. Braman, 2 Blackf. 141.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. §§ 477-481, 488.

See, also, 21 Cyc. pp. 155-158.

§ 145. Proceedings for accounting.

[a] (Sup. 1874)

On a failure of a guardian to comply with an order issued without notice to him, and requiring him to pay a debt claimed to be due from him and his ward, a citation to him to appear instantan and render an account of his proceedings in the guardianship is illegal.—Martin v. Beasley, 49 Ind. 280.

[b] (App. 1908)

A guardian filing a final report and seeking to be discharged is regarded as the plaintiff in the accounting proceeding.—Alcon v. Koons, 42 Ind. App. 537, 82 N. E. 92, 84 N. E. 1104.

§ 150. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1858)

A guardian's claim for services need not show that he has not used the ward's money in his private business.—Nettleton, Ex parte, 10 Ind. 352.

[b] (App. 1891)

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 2521, which provides that a guardian shall receive no compensation for his services if he fails to render an account of his receipts and expenditures at least once in two years, a guardian who has failed to render such account for nearly three years after his appointment can recover nothing for his services, although owing to the fact that he was the husband of the ward, he might have been under no obligation to render such account.—State ex rel. Haines v. Parrish, 1 Ind. App. 441, 27 N. E. 652.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. §§ 498-500, 502, 504-507.

See, also, 21 Cyc. pp. 173-176.

§ 153. Form and requisites of account.

[a] (Sup. 1882)

A guardian of two or more minors should file separate accounts for each ward.—Wood v. Black, 84 Ind. 270.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. § 508.

See, also, 21 Cyc. pp. 154, 155.

§ 155. Objections and exceptions.

Review of exceptions to report as dependent on bill of exceptions, see APPEAL AND ERROR, § 544.

[a] (Sup. 1880)

An exception to a guardian's report allowing a stepfather for boarding and clothing the ward is bad on demurrer, where it avers that a person named is the ward's stepfather without also averring that he was the stepfather when he furnished the board and clothing.—Glidewell v. Snyder, 72 Ind. 528.

An exception to a guardian's report charged that 6 per cent. interest only had been accounted for, and that 10 per cent. should be charged. There was no averment that the guardian received, or by proper diligence could have obtained, more than the sum with which he had charged himself, nor that he had used the trust funds in his own business, nor that there was any other fact tending to show that he should be held to account for more than the lawful rate of interest. Held, that the exception presented a question of law, and not of fact, and was not the subject of demurrer.—Id.

[b] (App. 1900)

Where the plaintiff objected to the final report of a guardian because a judgment in his favor against such guardian for goods furnished the ward had not been paid, and the plaintiff's receipts showed that he had received all that he alleged was due him in his complaint, except 11 cents, an order overruling his exceptions was sustained by the evidence.—Hall v. Ferguson, 57 N. E. 153, 24 Ind. App. 532.

Where the plaintiff in a prior suit in the superior court against a guardian and his bondsmen, for goods furnished the ward at the request of the guardian, finally agreed to a judgment against the guardian, and afterwards filed exceptions to his final report because the judgment had not been paid, such exceptions were properly overruled, since the judgment was a personal one against the guardian.—Id.

[c] (App. 1902)

An administrator of a person under guardianship at the time of his death may file exceptions to the guardian's final report if the ward's assets are not properly accounted for by the guardian.—Peterson v. Erwin, 62 N. E. 719, 28 Ind. App. 330.

[d] (App. 1909)

The finding, on hearing of exceptions to the final report and account of a guardian calling in question two items of credit only, that the services covered by those items were of the reasonable value of a certain amount is sufficient for a judgment; all other items in the account standing, as such finding is to be read in connection with the account.—In re Kitchen, 89 N. E. 375.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. §§ 470, 510.

See, also, 21 Cyc. p. 162.

§ 157. Evidence.[a] (Sup. 1891)

In a suit on a guardian's bond, the burden is on the relators to show a breach of its conditions; but, on questions arising on exceptions to the guardian's report or in any other way in the matter of the guardianship itself, the burden is on the guardian.—State ex rel. Wiseman v. Wheeler, 26 N. E. 552, 1008, 127 Ind. 451.

[b] (App. 1908)

When a guardian files a report to which exceptions are taken, the burden is on him to establish facts entitling him to a discharge.—Alcon v. Koons, 42 Ind. App. 537, 82 N. E. 92, 84 N. E. 1104.

[c] (App. 1909)

On the hearing of exceptions to the final report and account of a guardian, calling in question items of credit, he has the burden of proof, so that unless the facts established show affirmatively that he is entitled to more than the court allows him, he cannot complain.—In re Kitchen, 89 N. E. 375.

§ 158. Hearing or reference.[a] (App. 1908)

On a trial of exceptions to a guardian's report, it is proper practice, on request, for the court to specially find the facts, and to state conclusions of law thereon.—Alcon v. Koons, 42 Ind. App. 537, 82 N. E. 92, 84 N. E. 1104.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Guard. & W. §§ 514, 515, 521.

See, also, 21 Cyc. pp. 164, 166.

§ 159. Order or decree.[a] (Sup. 1852)

An order given to a guardian by the probate court pursuant to Rev. St. p. 610, § 96, in relation to the management, investment, and disposition of the estate and effects in his hands, cannot be impeached collaterally, except for fraud.—Sherry v. Sansberry, 3 Ind. 320.

[b] (Sup. 1877)

A guardian who, pursuant to an order of the court, and without exception thereto, on making a report of his ward's estate intended to be final, makes a new report charging himself with an amount greater than that charged in the original, is precluded from subsequently objecting to the order.—Stumph v. Guardianship of Pfeiffer, 58 Ind. 472.

[c] (Sup. 1886)

The approval of the final report of a guardian is an adjudication of all matters involved in the proper accounting by the guardian of the money with which he is chargeable, but is not an adjudication of the subject of his negligence in the management of the estate, unless that subject is embraced in the report.—Wainwright v. Smith, 106 Ind. 239, 6 N. E. 333.

[d] (Sup. 1886)

If the ultimate judgment upon the final report of a guardian is right, there can be no reversal, although one of the conclusions of law may be erroneous.—Slaughter v. Favorite, 107 Ind. 291, 4 N. E. 880, 57 Am. Rep. 106.

§ 160. Opening or vacating.

Action to open or set aside, see post, § 165.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

In a guardian's account, it appeared that he had turned over to his successor a note of an insolvent secured only by a junior mortgage. Held, that there was sufficient prima facie evidence to set aside the account.—Favorite v. Slaughter, 79 Ind. 562.

[b] (Sup. 1886)

If a guardian in his final report conceals from the court that the maker of a note held by him is insolvent, or makes any false statement, the report will be set aside, and the settlement based on it annulled.—Slaughter v. Favorite, 107 Ind. 291, 4 N. E. 880, 37 Am. Rep. 106.

[c] (Sup. 1891)

The approval of the final settlement and discharge of the administrator of a deceased infant precludes the bringing of an action against the infant's guardian who has accounted to the administrator and been discharged, either on his bond, or to set aside his report.—Horton v. Hastings, 128 Ind. 103, 27 N. E. 338.

[d] (Sup. 1891)

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 2403, which provides that final settlements of estates that affect a party adversely may be set aside, and section 386, which provides that the court shall disregard any error which does not affect the substantial rights of the adverse party, and no judgment can be reversed by reason of such errors, a final report and settlement of a guardian will not be set aside on the ground that the guardian failed to make an inventory of plaintiff's property in proper form, and to file reports at the time they should have been filed, where he honestly discharged his duties, accounted for all moneys and property in his hands belonging to his ward, and with his final report filed receipts in full signed by the ward after becoming of age.—La Follette v. Higgins, 129 Ind. 412, 28 N. E. 768.

[e] (App. 1893)

Where a guardian, in his report, charges the ward with board, and fails to inform the court that he has taken the ward to live with him as a member of the family, and that there is no agreement to pay for board, such concealment is ground for suit by the ward to set the guardian's settlement aside.—Doan v. Dow, 8 Ind. App. 324, 35 N. E. 709.

The fact that a guardian loaned his ward's money at 10 per cent., and accounted for 6 per cent. only, and failed to account for moneys received for the ward, is ground for setting aside his final settlement.—Id.

[f] (App. 1894)

Upon the final report of a guardian all previous reports are subject to review and correction.—Duckworth v. Kirby, 10 Ind. App. 139, 37 N. E. 729.

[g] (App. 1905)

A complaint by a ward against her ex-guardian and his bondsmen, filed within three years after settlement of the guardian's final account, alleged that the guardian had in his hands $600.38 when he filed his report in 1892; that at that time he claimed that plaintiff's mother had overdrawn her account with him as her agent in the sum of $200, which sum he appropriated to his own use from the money in his hands belonging to plaintiff, and received a credit therefor in his 1892 report; that his final settlement was made on the basis of $400.-38 due to plaintiff on May 19, 1892, instead of $600.38, and that he had never accounted for the difference. Held that, under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2685, cl. 4, requiring every guardian at the expiration of his trust fully to account for and pay over to the proper person all of the estate of his ward remaining in his hands, the complaint stated facts justifying the vacation of the final settlement.—State ex rel. Millice v. Petersen, 75 N. E. 602, 36 Ind. App. 269.

A direct attack on a guardian's final account for fraud or mistake of fact may be made either on the final settlement of the guardian or within three years after such settlement has been acted on.—Id.

The trust created by guardianship is in fieri until final settlement is made and the guardian discharged, and his reports are under the control of and may be set aside, corrected, or modified by the court to which he reports.—Id.

§ 161. Review.

[a] (Sup. 1879)

An appeal lies only from such settlement of a guardian as fully discharges him from all the duties of his trust.—Angevine v. Ward, 66 Ind. 460.

[b] (Sup. 1883)

Until a guardian has finally settled and been discharged, an appeal will not lie from an order of the court concerning the settlement of the guardianship.—Pfeiffer v. Crane, 89 Ind. 485.

[c] (App. 1902)

Exceptions to the final report of a guardian bring up for review all his previous reports.—Peterson v. Erwin, 62 N. E. 719, 28 Ind. App. 330.

Conclusiveness of adjudication as against sureties on bond, see post, § 180.

Effect on liability of sureties on bond, see post, § 176.

[a] (Sup. 1849)

The account of a guardian settled with the probate court after his removal, though ex parte, is to be considered as prima facie correct.—State ex rel. Shannon v. Strange, 1 Ind. 538, Smith, 367.

[b] (Sup. 1874)

The final settlement of a guardian made in the proper court, unless revoked, reopened, or appealed from, is conclusive upon the parties. It cannot be attacked collaterally, in a suit by the ward on the guardian's bond, for the allowance to a third person of an unjust and fraudulent claim in such settlement.—Holland v. State ex rel. Fenton, 48 Ind. 391.

[c] (Sup. 1878)

The reports of a guardian may be collaterally attacked.—Cogswell v. State ex rel. Albert, 65 Ind. 1.

[d] (Sup. 1880)

A guardian's report, which has been approved by the court, is deemed prima facie correct; it being presumed that the several items were examined and approved by the court.—Gidewell v. Snyder, 72 Ind. 528.

[e] (Sup. 1881)

Where a decedent made his final settlement as a guardian and reported it to the proper court, and it was approved, and he was finally discharged by the court, a claim embraced therein was finally adjudicated in that proceeding, and a collateral suit cannot be maintained to recover the same thing.—Candy v. Hanmore, 76 Ind. 125.

Ex parte orders and partial reports in relation to the duties of guardians, though only prima facie correct and subject to revision at any time before final settlement, cannot be collaterally attacked.—Id.

[f] (Sup. 1884)

Unapproved guardian accounts conclude no one.—State ex rel. Dunham v. Roche, 94 Ind. 372.

[g] (Sup. 1885)

The discharge of a guardian, without requiring him first to pay over what his report showed was in his hands, does not amount to an adjudication that he had paid it over.—Naugle v. State ex rel. Burton, 101 Ind. 284.

[h] (Sup. 1887)

The approval of a guardian's final report and settlement by the circuit court is such an adjudication of all matters as were, or should have been, brought into the account and report, as precludes all collateral inquiry into its correctness by parties interested so long as the judgment remains in force.—Castetter v. State ex rel. Bradburn, 112 Ind. 445, 14 N. E. 388.

[i] (Sup. 1894)

The final report of an outgoing guardian, resigning his trust during the period of guardianship, and the approval of such report, followed by his discharge by the court, does not constitute a "final settlement."—State ex rel. Coleman v. Peckham, 136 Ind. 198, 36 N. E. 28.

[j] (Sup. 1894)

The final report and discharge of a guardian is not a bar to an action against him by wards to enforce a constructive trust as to purchased by him, where he was not required, and did not, report concerning that transaction.—Taylor v. Calvert, 138 Ind. 67, 37 N. E.

[k] (Sup. 1897)

A partial settlement of a guardian w approved by the court cannot be attacked collaterally, but is binding as to all matters properly embraced therein and adjudicated until aside, corrected or modified by some direct proceeding brought for the purpose.—State ex Little v. Parsons, 47 N. E. 17, 147 Ind. 62 Am. St. Rep. 430.

[l] (App. 1902)

Where a guardian, while his ward still under age, petitioned that all the m cy belonging to the ward's estate be turned over to him for the purpose of boarding, clothing, and schooling the ward, and the co without having the ward before it, and with notice to him, and without any prayer for charge in the petition, entered an order accepting the guardian's report and discharging the ward was not bound thereby, and mi upon attaining his majority, demand a settlement notwithstanding such order of discharge.—State ex rel. Webb v. Stockwell, 63 N. 321. 28 Ind. App. 530.

[m] (Sup. 1904)

The settlement of the accounts and charge of a guardian do not create an estoppel against the surety on his bond, so as to preclude him from enforcing a claim under an indemnifying mortgage given by the guardian, where the surety in fact became liable for and paid a sum as such.—Howe v. White, 60 N. E. 162 Ind. 74.

[n] (App. 1906)

An order settling a guardian's final account and discharging him, while imperious to collateral attack as to all matters included in the report, does not constitute an adjudication as to any matter not included in the final settlement.—State ex rel. Millice v. Petersen, N. E. 602, 36 Ind. App. 269.

[o] (App. 1908)

Where a guardian makes a full disclosure of his ward's estate to the court and has executed the court's order with reference thereto, the guardian is not liable.—Alcon v. Koe, 42 Ind. App. 537, 82 N. E. 92, 84 N. E. 11.

§ 164. Private accounting and settlement.

[a] (Sup. 1847)

An orphan female ward, 9 years old, domiciled in Ohio, where the age of majority was was brought into this state, where such age was 21, by B., who was here appointed her guardian. At the age of 18 the ward chose this state as her permanent home, having resided here continuously since her removal from Ohio. B., after his ward became domiciled here and before she was 21, was instrumental in the sale of her real estate for her in Ohio, the proceeds of which he received and brought into this state. Held, that he was chargeable as guardian for said proceeds, and that his payment of them to his ward before she was 21 would not excuse him from accounting here for the same to the proper authority.—Hiestand v. Kuns, 8 Blackf. 345, 46 Am. Dec. 481.

[b] (Sup. 1877)

An infant married to a man of full age is bound by a settlement made by him with her guardian by her consent and direction.—Haines v. State ex rel. Shope, 60 Ind. 41.

[c] (Sup. 1890)

A guardian who makes an informal settlement, and obtains a release from his ward, assumes the burden of making it clearly appear that he fully and fairly disclosed the condition of the ward's estate at the time of the settlement, and that he paid over the amount found due, either in money or in such securities as had been taken in pursuance of the order of the court or in the exercise of such diligence and prudence as men display in the conduct of their own affairs. The burden rests upon the guardian to show affirmatively that he exercised the required degree of care in taking the securities which he turned over to his ward, or that they were good beyond peradventure and that they will be collectible when they fall due.—Lane v. Lawder, 23 N. E. 758, 122 Ind. 548.

A settlement between a guardian and his ward, made out of court, and without turning over to the ward the money, property, or securities which actually constituted the trust estate, is not such a settlement as will stand in a court of equity when seasonably assailed.—Id.

Where adequate care is observed by a guardian and the condition of the estate, and the character of the investments of the trust funds are truthfully reported to the court, a guardian may relieve himself and his sureties by turning over the estate to his ward who has attained his majority in the condition in which it actually exists at the time a settlement is made. Where a settlement is thus made, and it afterwards turns out that securities so taken and turned over were worthless, in order to justify cancellation of the settlement, it must appear that there was negligence and bad faith on the part of the guardian.—Id.

In a proceeding to set aside the final settlement report of a guardian, when it appears that the guardian obtained a receipt in full and release from his ward by a representation that certain securities which he turned over were solvent and constituted the balance of her estate, when in fact the securities were worthless notes, which had been taken by the guardian in his own personal transactions, the receipt and release will not be a bar to opening up the final settlement.—Id.

Accrual of right of action, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, § 82.

Joinder of causes, see ACTION, §§ 45, 46.

[a] (Sup. 1874)

The settlement of a guardian cannot be set aside or opened up except by a direct proceeding.—Barnes v. Bartlett, 47 Ind. 98.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

The three-year limitation prescribed by 2 Rev. St. p. 537, § 116, in actions to set aside the final settlement of an executor or an administrator, applies to actions to set aside the final settlement of a guardian.—Briscoe v. Johnson, 73 Ind. 573.

[c] (Sup. 1886)

A complaint to set aside the final settlement report of guardian, averring, among other things, that money out of the ward's estate was improperly paid by him upon an order of court obtained by misrepresenting the facts, is sufficient.—Wainwright v. Smith, 106 Ind. 239, 6 N. E. 333.

[d] (Sup. 1889)

A complaint by wards to set aside a settlement by a guardian, charging him with conspiring with another to defraud plaintiffs, alleging that the guardian falsely represented to the court, for the purpose of defrauding plaintiffs, that they had no homes, and, unless their funds were used to pay the rent of a house occupied by their father, as tenant for said guardian's confederate, they would be without a home, and dependent on charity, upon which the court ordered the rent paid out of the trust fund, states a good cause of action.—Wainwright v. Smith, 117 Ind. 414, 20 N. E. 297.

Such a complaint is supported by findings that defendant drew the application referred to, knowing it to be false, and that said guardian swore to it, and presented it to the court, and obtained the order, acting upon which he paid the amount of the rent out of plaintiffs' estate, though the fact of the conspiracy between the parties is not expressly found.—Id.

[e] (Sup. 1890)

In a proceeding to set aside a final settlement of a guardian, it appeared that the guardian obtained a receipt in full and release from his ward by representing that certain securities which he turned over were solvent and constituted the balance of her estate, when in fact they were worthless notes which had been taken by him in his own personal transactions, Held, that in such case, as law and good conscience required the guardian to withhold the receipt and release, and not obtain his discharge as guardian until the money due his ward had been paid over, he would not be heard to say that he did not agree to do so.—Line v. Lawder, 122 Ind. 548, 23 N. E. 758.

Where a guardian obtains a receipt in full and release on representing that certain securities, which he turned over, were solvent and constituted the balance of her estate, when in fact they were worthless notes which had been taken by him in his own personal transactions, it is not necessary that the notes should be tendered back before application to set aside the settlement is made, but it is sufficient if the ward offers to return them at the hearing.—Id.

[f] (Sup. 1891)

In the absence of a special statute providing for setting aside the final reports of guardians, such actions must be brought within the time limited by Rev. St. 1881, § 2403, relating to the settlement of decedents' estates, and providing that final settlements may be set aside within three years, and that persons under disability may sue three years after removal of their disability.—Horton v. Hastings, 128 Ind. 103, 27 N. E. 338.

[g] (App. 1893)

Though a ward must take notice of the final report of his guardian, he is not limited to remedy by appeal for the guardian's failure to account for moneys received, but may, if in proper time, sue to set the final settlement aside.—Doan v. Dow, 8 Ind. App. 324, 35 N. E. 709.

[h] (Sup. 1894)

The sureties on a guardian's bond may be made parties in an action by the ward against the guardian to set aside an approval of his account rendered at the time of his resignation.—State ex rel. Coleman v. Peckham, 136 Ind. 198, 36 N. E. 28.

[i] (Sup. 1897)

A guardian's final settlement made by him with the ward and approved by the court after the ward becomes twenty-one years old or, if a female, after she marries a man of that age, cannot be set aside, modified, or corrected after the expiration of three years from the date of its approval, nor can it be set aside in an action brought within the three years except for fraud or mistake.—State ex rel. Little v. Parsons, 47 N. E. 17, 147 Ind. 379, 62 Am. St. Rep. 430.

The final report of a guardian resigning during the period of guardianship is not, though approved by the court, a final settlement, within the limitation of actions to set aside final settlements to three years after the ward is relieved of disability.—Id.

[j] (Sup. 1905)

A claim filed by a ward against her mer guardian's estate, for money had and received, is not in the nature of a suit to set aside the guardian's final settlement, nor upon the guardianship bond.—Roberts v. Smith, 165 Ind. 414, 74 N. E. 804.

VII. FOREIGN AND ANCILLARY GUARDIANSHIP.

§ 166. Foreign appointment.

[a] (Sup. 1895)

In habeas corpus for the custody of a minor, it appeared that the petitioner was appointed guardian in Missouri, where he resided at the commencement of the proceedings, where the property of the ward was situated, that the ward, 17 years old, though provided with a good home and educational advantages by his guardian, ran away to his sister in Indiana, who was only 22 years of age, and otherwise unfit to have the custody of her brother. The Missouri statute provides that a guardian shall have the control of his ward's person, charge of his support. Held, that petitioner entitled to the custody and control of the ward.—Grimes v. Butsch, 41 N. E. 328, 142 Ind.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

§ 168. Custody and disposition of property.

[a] (Sup. 1889)

Though the power of a guardian is limited to the state in which he receives his appointment, yet he is competent to receive the property or custody of the ward when placed in his hands by such court to be taken to the state where both belong, but such guardian, to enable him to receive the property or the custody of the ward, must make proof of his guardianship.—Warren v. Hofer, 13 Ind. 167.

[b] (Sup. 1888)

Rev. St. 1843, c. 35, § 107, authorizing the court having jurisdiction to make such order respecting the delivery and payment of property and moneys to the nonresident guardian of nonresident wards as to the court may seem just and right, was but declaratory of what the law was in that respect before its enactment.—Earl v. Dresser, 30 Ind. 11, 95 Am. Dec. 66.

The question of the exercise of the power to make an order respecting the delivery and payment of money to nonresident guardian of nonresident wards is addressed to the sound judicial discretion of the court, to be determined upon principles of comity, equity, and justice; and where it appears for the best interest of the ward, and it does not appear that any principle of public policy will be violated, or the legal rights of any of our citizens injured or impaired, the court should grant the order.—Id.

Letters of guardianship granted by the courts of one state do not operate to give the guardian a strict right to control assets of the ward situated within another state.—Id.

It is proper to direct a guardian appointed for a nonresident to pay to the father of the ward, who was appointed guardian of such ward's person and estate in a foreign state, funds belonging to such ward, where it appears that no rights of any of the citizens of this state would be injured by the transmission of the fund to the foreign guardian.—Id.

[c] (Sup. 1877)

Under Rev. St. 1876, p. 593, the circuit court has power to make an order requiring a domestic guardian who has funds in his hands belonging to nonresident wards to pay over such funds to a foreign guardian, when in the exercise of a sound discretion such an order appears to be for the best interests of the wards.—Marts v. Brown, 56 Ind. 396.

In an action by a foreign guardian of nonresident wards, to require the resident guardian to pay over funds of the wards held by him, an answer charging the unfitness of the persons with whom the wards are residing to have charge of them is insufficient.—Id.

A foreign guardian of nonresident wards may sustain a petition to the circuit court having jurisdiction of a resident guardian holding funds of such wards for an order directing the latter to pay over his funds to the petitioner.—Id.

§ 170. Actions by foreign guardians.

[a] (Sup. 1876)

Where a foreign guardian sues to recover personal property of his ward situate in Indiana, the fact that the complaint does not show that the guardian has complied with the provisions of Act May 3, 1869 (2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 593), in regard to the filing of an authenticated copy of his appointment, cannot render the complaint bad on demurrer assigning as cause the want of sufficient facts.—*Shook v. § 173. Nature and extent in general.

[a] (Sup. 1862)

Where a wife is appointed a guardian, her husband should be taken as her sole bondsman only when his pecuniary resources are ample.—Ex parte Maxwell, 19 Ind. 88.

[b] (Sup. 1864)

Where the original bond given by a guardian was in a sum too small, and he gives an additional bond voluntarily, such second bond is as binding upon him as though given in compliance with an order of the court.—Potter v. State ex rel. Thompson, 23 Ind. 550.

[c] (Sup. 1866)

The principal obligor is not the agent of the clerk or court in procuring the execution of the bond. It is the business of the guardian to present the bond to the clerk or court for approval.—Blackwell v. State ex rel. Simpson, 26 Ind. 204.

[d] (Sup. 1874)

The estate of a surety upon a guardian's bond is liable for a default of the guardian which occurred subsequent to the death of the surety.—Voris v. State ex rel. Davis, 47 Ind. 345.

[e] (Sup. 1878)

The surety of a guardian is immediately liable on the guardian's misapplication of the ward's money; and the guardian's subsequent solvency, when he signs a new bond with a new surety, is immaterial.—State ex rel. Caving v. Sanders, 62 Ind. 502, 30 Am. Rep. 203.

[f] (Sup. 1881)

A bond given by a guardian appointed as such for the "unknown heirs" of a deceased person, being a nullity, is not valid as a common law bond.—State ex rel. Ross v. McLaughlin, 77 Ind. 335.

Where a guardian was appointed for the "unknown heirs" of a deceased person, and it appeared that the only heir of such decedent was a grandchild born to a married daughter of the decedent after the death of the latter, the obligors on the guardian's bond are not estopped, in an action by such grandchild on such bond, to assert that the appointment was void.—Id.

[g] (Sup. 1881)

Where a guardian's bond is valid on its face, the sureties thereon cannot escape liability by disputing the truth of its recitals.—Gray v. State ex rel. Mills, 78 Ind. 68, 41 Am. Rep. 545.

[h] Where the penalty in a guardian's bond is left blank, the defect is cured by Rev. St. § 2516, providing that a guardian's bond shall not be void on account of any informality, illegality, or defect, either formal or substantial, but shall have the same effect as if legally executed.—(Sup. 1885) State ex rel. Rowe v. Britton, 102 Ind. 214, 1 N. E. 617; (1888) Britton v. State ex rel. Rowe, 115 Ind. 35, 17 N. E. 251.

The failure to approve a guardian's bond does not invalidate it.—Id.

[i] (Sup. 1889)

It is no objection to a complaint in an action on a guardian's bond that it is therein alleged that the guardian was appointed by the court, while an exhibit shows that his bond was approved by the clerk, as, in spite of the irregularity, if any, the bond is valid by Rev. St. § 2516, providing that such a bond shall not be void for any informality, illegality, or defect therein, or by reason of any such informality, etc., in the appointment of the guardian.—Peelle v. State ex rel. Hipes, 118 Ind. 512, 21 N. E. 288.

The fact that there was no personality belonging to the ward's estate, and that his land was worth $1,200, and the rental value was $45, at the time of the guardian's appointment, and that the clerk by mistake fixed the penalty of the bond at $2,400, is no ground for reforming the bond, as the mistake, if any, was one of law.—Id.

Even if the mistake were one that could be corrected, the surety cannot, after his principal has, on the faith of the bond, received money of the ward, procure the reduction of the penalty of the bond, and thereby cause loss to the ward, but is bound by his long acquiescence.—Id.

§ 174. Property covered.

[a] (Sup. 1854)

The bond given by a guardian in assuming the duties of his trust was by Rev. St. 1838, only designed to secure the faithful appropriation and investment of the personal estate of the ward, including the rents of the real estate.—Warwick v. State ex rel. Gladden, 5 Ind. 350.

Sureties on the original bond of a guardian under the Revised Statutes of 1838, were not responsible for the application of the purchase money received by the guardian on a sale of the real estate of his ward under an order of the probate court. In case of such a sale, an additional bond was necessary.—Id.

The sureties on the bond of a guardian who has received personal estate belonging to his ward are responsible for a faithful application of it, although it came into his hands from an estate on which no administration had been had.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1864)

The money received by a guardian from a sale of real estate belonging to his ward cannot be recovered in a suit on a bond given under Rev. St. 1843, p. 608, § 82, but only on the bond given by the guardian upon an order by the court for the sale of such real estate.—Potter v. State ex rel. Thompson, 23 Ind. 607.

[c] (Sup. 1867)

Upon the death of the principal in a guardianship bond, the trust is thereby terminated, and the sureties become liable for the amount of money in the guardian's hands, belonging to the ward, at the time of his death.—State ex rel. McCoy v. Thorn, 28 Ind. 306.

[d] (Sup. 1874)

The statute not having made it one of the duties of the county clerk to receive money due a ward from a guardian upon the settlement of the guardianship, though deposited with the clerk by order of the court, the guardian and the surety on his bond are liable to the ward if the clerk converts to his own use money so deposited.—State ex rel. Roberts v. Fleming, 46 Ind. 206.

[e] (Sup. 1874)

If real estate of wards is sold on the application of the guardian, he and his sureties are not liable on his original bond for the proceeds of such sale. If it is sold on the application of some person other than the guardian, and the proceeds paid over to such guardian, he and his sureties are liable on his original bond for such proceeds.—Colburn v. State ex rel. Arnold, 47 Ind. 310.

[f] (Sup. 1876)

The bond of a guardian, conditioned for the faithful discharge of his duties as guardian of the property of a person named as the minor heir of a certain decedent, covers moneys of the ward's estate received by the guardian from other sources, as well as from the estate of said decedent.—Hunt v. State ex rel. Martin, 53 Ind. 321.

[g] (Sup. 1879)

The assets in the hands of a guardian on whose bond suit was brought for a failure to pay over assets belonging to the ward consisted of certain notes which had been given to him by the surety of a former guardian on settlement with him; and one of the notes had not become due, and the others had been collected. Held, that the amount of such unmatured note could be included in the damages.—Hipes v. State ex rel. Shirk, 69 Ind. 403.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

Where a guardian converts his ward's money prior to giving a bond, and subsequently he replaces it, his sureties are liable if he fails to account for the money so replaced.—Parker v. Medsker, 80 Ind. 155.

[l] (Sup. 1882)

Where a guardian had given an additional bond in case of sale of real estate, and a surety on both bonds had been discharged, and a new bond ordered. Held, that the new bond covered his entire liability for all moneys or property in his hands at the time of execution.—Moody v. State ex rel. Burton, 84 Ind. 433.

[j] (Sup. 1885)

Where a guardian has once been discharged with money in his hands not paid over, and subsequently is reappointed, and accounts only for money received since reappointment, the sureties on his first bond are liable.—Naugle v. State ex rel. Burton, 101 Ind. 284.

[k] (Sup. 1889)

Where a guardian's account on its face shows him indebted to his wards, but he has really charged himself therein with a sum, paid him by mistake by the administrator of the estate of the wards' father, greater than the amount of the indebtedness, action cannot be maintained on the guardian's bond as for money in his hands due the wards.—State ex rel. Howe v. Bond, 121 Ind. 187, 22 N. E. 998.

§ 175. Functions and acts covered.

[a] (Sup. 1844)

When the surety becomes dissatisfied, and applies to be discharged from further responsibility, and a further bond, with additional surety, is thereupon given for the performance of the condition of the former bond, the surety in the new bond is liable for the previous, as well as the subsequent, defalcations of the guardian.—Armstrong v. State ex rel. Morrow, 7 Blackf. 81.

[b] (Sup. 1878)

A surety on the additional bond executed by a guardian, under 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 539, § 122, unless the same is merely subsidiary to the original bond, is primarily bound for a breach thereof, either separately in a suit thereon against himself alone, or jointly with the surety on the original bond, in a suit on both bonds against all the sureties.—Allen v. State ex rel. Stevens, 61 Ind. 268, 28 Am. Rep. 673.

[c] (Sup. 1878)

The sale, barter, or assignment by a guardian of the property of his ward, including choses in action, for his own use, is a conversion for which the guardian is liable on his bond.—Lowry v. State ex rel. Hill, 64 Ind. 421.

[d] (Sup. 1883)

No recovery can be had against the sureties on a guardian's second bond for a conversion of the ward's money by the guardian, in the absence of any showing that such conversion occurred after the execution of the second bond.—Williams v. State ex rel. Roberts, 89 Ind. 570.

[e] (Sup. 1889)

A guardian invested his ward's money in a mortgage, and afterwards bought the mortgaged land himself, agreeing to pay the mortgage, which he entered satisfied of record, and then mortgaged the land to a third person. Held, that this constituted a conversion of his ward's money, for which his bondsman was liable.—Hogshead v. State ex rel. Allen, 120 Ind. 327, 22 N. E. 330.

[f] (Sup. 1904)

Sureties on a guardian's bond are not liable for defalcations of the guardian occurring before the execution of the bonds signed by them.—Howe v. White, 69 N. E. 684, 162 Ind. 74.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. GUARD. & W. §§ 600-606.

See, also, 21 Cyc. pp. 224, 231.

§ 176. Settlement and discharge of principal.

[a] (Sup. 1878)

In an action by a ward on a guardian's bond, where the guardian pleaded a final settlement, and the reply was a general denial, a verdict for the ward was not contrary to law, where there was evidence that a receipt in full of all demands given to the guardian was to enable him to settle with the court, on his agreement that, if it was not right, he would make it right.—Beedle v. State ex rel. Small, 62 Ind. 26.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

See 21 Cyc. p. 237.

§ 177. Discharge of sureties.

[a] (Sup. 1862)

It is perhaps the right of a surety on a guardian's bond without showing any reason to ask the court to discharge him from the bond, and the duty of the court on such application to require the execution of another bond and grant other proper relief.—Kendrick v. Wilkinson, 18 Ind. 206.

2 Rev. St. p. 328, § 26, provides that sureties on a guardian's bond may be discharged from future liability under the same rules and regulations prescribed for the discharge of sureties of executors and administrators, and that all enactments on that subject shall apply to guardians and guardians' bonds and sureties. Held to apply to additional bonds given on the sale of real estate.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1863)

The additional bond given by a guardian in an application to sell the real estate of his ward, under section 18, p. 571, 2 Gav. & H. St., is not discharged by the fact that, on reporting the sale of the real estate, he produced the proceeds of the sale in court, and then withdrew them by order of the court.—State ex rel. Mount v. Steele, 21 Ind. 207, 83 Am. Dec. 346.

Such a bond is not merely subsidiary to the original bond given by the guardian, but is an independent undertaking, and can only be discharged by the actual payment of the moneys arising from the sale of the real estate, according to law, to the person entitled to receive the same.—Id.

[c] (Sup. 1873)

Where a guardian procures an extension of the time for payment of money due to his ward by a mere agreement to pay a rate of interest which the guardian is bound by law to pay, the guardian's surety is liable on his bond to the ward.—Douglass v. State ex rel. Chaney, 44 Ind. 67.

[d] (Sup. 1875)

A guardian, in purchasing land for herself, used in payment a note given her as guardian on the sale of her ward's land; and the ward, upon coming of age, ratified and confirmed in writing the purchase as an investment of his estate, and released all right of action against certain named sureties on the bond of his guardian, but expressly excepted others. Held that, by such ratification and release, a surety so excepted therefrom was also released.—Tyner v. Hamilton, 51 Ind. 259.

[e] (Sup. 1878)

Upon breach of a guardian's bond, the liability of the surety is not affected by a subsequent release from suretyship by order of the court upon his own application and the execution of a new bond with a new surety. In an action on the old bond, an answer setting up a former recovery by the plaintiff in an action on the new bond is insufficient.—State ex rel. Page v. Page, 63 Ind. 209.

[f] (Sup. 1879)

A bond was given by a guardian who had applied for leave to sell the real estate of his ward; and, in a suit thereon, the defense was set up that the surety at least was discharged, because, after the bond was executed, the court changed the terms of the order for the sale. Held no defense, because the terms of the sale, as fixed by the first order of the court, constituted no part of the contract evidenced by the bond, and the court might, in its discretion, alter the terms of the sale without impairing the obligation of the bond.—Stevenson v. State ex rel. McDowell, 69 Ind. 257.

[g] (Sup. 1881)

A surety on a guardian's bond obtained his release, and the guardian, resigning his trust, obtained letters of guardianship in another county, gave his bond, and made a report, charging himself with a certain sum as belonging to his ward. Held, that the surety was not released from liability for the guardian's defalcation prior to these proceedings.—Yost v. State ex rel. Bouslog, 80 Ind. 350.

[h] (Sup. 1882)

In an action on a guardian's bond to recover an indebtedness against the ward's estate, the answer states a valid defense, where it alleges that plaintiff accepted, in extinguishment of the debt, the individual note of the guardian.—Price v. Barnes, 7 Ind. App. 1, 31 N. E. 809, 34 N. E. 408.

[i] (App. 1896)

The only way a surety can be released from liability on a guardian's bond is to comply with the letter of the statute and make his application thereunder for release.—Rush v. State ex rel. Bixler, 49 N. E. 839, 19 Ind. App. 523.

A subsequent bond filed by a guardian, additional and cumulative in its legal character, did not release the surety on the first bond, and the fact that the court used the words "new bond" in its order showing the filing and approval of the second bond can make no difference.—Id.

A guardian's original bond is not discharged by the filing of a second bond, required by laws of the United States before he could receive pension money for the wards.—Id.

§ 178. Breach or fulfillment of condition.

[a] (Sup. 1878)

A guardian's failure to loan money derived from the sale of his ward's real estate, when he had the opportunity of doing so on good security, the conversion of such money by him, and his failure to pay and account for the same. Held to constitute a breach of his bond, which recited that he had been ordered to sell said real estate, and was conditioned that he should faithfully discharge the duties of his trust according to law.—Cogswell v. State ex rel. Albert, 65 Ind. 1.

[b] (Sup. 1882)

If a guardian accepts the surrender of his own note in payment of the price of his ward's land, this constitutes a breach of the bond.—Hedlin v. Bevis, 82 Ind. 388.

[c] (Sup. 1882)

It is a sufficient allegation of breach of a guardian's bond that the guardian had been removed, and had not accounted to any of the wards for money received.—Moody v. State ex rel. Burton, 84 Ind. 433.

[d] (Sup. 1886)

Where a guardian fails to file an inventory, as required by Rev. St. 1881, § 2521, there was a technical breach of the conditions of his bond, such as will authorize nominal damages only in the absence of a showing of actual damages.—Buchanan v. State ex rel. Roberts, 6 N. E. 614, 106 Ind. 251.

[e] (App. 1907)

A partner, as guardian of a minor, used the funds of the ward in the partnership business. The partner sold his interest in the business to his copartner, who assumed to pay the money due from the partner to the ward as a part of the purchase price. Thereafter the copartner was appointed guardian of the ward and charged himself with the amount due from the partner as former guardian to the estate of the ward. The copartner, as guardian, never actually separated the money thus due the ward from his own funds, but continued to keep and use the same in his private business. Held, that the copartner as guardian converted the funds of his ward, rendering his surety on his bond liable therefor.—United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. State ex rel. Smith, 40 Ind. App. 136, 81 N. E. 226.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. GUARD. & W. § 620.

§ 179. Necessity of accounting and default by principal.

[a] (Sup. 1848)

Proceedings must first be had between the ward and his guardian, requiring the latter to account, before the ward can sustain an action against the guardian and the sureties on his bond.—Hunt v. White, 1 Ind. 105.

§ 180. Conclusiveness of adjudication against principal.

[a] (Sup. 1878)

A surety on a guardian's bond is not estopped in an action on the bond to go behind the reports made by the guardian, and to show the real condition from time to time of the assets in the guardian's hands.—Lowry v. State ex rel. Hill, 64 Ind. 421.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

In an action on a guardian's bond, his settlement and discharge cannot be attacked, as they are res adjudicata.—State ex rel. Favorite v. Slaughter, 80 Ind. 507.

[c] (Sup. 1894)

A guardian, after having loaned his ward's money, without an order of the court, to a partnership, and taken their note therefor, without security, resigned during the period of guardianship, and his account, in which the note was included, was approved by the court. He concealed from the court the fact that the partnership was insolvent, and stated that it would be adverse to the ward's interest to change the investment made by him. Held, that the approval of the account and acceptance of the resignation was not a bar to an action by the ward on the guardian's bond, as the matters complained of are not those disclosed in the report, and adjudicated by the court, but rather those concealed from the court.—State ex rel. Coleman v. Peckham, 136 Ind. 198, 36 N. E. 28.

§ 181. Summary remedies.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

Where a guardian had no money belonging to his ward's estate with which to pay a claim, the fact that he was sole bondsman of the former guardian did not justify the court in ordering him to pay the amount of such claim into court, for, though it may have been a sufficient reason why he should no longer act as guardian of his ward, it would not justify the court in coercing the payment of the judgment in such a summary manner.—Stumph v. Goepfer, 76 Ind. 323.

[a] (Sup. 1846)

A declaration in debt on a guardian's bond alleged that the defendant had failed to pay over certain money to his ward after he had arrived at full age. Held, that a plea that the defendant had lent the money, etc., should show that the loan was authorized by an order of the probate court.—Cottingham v. State ex rel. Hare, 7 Blackf. 406.

If the declaration in debt on a guardian's bond assign specific breaches, a plea that the defendant had faithfully discharged the duties of his guardianship is bad; so also is a plea, in such case, that the defendant was not guilty of the alleged breaches.—Id.

[aa] An action lies on a guardian's bond by his ward without first ascertaining the amount due on the guardianship accounts.—(Sup. 1849) State ex rel. Shannon v. Strange, 1 Ind. 538, Smith, 367, overruling Hunt v. White (1848) 1 Ind. 105; (1856) State ex rel. Benton v. Railsback, 7 Ind. 434.

[b] (Sup. 1849)

A declaration on a guardian's bond must contain an assignment of breaches of it.—State ex rel. Shannon v. Strange, 1 Ind. 538, Smith, 367.

A settlement made by a guardian with the probate court, after his removal, is prima facie correct, and may be given in evidence in a suit on the guardian's bond.—Id.

Where a guardian has left the state and gone to parts unknown, the ward is excused from demanding an accounting of him before suing on his bond for conversion of the trust property.—Hufford v. State ex rel. White, 6 Ind. 365.

[c] (Sup. 1860)

An action will not lie upon the bond of a guardian, to recover money for which he failed to account on his final settlement with the proper court, after three years from such final accounting and settlement of his trust; the ward being of full age, and under no disabilities.—State ex rel. Daggs v. Hughes, 15 Ind. 104.

[cc] (Sup. 1860)

Until the removal of a guardian from his trust, the statute does not authorize a suit by his infant wards on his bond for the recovery of money in his hands.—Ely v. Hawkins, 15 Ind. 230.

[d] (Sup. 1861)

Where a guardian has used the interest and part of the principal of his ward's personal estate for her support, without direction of the proper court, if any credit is allowable therefor, the account can be taken, and such credit allowed in a suit on his guardian's bond.—State ex rel. Druliner v. Clark, 16 Ind. 97, 102.

[dd] (Sup. 1864)

The thirteenth section of the act touching the relation of guardian and ward makes 2 Gav. & H. 531, § 163, applicable to suits on bonds of guardians, and under it, in such suits, 10 per cent. damages should be added to the amount found to be retained by the guardian.—Potter v. State ex rel. Thompson, 23 Ind. 607.

[e] (Sup. 1866)

An action upon a guardian's bond is properly brought on the relation of the successor of the defaulting guardian.—Blackwell v. State ex rel. Simpson, 26 Ind. 204.

[ee] (Sup. 1867)

Upon the death of the principal in a guardianship bond, the trust is hereby terminated, and the sureties become liable for the amount of money in the guardian's hands, belonging to the ward, at the time of his death; and it is not necessary that the ward should first resort to a suit against the legal representatives of the guardian.—State ex rel. McCoy v. Thorn, 28 Ind. 306.

[f] (Sup. 1873)

Where, in a complaint upon a guardian's bond, the only allegation as to the estate that came to the hands of the guardian is that there came to his hands on a certain day three several promissory notes, of a certain value at that date, without showing that they were due, or when they would become due, is bad, though it is alleged in general terms, as a breach of the bond, that the guardian converted said assets to his own use and benefit.—Kidwell v. State ex rel. Boyden, 45 Ind. 27.

[ff] (Sup. 1873)

In a suit upon a guardian's bond, an answer by the sureties that the guardian was poor and indigent, and was compelled to use the money sued for in support of the relator, and that he wrongfully refused to claim any allowance for the support of the relator, and asking that the amount so expended may be set off against the claim of the relator, is bad, as not showing the necessity for such a use of the funds.—Myers v. State ex rel. Appleton, 45 Ind. 100.

[g] (Sup. 1874)

In assessing damages in a suit on a guardian's bond, the amount of principal and interest realized by the guardian should be ascertained. If the money has not been loaned or invested, the court should add such sum as could have been realized by loaning the same. Interest should be computed on the aggregate amount at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, and to the sum thus ascertained 10 per cent. should be added. In addition to the above, the court or jury should, in a proper case, exercise a sound legal discretion in assessing exemplary damages; and, if such damages be allowed, the amount should be added to the aggregate amount before the 10 per cent. is added.—Colburn v. State ex rel. Arnold, 47 Ind. 310.

In a suit on the relation of one ward, upon a guardian's bond, where there are two or more wards, each entitled to an equal share, if the relator has received a part of his share from a former guardian the amount so received should be taken into account and the shares equalized.—Id.

2 Gav. & H. St. p. 508, provides that a suit on a guardian's bond shall be governed by the law regulating suits on the bonds of executors and administrators, and section 163, p. 531, provides that the measure of damages in suits on the bonds of executors and administrators shall include such exemplary damages as the court or jury trying the case may be willing to give. Held to invest the court or jury with a sound legal discretion in assessing exemplary damages in a suit on a guardian's bond.—Id.

[gg] (Sup. 1874)

The complaint on a guardian's bond alleged that money came into the hands of the guardian, amounting to a sum specified, and that "said sums, at the resignation of said guardian hereinafter alleged, still remains due and wholly unpaid." Held, that the complaint was amendable in the trial court by the insertion of the words "remained and" after the word "alleged," and it should be regarded on appeal as so amended.—Voris v. State ex rel. Davis, 47 Ind. 345.

An action may be maintained on a guardian's bond against the principal and the heirs of a deceased surety without previous demand.—Id.

[h] (Sup. 1876)

In an action on a guardian's bond, an answer by a sole surety alleging that the bond was obtained from him by the principal obligor by fraud, covin, and misrepresentation, by his stating that it should not be delivered to the clerk or to the judge, until it was executed by one or two other good, solvent persons as sureties, was insufficient.—Hunt v. State ex rel. Martin, 53 Ind. 321.

In an action on a guardian's bond, conditioned for the faithful discharge of his duties as guardian of the person and property of one therein named and designated as the minor heir of a certain decedent, the recovery cannot be limited to the value of the estate mentioned in the statement made on application for the appointment of the guardian, but may extend to the value of the entire estate of the ward then held or afterward acquired, not exceeding the amount of the penalty of the bond, except proceeds of the sale of the ward's real estate by order of court.—Id.

[hb] (Sup. 1876)

In an action by a foreign guardian of a minor on the bond of a former domestic guardian of such minor, conditioned for the faithful accounting for all moneys arising from the sale of certain lands of the ward ordered by the proper court, the complaint was not rendered insufficient by failure to allege the approval of the bond by the court or the appraisal required by statute of the property to be sold. Rev. St. 1876, § 19.—Shook v. State ex rel. McCampbell, 53 Ind. 403.

In an action on a special guardian's bond for the sale of real estate, the complaint alleged that the guardian, with his sureties, executed the bond, and that the court ordered the sale of the property. Held, that it will be presumed that the bond was approved.—Id.

In an action on a special guardian's bond for the sale of real estate, it will be presumed, from an allegation in the complaint, that the court ordered the sale, that the property was appraised and all other necessary preliminary steps taken.—Id.

In an action on a special guardian's bond for the sale of real estate, the allegation that the guardian converted the money to his own use shows a breach of the bond, and it is unnecessary to allege in what manner it was converted to his use.—Id.

In an action on the bond of a foreign guardian, given to secure the proceeds of a sale of the ward's property, a failure to allege in the complaint that the guardian had complied with the provisions of 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 593, in regard to filing an authenticated copy of his appointment, does not render the complaint bad on a demurrer assigning for cause only the want of sufficient facts.—Id.

[i] (Sup. 1876)

A complaint on a guardian's bond to recover proceeds of property of the ward sold by the guardian, need not aver that the guardian's report of sale has been approved by the court, nor that the money has been demanded.—Hudson v. State ex rel. Barnes, 54 Ind. 378; Id. 602.

[ii] (Sup. 1876)

Upon the resignation of a guardian without paying over the money belonging to his ward's estate, a suit may be maintained therefor, on his bond, against the guardian and his sureties without having made any demand on him for the payment of the money.—Hudson v. State ex rel. Barnes, 54 Ind. 378.

[j] (Sup. 1876)

The measure of the damages that may be recovered in an action upon a guardian's bond for conversion of the ward's property to his own use in addition to the value of the property converted is prescribed, not by section 163 (2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 551) of the Act of June 17, 1852, "providing for the settlement of decedents' estates," etc., but by clause 3 of section 9 (2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 589) of the act of June 9, 1852, "touching the relation of guardian and ward," and is "ten per cent. in damages on the whole amount of estate, both real and personal, in his hands belonging to such ward."—Richardson v. State ex rel. Crow, 55 Ind. 381.

Section 13 of the act touching the relation of guardian and ward (2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 592) does not contemplate that section 163 of the act providing for the settlement of decedents' estates (2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 551) shall govern, as providing a measure of damages, in suits upon a guardian's bond.—Id.

[j] (Sup. 1877)

In an action by a ward, on arriving at maturity, on his guardian's bond, to recover for money of the ward withheld by the guardian, mere multiplicity of allegations of fact in the complaint, concerning the gist of the action, does not constitute duplicity.—Hay v. State ex rel. McClanrahan, 58 Ind. 337.

[k] (Sup. 1878)

In an action on a guardian's bond, a guardian's final report is not admissible in evidence on behalf of the defendants until approved by the proper court.—Beedle v. State ex rel. Small, 62 Ind. 26.

[kk] A ward who has arrived at age may sue his guardian on his bond for failure to pay over the ward's money without first obtaining his removal.—(Sup. 1878) Bescher v. State ex rel. Hammann, 63 Ind. 302; (1880) Stroup v. State ex rel. Fitch, 70 Ind. 495.

[l] (Sup. 1878)

Under a joint and several bond by the guardian for several wards, the rights of the latter are several, and not joint; and suit may be brought on the bond on the relation of any of the wards without joining the others.—Bescher v. State ex rel. Hammann, 63 Ind. 302.

It is not necessary that the estate should be settled before an action may be brought by the ward on the bond of the guardian for a breach of its conditions.—Id.

The nonjoinder of a surety, in an action on a guardian's bond to recover the proceeds of a sale by the guardian of the ward's real estate, does not affect the defendant's liability on the bond.—Id.

[ll] (Sup. 1878)

In an action on a guardian's bond, the guardian's successor is the proper relator.—Cogswell v. State ex rel. Albert, 65 Ind. 1.

[m] (Sup. 1879)

In a suit on a guardian's bond, a complaint alleging the guardian's appointment, the execution of the bond, the payment into the hands of the guardian of certain moneys belonging to the wards, and alleging that the guardian converted a certain sum to his own use for which he had not accounted stated a cause of action.—Potts v. State ex rel. Morgan, 65 Ind. 273.

A guardian appointed to succeed a defaulting guardian may sue on the defaulting guardian's bond as relator.—Id.

[mm] (Sup. 1879)

A complaint against the sureties on a guardian's bond alleged that the guardian died with certain funds belonging to his ward in his hands, and without having accounted to the circuit court, etc. The court of common pleas had had, until two years after said guardian's death, exclusive jurisdiction over him and his wards, when it was abolished, and records transferred to the circuit court. That the complaint was sufficient.—Davis v. State ex rel. Long, 68 Ind. 104.

In an action against the sureties on a guardian's bond, it is no defense that a settlement and distribution had been made, but the papers and vouchers had been lost, without any allegation that said settlement had been approved by the proper court.—Id.

[n] (Sup. 1879)

2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 590, § 9, cl. 3, provides that, on failure of a guardian to render proper accounts at least once in every two years, he shall be liable to his ward on his bond for 10 per cent. in damages on the whole amount of the estate, both real and personal, in his hands belonging to such ward. Section 13 provides that any bond given by any guardian may be put in suit by any person entitled to the estate, and such suit shall be governed by the law regulating suits on the bonds of executors and administrators. Section 163 of the act providing for the settlement of the estates of decedents (2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 551) provides that the measure of damages in all suits on the bonds of executors and administrators shall be the value of the property converted and 10 per centum on the whole amount assessed. In an action on the bond of a guardian, section 9 of the act relating to guardian's bonds was supplemented by section 163 of the act relating to executors and administrators, and that 10 per cent. damages was properly assessed against the defendants for failure of the guardian to pay to his successor the balance found due the ward on final settlement.—Bridge v. State ex rel. Nicholson, 69 Ind. 381, overruling Richardson v. State ex rel. Crow, 55 Ind. 381.

In an action upon a guardian's bond under a plea of payment, the defendants have the burden of proof.—Id.

Action was brought by a guardian on the bond of B., a former guardian, for his failure to pay over to his successor, the plaintiff, money of his ward. The evidence showed that on February 6, 1878, B. had presented to the proper court his account current as guardian, that the same was properly verified, and that a balance against B.; that B. was then solvent, and in the preceding month had been adjudged a bankrupt, and that he had no money with which to pay his attorneys a re-able fee for preparing said account current; that, on the presentation of said account, the court charged B. with the said balance, with interest thereon at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, and forthwith removed him from his trust as such guardian, and then and there required him to pay over to plaintiff the said balance and interest. The suit was brought in less than two weeks after B.'s removal, and the trial took place within a month thereafter. Held, that in the absence of any evidence whatever tending in the slightest degree to show payment, in whole or in part, of the money in controversy, the jury were fully justified in finding that B. had failed, neglected, and refused to pay over to plaintiff the balance in his hands, or any part thereof.—Id.

[nn] (Sup. 1880)

In an action on a guardian's bond, the ward is not bound to prove that the bond has not been exhausted, even if he makes the averment in his complaint.—Stroup v. State ex rel. Fitch, 70 Ind. 495.

[o] (Sup. 1880)

In a suit by a ward and her husband on a guardian's bond for the sale of real estate, the answer alleged that the guardian, who was the ward's father, had made certain payments for her support and education, for which, and for the value of his services as such guardian, a set-off was claimed, and also that he had no means or estate out of which he could support and educate the ward. Plaintiffs replied, claiming a set-off on their part on account of services rendered by the ward at the guardian's request. Held, that the set-off claimed by defendants could not be defeated by that claimed by plaintiffs, as, for that claim, defendants were not, nor was either of them, liable to the female plaintiff in any event, under the bond in suit, until after, if at all, the general bond of the guardian had been fully exhausted.—Kinsey v. State ex rel. Shirk, 71 Ind. 32.

[oo] (Sup. 1880)

A judgment in an action on a guardian's bond for the sale of real estate rendered against the principals and sureties to be collected without relief from valuation or appraisal laws of the state is authorized by the act of December 21, 1858 (Acts 1858, p. 39; 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 188, note 5), entitled "An act to regulate the collection of judgment and the sale of property on execution against any sheriff, constable, executor, or other party, officer, administrator, guardian or other person or corporation receiving or holding moneys in a fiduciary capacity or the securities of any or either of them.—Stevenson v. State ex rel. Ruddell, 71 Ind. 52.

In a suit on a guardian's bond for the sale of his ward's real estate, the surety answered by way of set-off, merely alleging the expenditure by the guardian, who was the ward's father, of certain sums of money for the support of the ward, for which the guardian had failed and refused to claim credit. Held, on demurrer, that the answer was insufficient.—Id.

[p] (Sup. 1880)

In suit against A. and B. on a joint guardian's bond for the sale of real estate, the complaint showed that they were separate guardians of separate heirs owning certain real estate as tenants in common; that A. and B. joined in a petition and obtained an order for the sale of the real estate of their respective wards; that A. had made a sale, received the purchase money, and failed to account for it or pay it over, and had been removed; and that the recital of the bond that they were joint guardians was a mistake. Held, on demurrer by B. that the complaint was insufficient as to him.—Hurlburt v. State ex rel. Ault, 71 Ind. 154.

[pp] (Sup. 1881)

A complaint on a guardian's bond alleged that it was given as an additional bond for the sale of real estate. The bond itself recited merely that "if the above bound, * * * who is guardian of the persons and property of * * * minor heirs of * * *, then the above obligation is to be void," etc. Held, that the complaint showed sufficiently that it was given as an additional bond, and was good for that purpose, under Code, § 790, which provides that bonds shall not be void for want of form or substance, recital or condition, and that, in all actions on a defective bond, plaintiff may suggest the defect in his complaint, and recover as if the bond were perfect.—Fee v. State ex rel. Pleasant, 74 Ind. 66.

A complaint alleging that a guardian "executed his bond" does not, although taken in connection with a copy of the bond filed therewith, and showing that persons of the same names as the sureties signed the same, sufficiently show that the sureties executed the bond.—Id.

[q] (Sup. 1881)

A guardian sued on his bond for his failure to make a biennial report, as imperatively required by statute, cannot defend by setting up as matters in abatement that his only default was the one sued for, by which his ward was not prejudiced; that the ward owed him for board, and commenced the action so soon after her marriage to her co-plaintiff that the guardian could not safely turn over the estate to her; and that no demand has ever been made therefor.—Eiceman v. State ex rel. Leonard, 75 Ind. 46.

[qq] (Sup. 1881)

The sureties upon a guardian's bond executed to obtain an order to sell real estate of his ward, after he has sold the real estate and received the money, are estopped to deny that their principal had in fact been appointed guardian of such ward.—Gray v. State ex rel. Mills, 78 Ind. 68, 41 Am. Rep. 545.

[qqq] (Sup. 1881)

Where, in an action on the bond of an ex-guardian to recover a ward's estate, the complaint alleged that defendant had converted his ward's entire property into money, and that the same had since his appointment remained in his hands and had been used by him in his own private business ever since he obtained possession thereof, such allegation was not inconsistent with the subsequent clause, which, after detailing several reports made by the guardian, alleged that the amount "now in the guardian's hands" due the relator as guardian was the sum of $1,700, and that since his removal defendant had refused and still refuses to account or pay over the same or any part thereof, since defendant may have converted the money to his own use, used it in his private business and yet have replaced it, and, if he did so after the execution of the bond sued on, he became liable on his bond to account for it, though at a previous time there may have been no such liability.—Parker v. Medsker, 80 Ind. 155.

[r] (Sup. 1881)

In an action on a guardian's bond, the burden was on the sureties to establish that the guardian properly and fully accounted for all moneys received by him during the continuance of the surety's obligation and before the giving of a new bond with other sureties, so that, where the evidence of accounting failed to show on which bond the guardian was in default, the condition of each bond was broken to the extent of defalcation, and the plaintiff was entitled to recover the whole sum against either set of bondsmen she should choose to sue.—Yost v. State ex rel. Bouslog, 80 Ind. 350.

[rr] (Sup. 1881)

In an action against the administrator of one who had been surety on a bond given by a guardian, to which the principal in the bond was made a party, the fact that no process was served on the principal did not deprive the court of jurisdiction.—Corbaley v. State ex rel. Holmes, 81 Ind. 62.

In an action on a bond executed by a guardian against the administrator of the surety, the principal was a proper party to the action.—Id.

In a suit on a guardian's bond, the surety may show by way of defense that the guardian, who was also the father of the wards, was so situated pecuniarily as to be justified in expending upon the support and education of the wards a part of the fund, and that the guardian himself refuses to make claim against the wards for such expenditures.—Id.

[rrr] (Sup. 1881)

In an action on a guardian's bond for taking notes of insolvent persons, without security, for the rent of his ward's real estate, the guardian's reports to the court were competent evidence for the purpose of identifying such notes as the notes formerly in the guardian's possession, though such evidence was not otherwise admissible.—French v. State ex rel. X, fold, 81 Ind. 151.

[s] (Sup. 1882)

Where a guardian removed from the and suit is brought on his bond, the measure of damages upon recovery is the value of property converted or the amount of money unlawfully retained with interest, such as exemplary damages as the court may be willing to give, and 10 per cent. on the amount so ascertained. 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 592, § 13.—English v. State ex rel. Fields, 81 Ind. 455.

[ss] (Sup. 1882)

In an action on a guardian's bond, the sureties thereon are estopped, by the recital of the bond executed by them of the appointment of the guardian, to controvert the fact, though recited, that he was such guardian at the time the bond was executed.—State ex rel. Moore v. Mills, 82 Ind. 126.

[sss] (Sup. 1882)

In an action on a guardian's bond, a complaint alleging that certain moneys came into defendant's hands for relatrix and other wards, and that he had not accounted for such moneys, was sufficient without allegations that the moneys remained in his hands which were unexpended, or that he had not accounted to a successor of the husband of relatrix.—Moody v. State ex rel. Burton, 84 Ind. 433.

In a suit for breach of a guardian's bond, the complaint need not show that plaintiff was one of the wards, is of age.—Id.

[t] (Sup. 1882)

In an action upon the bond of a deceased guardian, the sureties may plead by way of defense that the guardian was indebted to the estate of the relator off an indebtedness of the estate of the relator to the estate of their principal.—State ex rel. Benckert v. Wylie, 86 Ind. 396.

[tt] (Sup. 1882)

In an action on a guardian's bond, a guardian having been dead three years, a complaint alleging that the guardian never paid certain sums received by him to the wards, and that the administrators of the guardian have not paid the moneys, or any portion thereof, to the wards, or to any one for them, sufficiently alleges a breach of the bond.—Higgins v. State ex rel. Smith, 87 Ind. 282.

Where a guardian has been dead three years, suit may be maintained on his bond against his successor for failure to pay over moneys without a previous demand therefor.—Id.

[ttt] (Sup. 1882)

Where an infant wife and her husband join as co-relators in a suit on her guardian's bond, they cannot recover without proof that her husband was of full age when the suit was brought.—Burkam v. State ex rel. Miller, 88 Ind. 200.

Under Rev. St. 1876, p. 36, § 8, providing that, when a married woman is a p her husband must be joined with her, and Id. p. 313, § 794, providing that a husband and wife may join in all causes of action arising out of any contract in favor of either of them, a husband and wife may join as relators in a suit on her guardian's bond.—Id.

[u] (Sup. 1832)

Where, in a proceeding against a guardian's estate, it is adjudged that he was indebted to the estate of his ward, it will be presumed, in an action on his bond, that in such proceeding it was shown that the guardian was personally liable to his ward for the amount of the judgment.—Asher v. State ex rel. Applegate, 58 Ind. 215.

[uu] (Sup. 1884)

Under a general denial to a suit on a guardian's bond for conversion of the ward's money and failure to pay, payment in whole or part may be shown.—State ex rel. Dunham v. Roche, 94 Ind. 372.

Where, in an action on a guardian's bond, the complaint averred that the guardian as such had received money belonging to the ward and had converted the same to his own use and that he did not pay the same to the ward, and the defendants answered by way of general denial, defendants had the right to meet plaintiff's evidence by proof that such sums of money or parts thereof had been accounted for and paid to the proper person.—Id.

[uuu] (Sup. 1885)

The failure to prescribe the penalty in a guardian's bond leaves the surety's liability to be ascertained by determining the duty of the guardian and the loss resulting from failure to perform it.—State ex rel. Rowe v. Britton, 102 Ind. 214, 1 N. E. 617.

Where, in a suit on a guardian's bond, a paragraph of the complaint proceeded on the theory that there was a mistake in the bond, but did not show either that the mistake was one of fact or that there was a mistake in committing the contract to writing, it was insufficient.—Id.

[v] (Sup. 1887)

To a complaint by the state, on the relation of a ward, against the administrator of the estate of the deceased surety on her guardian's bond, for failure of the guardian to account for certain moneys, defendant answered that his decedent, as such surety, had, with the knowledge of relatrix, she being of age, filed in the circuit court his final report and settlement of such guardianship, which was approved and confirmed by the court, and the surety discharged. Held, although the same facts might have been proved under the general denial, the error in sustaining the demurrer thereto was not harmless.—Castetter v. State ex rel. Bradburn, 112 Ind. 445, 14 N. E. 388.

[vv] (Sup. 1888)

Under Rev. St. § 2527, providing that a guardian's bond may be sued on by any person entitled to the estate, and that such suit shall be governed by the law regulating suits on bonds of executors and administrators, and section 2458, providing that any creditor of the estate may sue an executor or administrator on his bond, a creditor of the ward's estate is a proper relator in an action on a guardian's bond.—State v. Fitch, 113 Ind. 478, 16 N. E. 396.

In an action on a guardian's bond by a creditor of the ward's estate, where plaintiff fails to aver that he cannot collect his claim from the ward's estate, he can recover only nominal damages, and judgment for defendant on demurrer to the complaint will not be disturbed.—Id.

A creditor of a ward's estate may bring an action on the guardian's bond without averring that his claim has been allowed by the court, the guardian having reported it as valid.—Id.

[vvv] (Sup. 1888)

Under Rev. St. § 1221, which provides that the principal and surety in an official bond shall be bound to the full extent contemplated by the law requiring the same, and the sureties to the amount specified in the bond; and sections 2450 and 2527, providing that the measure of damages in an action on a guardian's bond is the injury to the ward, with exemplary damages, at discretion, and 10 per cent.,—the surety's liability on such a bond does not exceed the sum therein specified.—Meadows v. State ex rel. Alderman, 114 Ind. 537, 17 N. E. 121.

[w] (Sup. 1888)

In an action on a guardian's bond, where defendant admits his signature, and the evidence shows that it was approved and filed by the clerk more than 12 years before, it is properly admitted in evidence, although defendant on oath alleges that he never delivered it.—Britton v. State ex rel. Rowe, 115 Ind. 55, 17 N. E. 254.

[ww] (Sup. 1889)

A paragraph of an answer to a complaint, in an action on a guardian's bond, alleging that the guardian had paid all moneys received by him, either to relator after he attained his majority, or to others for his board and education, is bad, as it does not thereby appear what sums were actually paid to relator, or that the guardian had the right to pay out his ward's funds for his board and education.—Peelle v. State ex rel. Hipes, 118 Ind. 512, 21 N. E. 288.

Though the guardian sued with the surety is not served with process, the bond being joint and several, it is not error to admit evidence of the guardian's default against the surety, as the surety could have been sued alone.—Id.

In an action on a guardian's bond, the testimony of the guardian that he received the money, which was pension funds, will justify a judgment for the amount stated by him, though the pension allowed would not equal that sum; it not appearing that he did not receive arrearages.—Id.

Where a guardian receives only a comparatively small amount of money, and in small sums, which could not therefore be invested, the recovery against the surety should be the amount received, with simple interest, and the statutory penalty of 10 per cent.—Id.

[www] (Sup. 1880)

Plaintiff, as administrator, paid into court money belonging to the estate. He reported no creditors found; that an attorney for certain heirs received said sum and paid it over to the guardian of the heirs, taking from him a bond conditioned that, in case of suit by any creditors of the estate, said guardian would repay the amount thus received. Suit was instituted and all former proceedings set aside, and the attorney was directed to deliver all money and collaterals to the administrator for the benefit of the creditor. A bond given by the guardian was turned over. Demand was made for the amount for which the bond was given, which amount was unpaid and was necessary to the discharge of the indebtedness of the estate. Held, that an action on the bond was not prematurely brought where it was prosecuted after the suit had been begun against the attorney, and after the proceeds of the estate in his hands, including such bond, were ordered to be turned over to the administrator, and after the money paid the guardian had been demanded and refused.—Chandler v. Morrison, 23 N. E. 160, 123 Ind. 254.

[x] (Sup. 1891)

In an action on a guardian's bond, proof that the guardian has paid out the entire trust fund according to orders of a court of competent jurisdiction is a complete defense, since such orders, though made ex parte and subject to the control of the court making them, are not subject to collateral attack.—State ex rel. Wiseman v. Wheeler, 127 Ind. 451, 20 N. E. 552, 1008.

In an action on a guardian's bond to recover for money alleged to be due from him, defendant may show, under the general denial, that he disbursed, under orders of the court, all the money that came to his hands; and testimony of one who assisted him, as to a settlement with the person to whom the court had directed him to pay over the balance in his hands, is admissible to show such payment.—Id.

Where a complaint in an action on a guardian's bond charged the conversion by the guardian of a portion of a trust fund and the unauthorized disbursement by him of a portion of such fund, and the guardian's defense was that, while he had disbursed all of the moneys which came to his hands as such guardian, such disbursement was authorized having been made to the mother of his wards in obedience to the court's order, it was proper for a witness to state that he assisted in making a settlement between the guardian and the mother of the wards at the time when the guardian was ordered to pay to the mother the balance remaining in his hands, and that he previously prepared the petition, and had procured the order of court directing the guardian to pay the balance to the mother, and thereupon the guardian and the mother met in his office to determine the amount of the balance, and that he made the necessary computations for them in the settlement, as such testimony tended to establish the fact of the payment of the money to the mother as the court had directed and was clearly competent.—Id.

[xx] (App. 1891)

In an action upon the bond of a guardian, it was alleged that he had received $600 of the ward's money, but that he had filed no inventory or report of receipts and disbursements, as required by Rev. St. 1881, § 2521; that he had converted it to his own use; and that he had failed to account for such money, though the guardianship was ended by the marriage of the ward with a person over 21 years old. The answer averred that the guardian was the husband of the ward at the making of the bond, which was given solely to enable him to draw a pension due the ward, and that the guardian had paid for various domestic purposes $531.85 for the use of himself and wife, with her consent; and demanded judgment for costs. Held, that, since such paragraphs did not account for the whole $600, and purported to be a complete bar to recovery, it was error to overrule a demurrer to them.—State ex rel. Haines v. Parfish, 1 Ind. App. 441, 27 N. E. 652.

[xxx] (Sup. 1892)

A guardian filed a bond with satisfactory sureties at the time of his appointment, and afterwards, on receiving additional money belonging to his wards, was required to file another bond. There was nothing to indicate an intention to make the second bond subsidiary to the first, but it appeared to be given as primary security. Held, that it was not necessary to exhaust the remedies against the obligors in the first bond before bringing suit on the second, all being equally liable.—State ex rel. Joseph v. Mitchell, 132 Ind. 461, 32 N. E. 86.

[y] (App. 1892)

In an action on a guardian's bond to recover an indebtedness due from the ward's estate, under a plea of payment, it appeared that the guardian gave plaintiff his individual note, and took plaintiff's receipt for the amount of the indebtedness. The guardian testified that "I told my sister [plaintiff] that if she would give me a receipt, so that I could use it in making my report as guardian, I would pay her as soon as I was able." Held, that the evidence failed to show that the note was taken by plaintiff in full payment of the debt.—Price v. Barnes, 7 Ind. App. 1, 31 N. E. 809, 34 N. E. 408.

[yy] (App. 1894)

Since Rev. St. 1894, § 2685 (Rev. St. 1881, § 2521), makes it the guardian's duty, at the expiration of his trust, to pay over all of the estate of his ward in his hands, a complaint on the bond showing that defendant was duly removed three years before, and that he has wholly failed, neglected, and refused to account for, pay over, and deliver to his successor the property in his hands, is sufficient to support a judgment for the 10 per cent. penalty (Rev. St. 1894, § 2614; Rev. St. 1881, § 2459), without further averment of demand and refusal to account.—Bernhamer v. Steeg, 10 Ind. App. 119, 37 N. E. 420.

[777] (Sup. 1896)

In an action on a guardian's bond, the defense that certain moneys were received and converted by the guardian before his appointment and qualification is admissible in favor of the sureties, under a general denial.—Harness v. State ex rel. Turley, 42 N. E. 813, 143 Ind. 420.

A complaint in a suit on a guardian's bond, alleging that he, as guardian, received certain sums, which he converted to his own use, sufficiently alleges that he received such sums after his appointment and qualification as guardian.—Id.

[2] (Sup. 1900)

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 2403 (Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 2403; Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 2558), providing that a final settlement of an estate may be vacated within three years for fraud or mistake in the settlement or in the prior proceedings, and Rev. St. 1881, § 2527 (Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 2527; Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 2601), providing that suits on guardians' bonds shall be governed by the law regulating suits on the bonds of executors and administrators, an action by a ward to recover on his guardian's bond for failure to account for moneys received by him, such failure being due to fraud or mistake, is barred after three years from the final settlement.—State ex rel. Little v. Parsons, 57 N. E. 711, 155 Ind. 67.

[122] (App. 1900)

Where, in an action in the superior court against defendant guardian and his bondsmen to recover for goods furnished a ward on the credit of the defendant, the fact that the defendant was referred to in the complaint as "guardian" will be regarded as "descriptive personae," since it was evident that the plaintiff sought a personal judgment against the defendant.—Hall v. Ferguson, 57 N. E. 153, 24 Ind. App. 532.

[123] (App. 1902)

Where the complaint in an action by a ward against his former guardian and his sureties attacked a former order discharging the guardian as fraudulent, and charged him with conversion, the sureties could not set off a claim for services rendered by the guardian for which he had received no compensation, since, if the guardian was guilty of conversion, he was not entitled to compensation, while, if the order of discharge proved to be valid, there would be no occasion for set-off.—State ex rel. Webb v. Stockwell, 63 N. E. 321, 28 Ind. App. 530.

An answer alleging that the guardian had fully accounted to the proper court for all moneys coming into his hands, and had been discharged by such court, was no answer to the fraud and conversion charged in the complaint.—Id.

In an action by a ward after reaching majority, against his former guardian and his sureties, an answer of the sureties that their principal had fully and properly accounted for and paid out all money received by him as guardian was insufficient, in that it failed to allege the payment of the money to the ward, or that it was accounted for to the proper court; the averment that it was "properly" accounted for being a mere conclusion.—Id.

I. NATURE AND GROUNDS OF REMEDY.

Grant of writ by executive officer as exercise of judicial power, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, § 80.

1. Nature and scope in general.

Habeas corpus as civil action within statute authorizing change of venue, see post, § 48.

[a] (Sup. 1883)

An application for a writ of habeas corpus is not a civil action.—McGlennan v. Margowski, 90 Ind. 150.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. HAB. CORP. §§ 1, 3.
See, also, 21 Cyc. pp. 282-284, 289.

§ 3. Existence of other remedy in general.

[a] (Sup. 1855)

Where the verdict of the jury in a criminal prosecution is a nullity, the remedy of the prisoner is to move in the trial court for his discharge, and he is not entitled to a writ of habeas corpus.—Wright v. State, 7 Ind. 324.

[b] (Sup. 1909)

One attempting to withhold the custody of a ward from his guardian appointed under section 3065, Burns' Ann. St. 1908, is not confined to the remedy allowed by section 3071, providing that the court by whom or whose clerk a guardian has been appointed may at any time remove the guardian for habitual drunkenness, neglect of duty, incompetency, etc., but upon return to a writ of habeas corpus by the guardian to get possession of the ward may set up the guardian's unfitness, to defeat the guardian's right to the ward's custody.—Shoaf v. Livengood, 172 Ind. 707, 88 N. E. 508.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. HAB. CORP. § 3.
See, also, 21 Cyc. p. 287.

§ 4. Existence of remedy by appeal or writ of error.

[a] (Sup. 1893)

The proceeding taken by a justice of the peace after acquiring jurisdiction over the person of one charged with the violation of the criminal law can be inquired into only by way of appeal to a higher court, and not by writ of habeas corpus.—Smith v. Clausmeier, 35 N. E. 904, 136 Ind. 105, 43 Am. St. Rep. 311.

[b] (Sup. 1904)

A writ of habeas corpus cannot be used as a substitute for a writ of certiorari, error, or an appeal.—Gillespie v. Rump, 72 N. E. 138, 163 Ind. 457.

[c] (Sup. 1905)

The writ of habeas corpus cannot be made a substitute for an appeal or writ of error.—Welty v. Ward, 73 N. E. 889, 164 Ind. 457.

[d] (Sup. 1905)

Errors, if any, committed by the court in contempt proceedings, can be reviewed and corrected only on appeal, and not by habeas corpus to procure the release of the contemner.—Perry v. Pernet, 74 N. E. 609, 165 Ind. 67.

[e] (Sup. 1908)

Habeas corpus does not lie for the release of a prisoner unless the conviction is void, as the writ cannot serve the office of an appeal.—Tullis v. Shaw, 169 Ind. 662, 83 N. E. 376.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

§ 22. — Final judgment, sentence, and commitment.

Determination of particular questions on hearing, see post, § 105.

[a] (Sup. 1867)

Where a petition alleges that petitioner is imprisoned for an alleged contempt in disobeying an order of the court of common pleas, but denies that said imprisonment is by virtue of any writ or order of said court authorizing the same, petitioner is entitled to a writ of habeas corpus.—Ex parte Lawler, 28 Ind. 241.

[b] (Sup. 1879)

A petition for habeas corpus against the sheriff alleged that a jury had found the petitioners guilty of murder in the second degree, and fixed their punishment at imprisonment in the state prison for two years (the statutory punishment being imprisonment for life), and that the court had denied their motion to be discharged, but had granted them a venire de novo, and that, for want of a recognizance to appear next term, they were in the sheriff's custody. Held, that the writ would not lie.—Wentworth v. Alexander, 66 Ind. 39.

[c] (Sup. 1883)

The writ will not issue where the applicant is restrained of his liberty, under a commitment after trial and final judgment of conviction.—Smith v. Hess, 91 Ind. 424.

[d] (Sup. 1884)

The action of a justice of the peace in a proceeding to obtain surety of the peace requiring defendant to enter into the statutory recognizance, or in default thereof to go to jail, is not a "final judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction," the legality of which cannot be inquired into under Rev. St. 1881, § 1119.—Smelzer v. Lockhart, 97 Ind. 315.

[e] (Sup. 1885)

Where a court has jurisdiction of the person and subject-matter, its judgment, though erroneous, cannot, under Rev. St. 1881, § 1119, be collaterally assailed on habeas corpus, as where, on a plea of guilty in a capital case, the court has fixed the punishment without the intervention of a jury.—Lowery v. Howard, 103 Ind. 440, 3 N. E. 124.

[f] (Sup. 1886)

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 1119, forbidding a discharge where the defendant is held on a final judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, a judgment of a court of general jurisdiction cannot be collaterally attacked by habeas corpus proceedings unless the record shows affirmatively that the court had no jurisdiction.—Holderman v. Thompson, 105 Ind. 112, 5 N. E. 175.

[g] (Sup. 1887)

Where an order of a court of competent jurisdiction has been made, denying the application of a prisoner for a discharge on the ground that he had been confined for two or more continuous terms without a trial, such order and judgment cannot be collaterally attacked by habeas corpus proceedings, and it will be presumed that the court heard evidence bringing the matter within the statutory exceptions justifying the refusal of the application for discharge.—McGuire v. Wallace, 109 Ind. 284, 10 N. E. 111.

[h] (Sup. 1900)

A judgment of conviction rendered by a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the person is final, and a writ of habeas corpus cannot be used to inquire into its legality.—Webber v. Harding, 58 N. E. 533, 155 Ind. 408.

[i] (Sup. 1902)

Under Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 1133, providing that on habeas corpus no court shall inquire into the legality of any judgment or process whereby the party is in custody, issued on any final judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, where an affidavit containing a colorable criminal charge against the petitioner was filed before a justice of the peace, and, after a preliminary hearing had been waived, judgment was entered requiring him to enter into a recognizance to appear at the circuit court, and in default of bail he was committed to the county jail, the court, on habeas corpus, cannot inquire into the sufficiency of the affidavit, or discharge him from custody.—Cruthers v. Bray, 65 N. E. 517, 159 Ind. 685.

[j] (Sup. 1905)

Habeas corpus to procure the discharge of one committed for contempt of court is a collateral attack upon the judgment of commitment, and cannot succeed unless that judgment is absolutely void.—Perry v. Pernet, 74 N. E. 609, 165 Ind. 67.

[k] (Sup. 1906)

A judgment which is not void is not subject to collateral attack by writ of habeas corpus.—Ryan v. Rhodes, 167 Ind. 121, 76 N. E. 249, 78 N. E. 330.

§ 24. Grounds for relief.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. HAB. CORP. §§ 21-31.

See, also, 21 Cyc. pp. 295-307.

§ 25. — In general.[a] (Sup. 1871)

Where, by the return to a writ of habeas corpus for a child, it appeared that the petitioner had left the child in the custody of the respondents, a demand for the custody was necessary before legal proceedings could be instituted, and they could be instituted then only if the respondent, having the power to do so, had refused to restore the child.—Speer v. Davis, 38 Ind. 271.

[b] (Sup. 1878)

The guardian of an illegitimate orphan child is entitled to the custody thereof, and may, by a writ of habeas corpus, procure the custody of the child, even as against one to whom the mother, in her lifetime, intrusted the child to remain until its majority.—Johns v. Emmert, 62 Ind. 533.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Hab. Corp. §§ 21, 28, 30, 47; 21 CENT. DIG. Execution, § 1262.

See, also, 21 Cyc. pp. 295, 296, 301-307.

§ 27. — Want of jurisdiction.[a] (Sup. 1854)

Where the court or officer was without jurisdiction or power to render judgment or issue process for the imprisonment of a party, the imprisonment was illegal, and the courts will relieve by habeas corpus.—Miller v. Snyder, 6 Ind. 1.

On habeas corpus the question of the jurisdiction of the court by whose judgment the petitioner is imprisoned is a proper subject of inquiry, both at common law and by statute.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1908)

Where an affidavit presented to the juvenile court, charging defendant with encouraging a girl under 15 to commit an act of delinquency, to wit, that defendant held illicit sexual intercourse with her, was claimed to charge a felony because of the allegation following the videlicet, the juvenile court had jurisdiction to determine whether the charge was repugnant to the allegation preceding the videlicet, and if so, whether it nullified such charge of misdemeanor, or whether the charge of felony should itself be rejected as surplusage or a repugnant allegation, leaving the charge of misdemeanor to stand alone, and hence the court having decided that the evidence charged a misdemeanor, and that it had authority to try the case on the merits, the judgment was not without jurisdiction so as to entitle defendant to a discharge on habeas corpus.—Tullis v. Shaw, 169 Ind. 662, 83 N. E. 376.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Hab. Corp. § 22.

See, also, 21 Cyc. p. 296.

§ 29. — Invalidity of proceedings.[a] (Sup. 1865)

A writ of habeas corpus to obtain the custody of a child should not be set aside and quashed, because the judge before whom it was returnable failed to attend at the prescribed time and place, and because the defendant has removed to another county.—State ex rel. Sharpe v. Banks, 25 Ind. 495.

[b] (Sup. 1886)

Although the verdict of a jury, under Rev. St. 1881, § 1500, authorizing a ca. sa., may be so defective that it is error for the court to render judgment thereon awarding execution against the person, yet if the court has jurisdiction of the person and subject-matter the judgment is not a nullity, and cannot be collaterally attacked on habeas corpus.—Willis v. Bayles, 105 Ind. 363, 5 N. E. 8.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Hab. Corp. § 24.

§ 30. — Errors and irregularities.[a] (Sup. 1886)

Where one who is held in custody under the judgment of a court institutes habeas corpus proceedings, he must show that the judgment is not erroneous merely, but absolutely void.—Willis v. Bayles, 105 Ind. 363, 5 N. E. 8.

It is settled law that the writ of habeas corpus cannot be used as a writ for the correction of mere errors in the judgment under and by force of which the petitioner for the writ is restrained of his liberty.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1891)

Where the affidavit on which the prosecution before a justice of the peace is based did not charge a public offense, the judgment of conviction, though erroneous, was not void, the justice having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the person of the defendant, and the judgment rendered by him cannot be attacked collaterally by habeas corpus.—McLaughlin v. Etchison, 27 N. E. 152, 127 Ind. 474, 22 Am. St. Rep. 658.

[c] (Sup. 1892)

The judgment of a justice of the peace as committing magistrate of persons charged with felony refusing to grant a change of venue is not void, but merely voidable on direct attack, and the error cannot be raised in habeas corpus proceedings to obtain the accused's release from the custody of the sheriff whence accused was committed by the justice.—Turner v. Conkey, 31 N. E. 777, 132 Ind. 248, 17 L. R. A. 509, 32 Am. St. Rep. 251.

Where a justice of the peace has jurisdiction to commit persons charged with felony to the custody of the sheriff for a preliminary hearing, one accused of felony who is committed to the custody of the sheriff is not entitled to release on habeas corpus merely for error of the justice in refusing to grant a motion for change of venue.—Id.

Where a justice of the peace having as committing magistrate original jurisdiction of a criminal case erroneously denies a motion by defendant therein for a change of venue, the jurisdiction of the justice is not affected thereby, and the defendant, being committed in default of bail, is not entitled to a discharge from custody on a writ of habeas corpus.—Id.

A judgment of a justice of the peace having jurisdiction as a committing magistrate in cases of persons charged with felony is not open to collateral attack for error in the proceedings by petition for habeas corpus to obtain the release of a person charged with felony and committed by the magistrate to the custody of the sheriff.—Id.

[d] (Sup. 1894)

Mere errors or irregularities, which only render the proceeding voidable, are not grounds for relief on writ of habeas corpus.—Board of Children's Guardians of Marion County v. Shutter, 139 Ind. 268, 34 N. E. 665, 31 L. R. A. 740.

[e] (Sup. 1900)

Where a justice of the peace before whom defendant was tried and convicted had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action and of defendant's person, no formal error or irregularity in the proceedings of the justice would authorize defendant's discharge on habeas corpus.—Pritchett v. Cox, 56 N. E. 20, 174 Ind. 108.

[f] (Sup. 1900)

Where one had been tried and convicted in the superior court, he will not be released by habeas corpus because he was not arraigned and did not plead in such court, since, as such errors do not go to the jurisdiction of the court, its judgment is not subject to collateral attack therefor.—Winslow v. Green, 58 N. E. 259, 155 Ind. 368.

[g] (Sup. 1901)

Where a committing magistrate, with jurisdiction of the person of defendant and the subject-matter, improperly denied defendant's motion for change of venue, such error did not entitle defendant to discharge on habeas corpus after conviction, as the error did not deprive the magistrate of jurisdiction.—Peters v. Koepke, 59 N. E. 33, 156 Ind. 35.

[h] (Sup. 1901)

Where one has been tried and convicted in the lower court, he will not be released by habeas corpus because his demand for a jury trial was refused, and the trial had before the judge, since such action, if erroneous, did not deprive the court of jurisdiction.—Williams v. Hert, 60 N. E. 1067, 157 Ind. 211, 87 Am. St. Rep. 203.

[i] (Sup. 1904)

Even if it was error for the court to charge a jury in a criminal case and impanel second jury, such act did not ipso facto deprive the court of its jurisdiction, and render its sequent proceedings void.—Gillespie v. R. 72 N. E. 138, 163 Ind. 457.

[j] (Sup. 1905)

Even if an order committing a person to an indefinite time for contempt in failing to comply with an order requiring the payment of money was erroneous for failure to fix definite time, this error would not render judgment void, and subject to collateral attack by habeas corpus.—Perry v. Pernet, 74 N. E. 600, 165 Ind. 67.

[k] (Sup. 1906)

A judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, committing a married female infant to the industrial school for girls under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 8273, though possibly erroneous on the ground that the statute only applies to married females, is not for that reason void, and hence is not subject to collateral attack by habeas corpus proceedings.—Ryan v. Rhoads, 76 N. E. 249, 78 N. E. 330, 167 Ind. 121.

The fact that the husband of a female infant was not a party to proceedings whereby she was committed to the industrial school for girls under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 8273, does not enable the husband to maintain habeas corpus on the ground that the judgment was erroneous.—Id.

A proceeding by habeas corpus cannot be used to correct errors in a case in which commitment was made.—Id.

§ 31. — Former jeopardy.

[a] (Sup. 1904)

Former jeopardy or proceedings in the nature of an acquittal are matters for defense to a subsequent trial, under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 1832, and not ground for a petition for discharge on habeas corpus.—Gillespie v. Rump, 72 N. E. 138, 163 Ind. 457.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Hab. Corp. § 27.

See, also, 21 Cyc. p. 305.

§ 32. — Invalidity of statute or ordinance.

[a] (Sup. 1901)

Rev. St. 1881, § 1119 (Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 1119; Burns' Rev. St. 1904, § 1119) provides that no court shall inquire into the validity of any judgment or process whereby a party is in custody, or discharge him, when the term of commitment has not expired, and any process issued, on any final judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction. Acts 18

p. 65 et seq., §§ 113, 115, 116 (Burns' Rev. St. 1894, §§ 4017, 4019, 4020), provide that the police court of the city of Evansville is a court of record, having exclusive original jurisdiction of all violations of ordinances of the city, whose judgments and proceedings have the same force as those of the criminal and circuit courts. Held error to refuse to quash a writ of habeas corpus for release, on the ground of the unconstitutionality of an ordinance and the statute authorizing it, of one convicted before such police court of a violation of such ordinance.—Koepeke v. Hill, 60 N. E. 1039, 157 Ind. 172, 87 Am. St. Rep. 161.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Hab. Corp. § 20.

See, also, 21 Cyc. p. 302.

§ 33. — Admission to or reduction of bail.

[a] (Sup. 1852)

A person indicted for murder is entitled to habeas corpus for the purpose of showing facts satisfying the court that he is entitled to a discharge on bail.—Lumm v. State, 3 Ind. 283.

[b] (Sup. 1860)

Code, § 111, permitting an arrested debtor to sue out a writ of habeas corpus where he has been committed for "want of special bail," does not apply where he is arrested under a writ returnable forthwith to a justice of the peace, under 2 Rev. St. 1852, p. 454, § 24, but has made no appearance before the justice, as section 41, p. 458, provides that no special bail can be given before appearance before the justice and continuance of the cause.—Dwire v. Saunders, 15 Ind. 306.

Under 2 Rev. St. 1852, p. 454, § 26, providing that, where a party is under arrest on a capias ad respondendum, he is entitled to a trial within 24 hours after being brought before the justice, and cannot give special bail unless the trial be continued. Until the expiration of said 24 hours, or a continuance of the cause, Code, § 111, awarding the writ of habeas corpus to persons under arrest for want of special bail, has no application.—Id.

§ 38. Persons entitled to relief.

[a] (Sup. 1834)

The plaintiff, a corporation authorized to take charge of destitute children and provide them homes, transferred to defendant by written contract the care and custody of a child, and afterwards, under its statutory authority, deeming the home unsuitable, made demand for the return of the child, which defendant refused. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to habeas corpus.—Milligan v. State ex rel. Children's Home of Cincinnati, Ohio, 97 Ind. 355.

§ 47. — Authority of judges and judicial officers.

[a] (Sup. 1854)

A judge of the court of common pleas may, under 2 Rev. St. 1852, p. 195, § 725, grant the writ of habeas corpus to a prisoner detained in the state prison under sentence for a felony.—Miller v. Snyder, 6 Ind. 1.

[b] (Sup. 1864)

The act of January 3, 1852 (2 Gav. & II. Rev. St. 304), giving jurisdiction to the clerk of the circuit courts to issue writs of habeas corpus, and to hear and determine them, is by the subsequent legislation on the subject of habeas corpus repealed, and such clerks have now no such power.—Gregg v. Wynn, 22 Ind. 373.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Hab. Corp. §§ 36, 37.

§ 48. Jurisdiction of parties.

[a] (Sup. 1871)

A writ of habeas corpus must issue from a court of the county where the person applying for the writ is restrained of his liberty, except when the judge of said court is unable or incompetent to hear and determine the application.—Ex parte Wiley, 36 Ind. 528.

[b] (Sup. 1905)

Habeas corpus proceedings for the custody of a child resulted in the award of such custody to petitioner, and respondent appealed, and moved for the remission of the child to his custody pending the appeal. Subsequently the motion was withdrawn, and an agreement, leaving the custody of the child to petitioner pending the appeal, and providing that petitioner should keep the child within the jurisdiction of the circuit court during that time, was filed and made an order of court. Held, that the act of petitioner in taking the child into another county of the state did not remove it from the jurisdiction of the court in violation of the court's order and the agreement, but the circuit court's jurisdiction, for the purpose of enforcing or modifying its order, would extend to any place in the state at which petitioner might locate.

§ 53. — Form and requisites in general.

[a] (Sup. 1845)

A petition stating that the petitioner is guardian of a certain infant, the daughter of one A., deceased, and B., his wife, who had, after the death of A., married one C., and that the infant was by said C. and B. illegally restrained of her liberty and detained from the custody of the petitioner, was held to be sufficient to authorize the issuing of a writ of habeas corpus.—Hovey v. Morris, 7 Blackf. 539.

[b] (Sup. 1864)

Where a guardian desires, by the aid of a writ of habeas corpus, to obtain the custody of his ward, he must make his letters of guardianship a part of his petition for the writ.—Gregg v. Wynn, 22 Ind. 373.

[c] (Sup. 1867)

A petition alleging that the petitioner was imprisoned and held in custody by the sheriff in the county jail for an alleged contempt in disobeying an order of the court directing him to pay certain moneys, and that said imprisonment was not by virtue of any writ or order of the court authorizing the same, is sufficient to entitle the petitioner to a writ of habeas corpus.—Ex parte Lawler, 28 Ind. 241.

[d] (Sup. 1867)

Upon habeas corpus by a mother to recover the custody of her infant child, if her right to such custody has been before declared by a decree in an action for divorce, a copy of the decree need not be filed with the petition.—Sears v. Dessar, 28 Ind. 472.

[e] (Sup. 1883)

A petition for a writ of habeas corpus, which shows that the petitioner is deprived of the custody of the person of his motherless daughter, aged 11 years, by the acts of defendant, is sufficient prima facie to authorize the writ, though it contain much surplusage and irrelevant matter.—McGlennan v. Marg, 90 Ind. 150.

[f] (Sup. 1886)

Where the complaint in habeas corpus proceedings complies substantially with the statutory requirements, a prima facie case is in favor of the petitioner, and the complaint is abundantly sufficient to withstand a motion to quash the writ.—Willis v. Bayles, 5 N. E. 105 Ind. 363.

§ 54. — Particular averments.

[a] (Sup. 1867)

Where a petition alleges that petitioner was imprisoned for an alleged contempt in disobeying an order of the court of common pleas, and denies that said imprisonment is by virtue of any writ or order of said court authorizing the same, petitioner is entitled to a writ of habeas corpus.—Ex parte Lawler, 28 Ind. 241.

[b] (Sup. 1878)

Under 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 200, § 17, requiring the complaint in habeas corpus to specify the cause of the restraint according to the best knowledge and belief of the applicant, a complaint alleging that the pretended cause of the restraint according to the best knowledge and belief of the applicant was the recovery of a judgment against the defendant "for the sum of $10 and costs" for violation of a city ordinance sufficiently states the existence of a judgment that the applicant work out such judgment in labor and bondage with 1 Rev. St. 1876, p. 274, under which the commitment would have been legal.—Flora v. Sachs, 64 Ind. 155.

[c] (Sup. 1907)

Where an application for a writ of habeas corpus to obtain the custody of a minor was based on a decree in divorce in Kentucky, but the application contained no averment showing that the Kentucky court rendering the decree was a court of general jurisdiction, that it had jurisdiction over the subject-matter and parties and no certified copy of such decree was filed or made a part of the application, it was fatally defective.—Hardin v. Din, 168 Ind. 352, 81 N. E. 60.

§ 72. Quashing or vacating writ.

[a] (Sup. 1886)

In habeas corpus proceedings the sufficiency of the complaint whereon the writ was issued may be tested by a motion to quash the writ.—Willis v. Bayles, 105 Ind. 363, 81 N. E. 8.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

The writ of habeas corpus cannot be used for the correction of errors (Rev. St. 1881, § 1119); and where it appears that the petitioner is in custody pursuant to an erroneous judgment the writ will be quashed, if it also appears that the court rendering it had jurisdiction of his person and the subject-matter.—McLaughlin v. Etchison, 127 Ind. 474, 27 N. E. 152, 22 Am. St. Rep. 658.

[c] (Sup. 1897)

A motion to quash a writ of habeas corpus tests the sufficiency of the application for the writ.—Schleuter v. Canatsy, 47 N. E. 825, 148 Ind. 384.

In determining whether the court erred in overruling appellant's motion to quash the writ of habeas corpus, the allegations of the application are admitted to be true, the same as in case of a demurrer to a pleading.—Id.

[d] (Sup. 1900)

A writ of habeas corpus is a collateral remedy, and in an assault on the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction thereby, it must be presumed, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, in support of a motion to quash the writ, that the court had full jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and that all the proceedings were according to law, and such presumption extends to the appointment of a special judge.—Crawford v. Lawrence, 56 N. E. 673, 154 Ind. 288.

[e] (Sup. 1906)

Respondent to a petition for a writ of habeas corpus admits the truth of the allegations of the writ by moving to quash the same.—Willis v. Willis, 75 N. E. 653, 165 Ind. 325.

[f] (Sup. 1907)

A motion to quash a writ of habeas corpus tests the sufficiency of the complaint or application.—Hardin v. Hardin, 168 Ind. 352, 81 N. E. 60.

§ 75. — Requisites and sufficiency in general.

[a] (Sup. 1867)

A return to a writ of habeas corpus by a mother to obtain the custody of her infant child, which discloses the fact that before the issuing of the writ the custody of the child had been transferred to another, but fails to state the reason for such change, is bad.—Sears v. Densar, 28 Ind. 472.

[b] (Sup. 1887)

The return to a writ of habeas corpus, brought by a father to regain the custody of his child from a statutory guardian, alleged the unfitness of the relator to have such custody, and the care, training, and education of the child. Held sufficient against general exceptions.—Brooke v. Logan, 112 Ind. 183, 13 N. E. 660, 2 Am. St. Rep. 177.

[c] (Sup. 1896)

When the return of a sheriff upon a writ of habeas corpus shows upon its face that the prisoner is held upon the mittimus of a justice of the peace, but does not show that the justice had jurisdiction, an exception to the return for the justice's want of jurisdiction should be sustained.—Clayborn v. Tompkins, 141 Ind. 19, 40 N. E. 121.

[d] (Sup. 1902)

On a habeas corpus proceeding to obtain possession of an infant, the sufficiency of the return to the writ is not material, as regards the court's power to make such a disposition of the child as appears most conducive to its welfare.—Bullock v. Robertson, 65 N. E. 5, 160 Ind. 521.

§ 76. — Cause or authority for restraint or detention.

[a] (Sup. 1885)

A return to a writ of habeas corpus alleging a judgment of the circuit court as a justification for the restraint is sufficient under the rule that legal proceedings in courts of general jurisdiction are presumed to be valid.—Lucas v. Hawkins, 1 N. E. 358, 102 Ind. 64.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Hab. Corp. § 67.

§ 77. — Copies of process or proceedings authorizing imprisonment.

[a] (Sup. 1857)

A return to a writ of habeas corpus, setting up a will as the written authority for the restraint, but containing no copy of the will, is insufficient.—Shaw v. Smith, 8 Ind. 485.

A person, alleging that he had been appointed guardian of an infant, sued out a writ of habeas corpus to obtain the body of the infant, illegally restrained of his liberty by another person. The return denied all the allegations in the writ, and averred that the mother of the infant, the father having first died, had, by will, appointed him guardian. Held, that the return was insufficient in omitting to append a copy of the will, which will should be presented at the hearing.—Id.

§ 79. — Conclusiveness and effect.

[a] (Sup. 1901)

Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 4017, provides that all judgments, decrees, orders, and proceedings of the Evansville police court shall have the same force and effect as those of the criminal and circuit courts. Held, that where the return to a writ of habeas corpus showed that relator was convicted in that court, and annexed copies of the affidavit, proceedings, and judgment, showing that the court had jurisdiction of subject-matter and of the person of relator, such record could not be shown to be erroneous on the habeas corpus proceedings.—Peters v. Koepke, 59 N. E. 33, 156 Ind. 35.

§ 83. Answer to return and issues thereon.

Demurrer to answer, see post, § 84.

[a] (Sup. 1860)

Proceedings were entered by habeas corpus to obtain a discharge from custody under a capias ad respondendum. Held, that plaintiff in the capias proceedings could not be required to appear and prove the matters alleged for the capias.—Dwire v. Saunders, 15 Ind. 306.

[b] (Sup. 1907)

In habeas corpus proceedings to secure the release of one sought to be extradited, that the prosecution of the offense is barred by the two-year statute of limitations of the demanding state must be alleged and proved to be available, though the warrant made a part of the return to the writ shows that the indictment was not presented within a period of two years from the commission of the offense.—Kemper v. Metzger, 169 Ind. 112, 81 N. E. 663.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

See, also, 21 Cyc. p. 321.

§ 84. Demurrer or exception to return or to answer.

[a] (Sup. 1865)

A demurrer is not the proper method of testing the sufficiency of a return to a writ of habeas corpus.—Cunningham v. Thomas, 25 Ind. 171.

[b] (Sup. 1883)

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 1117, a return or answer to a writ of habeas corpus is not the subject of demurrer, but its sufficiency may be tested by exceptions.—McGlennan v. Margowski, 90 Ind. 150.

[c] (Sup. 1884)

An objection to the sufficiency of the return should be taken by exceptions, and not by demurrer.—Sturgeon v. Gray, 96 Ind. 166.

[d] (Sup. 1884)

Proceedings for habeas corpus not being a civil action, the sufficiency of the petition can only be questioned by a motion to quash the writ, and not by demurrer.—Milligan v. State ex rel. Children's Home of Cincinnati, Ohio, 97 Ind. 355.

[e] (Sup. 1895)

In habeas corpus proceedings, the sufficiency of the return can only be reached by an exception.—Clayborn v. Thompkins, 40 N. E. 121, 141 Ind. 19.

[f] (Sup. 1907)

The sufficiency of a return to a writ of habeas corpus must be raised by exception, and not by demurrer.—Kemper v. Metzger, 169 Ind. 112, 81 N. E. 663.

An exception to an officer's return in a habeas corpus case by a fugitive challenges the regularity of the extradition proceedings only, and, if such proceedings are sought to be impeached, it must be by answer.—Id.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Hab. Corp. § 76.

§ 85. Evidence.

[a] (Sup. 1854)

An indictment for murder implies prima facie that the party indicted has no right to bail, and the burden is upon the petitioner to show that proof of his guilt is not evident.—Ex parte Kendall, 100 Ind. 599.

[b] (Sup. 1885)

Where a habeas corpus petition admitted that petitioner killed deceased, for which killing he was restrained, but alleged that in so doing he acted in self-defense, and that the proof of his guilt of murder in killing deceased was neither evident nor the presumption thereof strong, the burden of proving the truth of such allegations was on him.—Ex parte Richards, 1 N. E. 639, 102 Ind. 260.

[c] (Sup. 1893)

On habeas corpus, where it appeared that the petitioner was in custody under a judgment of a justice of the peace, it was proper to refuse to permit petitioner to testify that the charge against him before the justice was not one for grand larceny, as such testimony would have been but a legal conclusion.—Davis v. Bible, 33 N. E. 910, 134 Ind. 108.

On habeas corpus by one committed by a justice of the peace on preliminary examination, the burden rests on petitioner to show want of probable cause to justify commitment.—Id.

[d] (Sup. 1895)

Where the record of a court does not show the facts necessary to give it jurisdiction to restrain a prisoner, the presumption that such facts did not exist must be rebutted and established by extrinsic evidence.—Clayborn v. Thompkins, 40 N. E. 121, 141 Ind. 19.

[e] (Sup. 1901)

In habeas corpus by a father to secure the custody of his minor daughter from her grandfather, who was also her guardian, petitioner should not be permitted to attack the character of the daughter of the woman in whose care the guardian intended to place such minor, since the character of such daughter was in no manner involved in the case.—Berkshire v. Caley, 60 N. E. 696, 157 Ind. 1.

[f] (Sup. 1907)

Where petitioner for a writ of habeas corpus to secure his release from arrest fails to plead over or deny the prima facie case made against him by the return to the writ after his exception thereto has been overruled, a judgment of return is properly rendered against him.—Kemper v. Metzger, 169 Ind. 112, 81 N. E. 643.

The presumption is that one authenticating an indictment, made a part of requisition papers, as Governor of the demanding state, was so acting at the time.—Id.

§ 88. — Imprisonment under valid process or judgment.

[a] (Sup. 1901)

Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 1133, forbids inquiry in habeas corpus proceedings into the legality of any judgment or process by which a prisoner is in custody, or to discharge him prior to the expiration of the term of his commitment, where such prisoner is in custody under process issued on final judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction. Held, that where the return to a writ of habeas corpus showed that the prisoner had been charged in a police court with assault by an affidavit properly filed, had pleaded guilty, and that, on evidence heard, he was convicted and sentenced to a term of imprisonment, not yet expired, which return was not traversed, the prisoner was properly remanded to custody.—Peters v. Koepke, 59 N. E. 23, 156 Ind. 35.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. HAB. CORP. § 79.

§ 89. — Release from custody.

[a] (Sup. 1884)

A refusal to make a further return of a writ of habeas corpus, upon the sustaining of exceptions to the return, is equivalent to an admission that all the facts are before the court; and the court may thereupon summarily discharge the prisoner from custody, without requiring further proof to support the allegations of the petition.—Joab v. Sheets, 99 Ind. 328.

[b] (Sup. 1886)

If a return to a writ of habeas corpus be insufficient, the prisoner may be released without any further hearing or evidence.—Clayborn v. Thompson, 40 N. E. 121, 141 Ind. 19.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. HAB. CORP. § 79.

§ 90. Hearing on writ and return.

[a] (Sup. 1871)

An issue of fact may be formed on the return to a writ of habeas corpus for a child by a denial of its averments, and a trial thereof may be had.—Speer v. Davis, 38 Ind. 271.

[b] (Sup. 1897)

Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 560 (Rev. St. 1881, § 551), providing that the court shall, at the request of either party, make a special finding of the facts, and state the conclusions of law thereon, does not apply to habeas corpus proceedings, in which Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 1132 (Rev. St. 1881, § 1118), provides the court shall proceed in a summary way to hear and determine the cause.—Schleuter v. Canatsy, 47 N. E. 825, 148 Ind. 384.

§ 92. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1878)

An inquiry by the state courts, on habeas corpus, whether or not a person charged is really a fugitive from justice, is authorized by 2 Rev. St. p. 421, and is not prohibited by Const. U. S. art. 4, § 2, nor by Rev. St. U. S. § 5278.—Hartman v. Aveline, 63 Ind. 344, 30 Am. Rep. 217.

[b] (Sup. 1879)

On habeas corpus to secure the discharge from arrest of one held under extradition from another state, the question whether the complaint or indictment which is attached to the warrant charges a crime under the laws of the latter state will not be considered, where evidence of such laws is not before the court.—Tullis v. Fleming, 69 Ind. 15.

[c] (Sup. 1904)

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 1133, denies to every court or judge the power to inquire into the legality of any judgment or process, whereby the person applying for a writ of habeas corpus is in custody and held "on a warrant issued from the circuit court on an indictment or information." Held, that on a petition for discharge on habeas corpus by one held by a sheriff the only inquiry is whether petitioner is in custody on such warrant.—Gillespie v. Rump, 72 N. E. 138, 163 Ind. 457.

[a] (Sup. 1852)

The judge hearing an application for a writ of habeas corpus may, under the statute, cause notice to be given to the party interested in resisting it, or his attorney, and witnesses to be summoned to testify in the premises, and may fully investigate the case.—Lumm v. State, 3 Ind. 293.

§ 95. — Validity of proceedings.

[a] (Sup. 1893)

On habeas corpus by a person held on a mittimus issued by a justice on a conviction of vagrancy, where the jurisdiction of the justice is denied, it is competent to show that the affidavit set out in the record, and purporting to be that on which a warrant issued for petitioner, and on which he was tried, was in fact not filed with the justice until after the trial and imprisonment of petitioner, and exclusion of such evidence is reversible error.—Smith v. Clausmeier, 136 Ind. 105, 35 N. E. 904, 43 Am. St. Rep. 311.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Hab. Corp. § 82.

§ 96. — Errors and irregularities.

[a] (Sup. 1900)

Burns' Rev. St. 1894, §§ 1715, 1716, authorize justices of the peace to immediately commit persons for nonpayment of fines imposed, and section 1133 declares that no court shall question the legality of a final judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction on which commitment was issued. Held, that since a justice had jurisdiction to commit a defendant for violation of Fish Law 1899, § 10, making it a misdemeanor for any person to have a fish net, seine, etc., a defendant convicted for violation of such section before a justice of the peace was not entitled to question the sufficiency of the affidavit on which the proceedings were based on habeas corpus to obtain his release from commitment for failure to pay fine imposed.—*Pritchett v. § 99. — Custody of infants.

Evidence, see ante, § 85.

[a] (Sup. 1848)

Under the express provisions of Rev. St. 606, §§ 73, 74, the court having jurisdiction may award the custody of children to a parent under such regulations as it may think fit in cases where the husband and wife are living apart, and are not divorced.—Tarkington v. State ex rel. Tarkington, 1 Ind. 171.

[b] (Sup. 1851)

When a child is of a sufficient age to exercise discretion in choosing its custodian, the court, on habeas corpus, will see that the child is allowed to go with such parent as it may choose; but when the child is of tender age, the court will name the person entitled to custody.—Bounell v. Berryhill, 2 Ind. 6.

[c] (Sup. 1875)

The law gives the possession and control of children to the male parent if begotten and born of wedded parents, and this control is not to be taken away unless an overweighing and strong necessity is shown as to the interest of the father to protect and provide for the child.—Child v. Dodd, 51 Ind. 484.

[d] (Sup. 1881)

2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 589, § 6, provides that the father of a minor, or if there be no father, then the mother, if suitable persons, respectively, shall have the custody of the person and control of the education of the child, except the exclusion of its guardian. Held, that a mother showed herself entitled to custody against the father, and also able to care for the child, it was not an abuse of the court's discretion to award her custody to her as against the child's foster parents, in the absence of evidence of the latter's pecuniary condition or showing the relative positions of the parties from a social standpoint.—McClintock v. State ex rel. Dickinson, 80 Ind. 547.

[e] (Sup. 1887)

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 2518, providing that the father of a minor shall have the custody of the person and the control of the education of the minor, such father, if he is a suitable person, has a right to the custody of an infant child as against the statutory guardian.—Brooke v. Logan, 13 N. E. 603, 112 Ind. 2 Am. St. Rep. 177.

[f] (Sup. 1896)

Ordinarily a father is entitled to the custody of his minor child, after the death of the mother; but the welfare of the child is paramount to the claims of the parent.—Huskins v. Whiting, 44 N. E. 639, 145 Ind. 580, 5 Am. St. Rep. 220.

A little girl seven years old, on the death of her mother, and at the mother's request, was taken by her grandparents, with whom she continued to reside for six years. They were well to do, and occupied a large house. The child was of delicate health. When 13 years old her father, who was a widower, who owned no home, and whose business kept him away from home five or six days each week, took her to reside with his sister, who had a family of her own, and resided in a comparatively small house, but was a proper person to care for the child. Held, that a judgment restoring the child to the custody of her grandparents, based on the ground that it was for her best interest, would not be disturbed.—Id.

An oral agreement by a father that another may have the custody of his minor daughter during infancy does not preclude him from reclaiming her custody.—Id.

[g] (Sup. 1897)

A parent has no absolute right to custody of his minor child, and controversy therefor between the parent and a third person should be decided with regard alone to the best interests of the child.—Schleuter v. Canatsy, 47 N. E. 825, 148 Ind. 384.

[h] (Sup. 1901)

Under Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 2682, providing that the father of any minor, if a suitable person, shall have the custody of the person of his child, the father has a prima facie right, as against a statutory guardian, to such custody, but such right is subordinate to the welfare of the child; such statute being but a recognition of the common-law rule.—Berkshire v. Caley, 60 N. E. 696, 157 Ind. 1.

In habeas corpus by a father to secure the custody of his daughter from her grandfather, who was also her guardian, the court may inquire as to the character and fitness of the woman in whose care the guardian intended to place the child.—Id.

[i] (Sup. 1902)

On habeas corpus for the custody of a child, the interest of the child is the paramount consideration in determining who is best entitled to its custody.—Bullock v. Robertson, 65 N. E. 5, 160 Ind. 521.

[j] (Sup. 1905)

A petition for habeas corpus for the custody of a child is addressed to the sound legal discretion of the trial court.—Willis v. Willis, 75 N. E. 653, 165 Ind. 325.

A petition for writ of habeas corpus for the custody of a child 18 months of age, alleging that respondent, the husband, and father of the child, by reason of his cruel and inhuman treatment, compelled petitioner, his wife and the mother of the child, to leave him, and go elsewhere to reside; that subsequently, respondent, through false promises, induced petitioner to return to the city in which respondent lived, and there, by false promises and deceptions, temporarily obtained the possession of the child, and failed to return it in accordance with his promise; that petitioner is a fit person to be entrusted with the custody of the child, while respondent is not a fit or suitable person to have its care and custody, but is addicted to the excessive use of intoxicating liquors, and has a violent, ungovernable temper; and generally alleging that the restraint of the child is wrongful and without cause—is sufficient to sustain the writ, and authorize the delivery of the child to the custody of its mother.—Id.

[k] (Sup. 1905)

Where a female infant's father lived with his mother and single sister in a comfortable house, situated in a good neighborhood, and, except for the fact that he smoked cigarettes and cigars, and drank beer occasionally, was of good habits, good moral character, good disposition, industrious, kind, and affectionate, and earned $100 monthly, he was entitled to the custody of his daughter after the death of his wife, as against his wife's sister, though the latter was slightly better off financially, and perhaps could have afforded the child more advantages.—Gilmore v. Kitson, 74 N. E. 1083, 165 Ind. 402.

The mother of an infant cannot, by testamentary provisions or otherwise, deprive the father of his right to the custody of the infant after the mother's death.—Id.

The appointment of a legal guardian for an infant, without the knowledge or consent of the infant's father, after the death of its mother, was ineffectual to deprive the father of the right to its custody.—Id.

[l] (Sup. 1907)

Where a foreign divorce decree directed that petitioner should have the custody of a minor child of the parties for one week of every three, and that defendant, the child's mother, should be entitled to its custody the balance of the time, petitioner could not obtain the exclusive custody of such child in a collateral habeas corpus proceeding, on the ground that defendant had wrongfully removed the child from the jurisdiction of the court rendering the decree.—Hardin v. Hardin, 168 Ind. 352, 81 N. E. 60.

[m] (Sup. 1909)

Though Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 3065, providing that a guardian appointed for a minor shall have the custody and tuition of the minor and the management of his estate during minority, is mandatory, it does not divest the court of its discretion to deprive the guardian of his legal right to the custody, care, and education of the ward, where it appears that he is unfit, or that his custody and care will not conduce to the best interests of the ward.—Shoaf v. Livengood, 172 Ind. 707, 88 N. E. 598.

The welfare of a ward is the principal thing to be considered in awarding the right to his custody, care, and control, and the legal right of a guardian to his custody is secondary thereto.—Id.

If the maternal great-grandfather of a child who had been appointed its guardian was 80 years old, infirm, a widower, with no home of his own, residing among his relatives, and unable to care for and educate his six year old ward, who was in the custody of its paternal grandparents, who had given it a good home, treating it as their own child and afforded it all the comforts of life, and were able properly to care for and educate it, the court acted within its discretion in refusing to remove the child and award its custody to the guardian.—Id.

Evidence, see ante, § 85.

[a] (Sup. 1867)

If the return to a writ of habeas corpus, in case of the arrest of a person upon the requisition of the governor of another state, alleges that the petitioner is the identical person named in the warrant, the question whether that person committed the crime can only be tried in the state that issued the requisition.—Robinson v. Flanders, 20 Ind. 10.

§ 104. — Commitment on indictment.

[a] (Sup. 1890)

Petitioner for a writ of habeas corpus alleged that he had been convicted of arson, that, on appeal, the judgment was reversed, he was a second time convicted, and that, on appeal, the judgment was reversed; that information for conspiracy in connection with the alleged arson was filed against him, but dismissed by the prosecuting attorney, a indictment for conspiracy returned, which subsequently quashed on petitioner's motion and petitioner ordered to remain in custody to answer any charge that might be brought against him by the grand jury; that, on the next day, no accusation being presented, he was charged on habeas corpus, upon his own recognizance; that immediately after he was released on a warrant issued upon an information filed by the sheriff, charging him with conspiracy; and that he was then in custody under. It did not appear that there had been any delay in this particular prosecution, that the offense for which he was in custody was the same as that charged against him in the former prosecutions. Held that, under St. 1881, § 1119, providing that in habeas corpus proceedings there shall be no inquiry into the legality of any process issued from the circuit court upon an indictment or information, a judgment of the court below denying the writ, and remanding the petitioner to custody, would not be disturbed.—Kinningham v. State, 125 Ind. 180, 24 N. E. 1048.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

See, also, 21 Cyc. p. 326.

§ 105. — Final judgment, sentence and commitment.

[a] (Sup. 1900)

In habeas corpus proceedings it cannot be urged that there was no judgment on which to commit defendant because a justice of the peace sustained a motion in arrest, when the record shows that such motion was not made until after judgment was rendered.—Pritchett v. State, 56 N. E. 20, 154 Ind. 108.

§ 106. — Commitment for contempt.

[a] (Sup. 1848)

Inquiry under a writ of habeas corpus is limited to the question as to whether a commitment for contempt was issued by a court of competent jurisdiction and in a case authorized by law.—Lockwood v. State, 1 Ind. 161, 60.

§ 109. — Remand or recommitment.

[a] (Sup. 1846)

When a habeas corpus issues on a complaint of illegal imprisonment, the judge who issues the writ may, if the authority by which the prisoner is detained be defective, call before him witnesses, inquire into the guilt of the prisoner, and remand, recognize, or discharge him, as he may think proper.—State v. Best, 7 Blackf. 611.

[b] (Sup. 1854)

Defendant, who was remanded to jail to await another trial, after the jury had been unnecessarily discharged and he had therefore been once put in jeopardy, applied to the judge of the court of common pleas for a writ of habeas corpus. Held that, although the discharge of the jury was equivalent to a verdict of acquittal, yet, as there had been no release of defendant under any judgment of the court, he should be remanded to the circuit court, where he might be discharged on motion, or could plead the discharge of the jury in bar to a second trial.—Wright v. State, 5 Ind. 200, 61 Am. Dec. 90.

[c] (Sup. 1854)

Where a prisoner, illegally convicted of felony and sentenced by the court of common pleas of Laporte county to the state prison, petitioned a judge of the court of common pleas of another county for a writ of habeas corpus, on which the record of such conviction and sentence was returned as the cause of detention, it was held that such judge rightly ordered the petitioner's discharge from the state prison and his return to the jail of Laporte county to await the further action of the courts of said county.—Miller v. Snyder, 6 Ind. 1.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. Hab. Corp. §§ 97, 98.

§ 112. Judgment or order.

[a] (Sup. 1883)

Rev. St. 1881, § 1118, relating to habeas corpus, provides that the court or judge shall proceed in a summary way to hear and determine the case, and, if no legal cause be shown for the restraint or for continuation thereof, shall discharge the party. Held, that it is not error in such case to deny a motion or request that the court make a special finding of facts in writing, and state its conclusions of law thereon.—McGlennan v. Margowski, 90 Ind. 170.

[b] (Sup. 1885)

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 1120, providing that, in habeas corpus cases, the court or judge shall summon the prosecuting witnesses, investigate the criminal charge, discharge, let to bail, or recommit the prisoner as may be just and legal, the entry of a formal judgment in such proceedings is not required.—Ex parte Richards, 1 N. E. 639, 102 Ind. 280.

[c] (Sup. 1906)

Where petitioner in habeas corpus proceedings for the custody of a child violated the order of court, awarding her such custody by moving with the child into another county, respondent to the proceedings should have applied for relief to the court whose order was violated, and not to the court of the county to which the petitioner removed.—Willis v. Willis, 75 N. E. 653, 165 Ind. 332, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 244.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

§ 113. Appeal and error.

[a] (Sup. 1848)

Under Acts 1847, p. 113, a writ of error will lie to the judgment of the court or judge on a writ of habeas corpus.—Sherry v. Winton, 1 Ind. 96, Smith, 1.

[b] (Sup. 1856)

An appeal will lie under the Revised Statutes of 1852 from an order or judgment upon a writ of habeas corpus, whether made in term or vacation, and without the filing of a bond.—Nichols v. Cornelius, 7 Ind. 611.

[c] (Sup. 1865)

An appeal will lie from a judgment in habeas corpus awarding the custody of a minor child "until the final order of the court"; such order being final.—State ex rel. Sharpe v. Banks, 25 Ind. 495.

Where a final judgment has been rendered on a writ of habeas corpus, an appeal will lie to the Supreme Court under Code, §§ 550, 556, as in other cases.—Id.

[d] (Sup. 1871)

An order made, upon considering a return to a writ of habeas corpus, for possession of a child, which alleges an excuse for not producing it, requiring respondent to do so, may be reviewed on appeal to the supreme court under 2 Gav. & H. St. p. 277, § 576, which expressly authorizes appeals for interlocutory orders or judgment upon writs of habeas corpus.—Speer v. Davis, 38 Ind. 271.

[e] (Sup. 1872)

A judgment rendered in a proceeding by habeas corpus, awarding the custody of a minor child "until the further order of the court," is final, and an appeal will lie therefrom.—Henson v. Walts, 40 Ind. 170.

[f] (Sup. 1878)

On appeal from a hearing on petition for habeas corpus by the mother of an illegitimate child to recover possession thereof from one to whom the child had been apprenticed by an orphan asylum after the mother had voluntarily abandoned her, the evidence showed that both the relatrix and the defendant were proper persons to have the custody of the child. Held, that a judgment for the relatrix should not be disturbed, although the judge's finding did not include the age of the child.—Copeland v. State ex rel. Kayser, 60 Ind. 394.

[g] (Sup. 1881)

All the evidence being in the record on appeal, the Supreme Court must weigh the same, and determine the question presented by the petition for the writ of habeas corpus, without special regard to the finding and decision of the circuit court.—Ex parte Walton, 79 Ind. 600.

[h] (Sup. 1884)

On an appeal in a habeas corpus proceeding for the possession of a child, it was not error to permit the appellants to perfect their appeal without first surrendering the possession of the child as ordered by the court, as pending the preliminary examination of the cause as well as during the hearing the child was in legal contemplation in the custody of the court, though actually in the possession of the appellants at the time the appeal bond was approved.—Joab v. Sheets, 99 Ind. 328.

[i] (Sup. 1884)

In habeas corpus proceedings instituted for the purpose of procuring admission to bail, by a party indicted for murder, the supreme court, upon appeal by the petitioner, will examine and pass upon the evidence.—Ex parte Kendall, 100 Ind. 599.

[j] (Sup. 1885)

When a habeas corpus case, to determine to whom should be awarded the custody of a child, is before the supreme court by appeal on the evidence, that court will examine and pass upon its sufficiency to sustain the finding and decision below.—Jones v. Darnall, 103 Ind. 569, 2 N. E. 229, 53 Am. Rep. 545.

[k] (Sup. 1905)

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 650, providing that an appeal taken during the term shall operate as a stay of all further proceedings on the judgment upon the filing of an appeal bond conditioned to duly prosecute the appeal, and pay the judgment and costs which may be rendered against appellant, a bond filed on appeal from a judgment awarding petitioner in habeas corpus proceedings the custody of a child, and assessing the costs to respondent, does not stay the operation of the judgment, in so far as it awards the custody of the child and is self-executing, but merely stays the execution for the collection of costs.—Willis v. Willis, 75 N. E. 655, 165 Ind. 332, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 244.

[l] (Sup. 1907)

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 1131, providing that plaintiff in habeas corpus proceedings may except to the sufficiency of the return, a paper filed, stating that the petitioner, for exception to the third paragraph of says that the paragraph does not state sufficient to constitute a defense to petition writ, was a sufficient exception, where objection was first raised on appeal, and was not being a demurrer.—Kemper v. Metzger, 101 Ind. 112, 81 N. E. 663.

A habeas corpus proceeding brought by father to recover from a statutory guardian custody of his child is not barred by a judgment upon an application previously made by the father to have the guardian removed and himself appointed in his stead.—Brook Logan, 112 Ind. 183, 13 N. E. 669, 2 Am. Rep. 177.

[b] (App. 1902)

Under Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 1058, and Burns' Rev. St. § 1046, making it the duty of the court in decreeing a divorce to make provision for the guardianship, custody, support, and education of minor children of a marriage, a decree in habeas corpus proceedings by the father to obtain possession of a child, which provided indefinitely for the child's maintenance and decreed the time that the child should be with each of her parents, was not res judicata so as to preclude the court, in a subsequent divorce proceeding brought by the wife, awarding the custody of the child to her.—Everitt v. Everitt, 64 N. E. 892, 29 Ind. App. 94 Am. St. Rep. 276.

[c] (Sup. 1906)

The doctrine of res judicata applies to habeas corpus proceedings to obtain the custody of a child.—Willis v. Willis, 75 N. E. 655, 165 Ind. 332, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 244.

§ 3. Who are hawkers or peddlers.

[a] (Sup. 1886)

One who goes from house to house with samples of goods or merchandise, soliciting orders from persons not dealers, for future delivery, is a "peddler," within the meaning of Rev. St. 1881, § 3106, subd. 23, authorizing cities to restrain hawking and peddling, and an ordinance requiring hawkers and peddlers to procure a license.—Graffy v. City of Rushville, 107 Ind. 502, 8 N. E. 600, 57 Am. Rep. 128.

[b] (Sup. 1885)

One who goes from house to house with articles of commerce, there offering them for sale, and delivering them as sold, is engaged in peddling, within Rev. St. 1894, § 3541 (Rev. St. 1881, § 3106), authorizing cities to restrain hawking and peddling.—City of South Bend v. Martin, 41 N. E. 315, 142 Ind. 31, 29 L. R. A. 531.

[c] (Sup. 1907)

Aside from statute, a "peddler" may be defined as any person who, by solicitation or outcry, takes anything from house to house in any manner, and offers to sell the same for money, or barter the thing for any other thing, or whoever goes from house to house for the purpose of taking orders for anything for future delivery to be sold or bartered.—Fallis v. Gas City, 169 Ind. 508, 82 N. E. 1056.

Acts 1905, p. 252, c. 129, § 53, subd. 37, authorizes cities to license, tax, regulate, etc., peddlers, etc. Acts 1901, p. 500, c. 244, defining and regulating peddling, defines, in section 7 (Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7231p), the "peddler" to mean to sell, or offer to sell, manufactured goods, wares, merchandise, directly to a consumer, either by going from house to house, for the purpose of selling and delivering such goods or for the purpose of taking orders for their future delivery. A city passed an ordinance declaring it unlawful for any one to engage in the business of peddling without a license and defining peddling. Held that, in view of the definition in the ordinance, going from house to house for the purpose of taking orders for teas, coffees, etc., for future delivery, in violation of the ordinance, was properly convicted, since, in empowering the city to exercise the right to regulate and license peddlers, it would be presumed that the legislature intended to clothe the word "peddler" with the significance given it by statute.

Wood*, 101 Ind. 138.

Where the county commissioners under their statutory authority as the county board of health made an allowance to the secretary of such board, it will be presumed on appeal that the board of health had determined the amount of his compensation, and that the allowance was made by the county commissioners in payment thereof.—Id.

In a proceeding to determine the right to the office of secretary of the board of health of a county, the complaint alleging that the relator was a physician and surgeon at the time of his election, is sufficient as against objection that it does not show that he was eligible to the office of secretary of the board of health.—Weir v. State ex rel. Axtell, 93 Ind. 311.

In a proceeding to determine the right to the office of secretary of the board of health, it was not sufficient to allege that the relator was competent and qualified to hold the office, as the complaint should state the facts showing that the relator was eligible.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1885)

Rev. St. 1881, § 4993, provides that the secretary of local boards of health shall be a health officer, and shall be allowed such compensation as the board electing him may determine. Held that, when the compensation of such officer was determined by the board of health, the county commissioners should not be required to pay it to be paid by an auditor's warrant on the county treasury.—Waller v. Wood, 101 Ind. 138.

No appeal lies from the determination of the board of health of the compensation of its health officer.—Id.

[c] (Sup. 1904)

Where a county board of health commissioners did not elect a secretary at their meeting in December of a particular year required by Acts 1891, p. 15, c. 15, § 1, the board did not thereby lose jurisdiction to elect a secretary thereafter, but was entitled to elect such secretary at a subsequent meeting after the beginning of the succeeding term.—Hendershot v. State ex rel. Bennett, 69 Ind. 679, 162 Ind. 69.

Where the board of health commissioners of a county did not elect a secretary at its meeting in December for the ensuing year required by Acts 1891, p. 15, c. 15, § 1, the board elected a secretary at its first meeting in January after the commencement of the ensuing term, the person so elected was entitled to hold office for the remainder of such term, since the board had no power to elect, except to elect the power it had failed to exercise the previous December.—Id.

St. 1894, § 6718 (Acts 1891, p. 15, § 8), to protect the public health by the removal of causes of diseases when known, and in all cases to take prompt action to arrest the spread of contagious diseases, the board's acts have the force of an act of the Legislature; the whole authority of the state being included and delegated.—Anable v. Board of Com'rs of Montgomery County, 34 Ind. App. 72, 71 N. E. 272, 107 Am. St. Rep. 173.

While the action of a board of health is usually legislative and not subject to review by the courts, yet personal and property rights cannot be arbitrarily stricken down under the guise of the police power of the state, and if such rights are so invaded the board's action is open to review by the courts.—Id.

§ 16. — In general.

[a] (App. 1898)

Burns' Rev. St. § 6718, provides that the county commissioners shall constitute a board of health ex officio for the county, whose duty it shall be to take prompt action to arrest the spread of contagious diseases. A bill was presented to county commissioners by an assignee of a claim for services performed by order of a township trustee as watchman during a small-pox quarantine, to which was attached a certificate by the trustee that the amount claimed was due for the assignor's services as such watchman, and an affidavit of the claimant that the amount was justly due, and no part had been paid to him or to his assignor. Held, that the complaint showed no liability on the part of the county.—Board of Com'rs of Perry County v. Bader, 50 N. E. 776, 20 Ind. App. 339.

[b] (App. 1901)

Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 6718, provides that the board of county commissioners shall protect the public health by the removal of causes of disease, and abate and remove nuisances dangerous to the public health, and shall annually elect a secretary, who shall be the executive officer of the board of health, and serve as health officer. Held, that the secretary cannot bind the county for an indebtedness incurred in abating, without authority from the board, a stagnant pond, which had become a nuisance.—Martin v. Board of Com'rs of Montgomery County, 60 N. E. 993, 27 Ind. App. 98.

[c] (App. 1903)

Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6711 et seq., provides that the secretary of the State Board of Health shall be the health officer of the state: that in the absence of other provision the mayor and council of cities shall constitute a board to protect the public health and prevent spread of contagious diseases; in case of the removal of a city health officer, the vacancy shall be immediately filled. An indigent person became sick with smallpox at plaintiff's home in a thickly populated portion of a city. The secretary of the health board for the county was absent, having left written authority to S. to act in his stead, and S., acting under such appointment and by verbal directions from the secretary of the State Board of Health, quarantined and guarded the house, and employed plaintiff to nurse such person. The guards were afterwards paid by the city. Held, that such laws demand a liberal construction, and that the city was liable to plaintiff on the contract of employment.—Monroe v. City of Bluffton, 67 N. E. 711, 31 Ind. App. 269.

[d] (App. 1904)

It is the duty of city boards of health to take prompt action to prevent the spread of contagious and infectious diseases, and to such end they may lawfully establish a pesthouse, it being the duty of the state to preserve the public health, and all expenses connected with or incident to the establishment and maintenance of a city hospital for those afflicted with contagious or infectious diseases, whether the persons removed to it are indigent or not, are properly chargeable to the city where the hospital is kept for the prevention of the spread of such disease.—City of Frankfort v. Irvin, 34 Ind. App. 280, 72 N. E. 652, 107 Am. St. Rep. 179.

The fact that it was the duty of the overseer of the poor, and not of the city, to provide for poor persons, did not relieve the city from liability for necessary expenses incurred by it in preventing the spread of disease, and therefore a person rendering services and incurring expenses in the burial of such persons who had died of smallpox might recover therefor, as such statute further required such board to perform such duties as might be required by the State Board of Health, and a rule of the State Board of Health made it the duty of any person having charge of the remains of one who had died of smallpox to cause the body to be interred within 12 hours after death.—Id.

[c] (App. 1905)

Evidence held to constitute an emergency authorizing the secretary of a town board of health to direct plaintiff to nurse a smallpox patient and a physician quarantined in plaintiff's house, and to bind the town for such services, under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6718, requiring the board of health of a town to take prompt action to arrest the spread of contagious and infectious diseases.—Town of Knightstown v. Homer, 75 N. E. 13, 36 Ind. App. 139.

Acts done to prevent the spread of disease being within the jurisdiction of the board of health, as provided by Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6718, and the town being only liable when the board or its secretary acts within the scope of its authority, an instruction authorizing a recovery against a town for the destruction of property "by its officers," when done "for the purpose of preventing the spread of disease," was erroneous.—Id.

Where a smallpox patient was taken to plaintiff's house at the instance of plaintiff's husband, and not by any act or command of the town board of health or its secretary, and, after the death of the patient, plaintiff's household furniture, etc., was destroyed, by order of the board of health, to prevent the spread of the disease, the town was only liable for its value at the time it was destroyed.—Id.

Where it did not appear that plaintiff was in indigent circumstances, nor unable financially to provide any and all means for the care and attention of her child, who contracted varioloid from a smallpox patient with whom plaintiff and her son were quarantined in plaintiff's home, and for whom she was employed to care by the secretary of the town board of health, the town, in the absence of a statute, was not liable for services rendered by plaintiff to her son.—Id.

§ 17. — Employment of physicians and assistants.

[a] (Sup. 1881)

The employment by a board of health of a city of one of its members to vaccinate pupils in a public school is void as against the city, where the members of the board are, by statute, only authorized to receive an annual salary, to be fixed by the common council.—City of Fort Wayne v. Rosenthal, 75 Ind. 156, 39 Am. Rep. 127.

[b] (App. 1897)

Rev. St. 1884, §§ 6718, 6719 (Horner's Rev. St. 1897, §§ 4903, 4904), making the board of commissioners a county board of health, "w^h duty it shall be to protect the public health, removal of causes of diseases, and * * * arrest the spread of contagious diseases," do authorize the board to furnish free medical and medical attendance to a particular family suffering from smallpox, if the family remain in its own home, and it is not shown to be indigent, but only that portion of the expense which was incurred to prevent the spread of the disease is justified.—Board of Com'rs of County v. Fertich, 46 N. E. 699, 18 Ind. App.

[c] (App. 1904)

Where there is some danger of a small epidemic in a city, and the council appoints a committee of three persons, the chairman of which had practically the oversight of the care of persons so afflicted and employed plaintiff to perform services in nursing and caring for patients, in removing certain persons afflicted with the disease, and in burying others who had died of it, and the city council ratified the action of the committee and chairman by paying no bills so made, the city was liable for the services.—City of Frankfort v. Irvin, 34 Ind. App. 280, 72 N. E. 652, 107 Am. St. Rep. 179.

Under Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6718, making the mayor and common council of a city the board of health, where the city had no board, and making it their duty to protect the health, and to take prompt action to arrest the spread of contagious diseases, and to abate nuisances, the hiring by such board of a nurse for smallpox patients was a valid contract, not in a matter quasi judicial or of a legislative character.—Id.

The fact that the pesthouse, where the services were performed, was located outside city limits, was immaterial as affecting the contract.—Id.

Such contract, made through the agency of a committee or other authorized person, is binding.—Id.

§ 21. Constitutionality of regulations.

[a] (Sup. 1900)

Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 6711 et seq., authorizing the state board of health to adopt rules and by-laws, in harmony with other statutes in relation to the public health, to prevent the spread of contagious and infectious diseases, is a proper delegation of authority, within Const. art. 4, § 1, vesting the legislative authority in the general assembly; and hence such board has power to adopt a rule requiring local boards to compel vaccination of all persons in all cases where an exposure to smallpox is threatened, or where there is danger of such epidemic ensuing.—*Blue v. A city, authorized "to remove or confine persons having infectious diseases," has implied power to hire buildings in which to confine such persons.—City of Anderson v. O'Conner, 98 Ind. 168.

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 3106, empowering municipal corporations to remove or fine persons having infectious or pestilential diseases, a city has authority to rent a house as a pesthouse for the purpose of confining therein persons having the smallpox.—Id.

[b] (App. 1908)

It is the duty of cities, in order to protect the public health, to provide medicines and medical and other assistance to the poor in case of epidemics.—City of Greenfield v. Black, 42 Ind. App. 645, 82 N. E. 797.

§ 33. Unhealthful practices.

[a] (Sup. 1906)

Acts 1905, p. 82, c. 52, is entitled an act to regulate and in certain cases to prohibit the manufacture, sale, "keeping for sale, owning or giving away of cigarettes," etc., and providing penalties for violation thereof, and declares that it shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly to manufacture, sell, dispose of, give away, or keep for sale any cigarettes, etc., or "keep or own or to be in any way concerned, engaged or employed in owning or keeping any such cigarettes. The act passed the Senate under a title "An act to regulate the manufacture, sale, and the giving away of cigarettes," etc. When the bill passed the house on third reading, it retained such title, which was afterwards amended by adding a penalty clause. The bill then went back to the Senate and a conference committee reported the bill with its present title under which it was adopted. Held, that the act should not be construed as intending to prohibit the act of smoking cigarettes or keeping them in possession for the sole purpose of smoking them.—State v. Lowry, 77 N. E. 728, 166 Ind. 372, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 528; Lewis v. State, Id.

§ 35. Permits for burial or transportation of dead bodies.

[a] (App. 1894)

A railroad company is not liable for refusal to transfer a dead body when the transit permit fails to show the name of the medical attendant, as required by the rules of the board of health, though the certificate of the medical attendant is pasted on the box, it not appearing that the company had knowledge of this.—Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. James, 35 N. E. 395, 38 N. E. 192, 10 Ind. App. 550.

Acts 1891, § 5, provides that the state board of health may adopt rules to prevent outbreaks and the spread of infectious diseases. Rule 5 of the board, concerning the transit of dead bodies, provides that every body must be accompanied by a person having a transit permit from the board of health, showing name of deceased, age, place of burial, cause of death, and, if of an infectious nature, the point to which it is to be shipped, medical attendant, and name of undertaker. Held that, where the name of the medical attendant was not contained in a permit presented to defendant railway company, its refusal to carry the body was not wrongful.—Id.

Under Acts 1891, p. 16, § 5, authorizing the board of health to adopt rules in harmony with other statutes in relation to public health, and to prevent the spread of contagious diseases, a rule that, in case of shipment, every dead body must be accompanied by a person in charge with proper tickets and a transit permit from the board of health, or proper health authority giving permission for the removal, and showing the name of the deceased, age, place, and cause of death, the point to which shipment was to be made, the name of the medical attendant and name of undertaker, was within the power of the board, and was reasonable.—Id.

§ 1. Nature and essentials of highway by prescription.

[a] (Sup. 1883)

A way which has been used by the public, and recognized by the road officers, as a highway for more than 20 years, is a public highway, although not of great length and terminating on private property.—Nichols v. State, 89 Ind. 298.

[b] (Sup. 1883)

In order to constitute a highway by user, the use must not only be uninterrupted and continuous for 20 years, and with the knowledge of the owner of the land, but must be by his consent or without his objection.—Board of Com'rs of Greene County v. Huff, 91 Ind. 333.

[c] (Sup. 1891)

Twenty years' use by the public under claim of right, evidenced by the use, will give a right to the road or street of which the owner of the fee cannot divest the public no matter what may have been his intention, not because an intention to dedicate is conclusively presumed, but because the statute of limitation has divested the owner of the right by destroying the remedy.—Town of Marion v. Skillman, 26 N. E. 676, 127 Ind. 130, 11 L. R. A. 55.

[d] (App. 1892)

A highway may become such by long user.—Zimmerman v. State, 31 N. E. 550, 4 Ind. App. 583.

§ 2. Constitutional and statutory provisions.

[a] (App. 1908)

Under the express provisions of Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6762, a public highway may be established by 20 years' user.—Gillespie v. Duling, 41 Ind. App. 217, 83 N. E. 728.

At common law individuals could gain easements only by prescription, and the public only by dedication, but Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7663, establishes highway by 20 years' use, regardless of other evidences of dedication.—Id.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. HIGH. § 3.

§ 4. Land subject to prescription.

[a] (App. 1898)

A highway may be acquired by adverse user on a railroad right of way parallel with the railroad.—Blumenthal v. State, 51 N. E. 490, 21 Ind. App. 665.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. HIGH. §§ 5, 16.

§ 5. Mode and extent of use.

[a] (Sup. 1874)

A highway cannot be regarded as established by use where the evidence shows that the road was never surveyed nor worked by authority, and that the track was continually changed to accommodate fields and to go around obstructions.—Stephenson v. Farmer, 49 Ind. 234.

[b] (Sup. 1881)

A road becomes a public highway by 20 years' user under the statute, or in less time with the assent of the owner and such use that public and private interests would be affected by a change.—Ross v. Thompson, 78 Ind. 90.

[c] (App. 1908)

The word "public" in the expression "the road is open to public use" means "all those who have occasion to use" the road.—Gillespie v. Duling, 41 Ind. App. 217, 83 N. E. 728.

The fact that a road is not open at both ends and furnishes access and egress to but one property owner does not prevent its being a public highway, since the law does not fix the number of persons who must travel on a road to determine its existence.—Id.

[d] (App. 1908)

The fact that an ancient highway is rarely used except by a few persons, to whom it affords a means of ingress and egress from their land, does not make it the less a public highway.—Small v. Binford, 41 Ind. App. 440, 83 N. E. 507, 84 N. E. 19.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. High. §§ 6, 7.

§ 6. Duration and continuity of use.

Ascertainment and entry of highway by user, see post, § 15.

[a] (Sup. 1854)

A public road, not recorded, which had been used for 20 years or more, was under the act of 1849 a public highway.—Epler v. Niman, 5 Ind. 459.

[b] (Sup. 1857)

By statute user of a highway for 20 years is an absolute bar; but a highway may be established by user for a shorter period.—Hays v. State, 8 Ind. 425.

[c] (Sup. 1881)

A road that has been used by the public uninterruptedly for 20 years, with the knowledge and consent of the owner of the title, becomes a public highway.—Bidinger v. Bishop, 76 Ind. 244.

[d] (Sup. 1881)

Where there has been 20 years' user of a way by the public, the way is to be deemed a public one, and those asserting rights in it are not bound to show an original intent to dedicate.—Ross v. Thompson, 78 Ind. 90.

[e] (Sup. 1881)

Where a highway was uninterruptedly used by the public for more than 30 years, the right thereto was acquired independently of any order of the board of commissioners.—Webb v. Carr, 78 Ind. 455.

[f] (Sup. 1884)

The user of a road as a public highway for 20 years vests a right in the public, of which the owner in fee cannot divest them; and, where the road leads to a stream, a right to bridge it is impliedly vested.—Kyle v. Board of Com'rs of Kosciusko County, 94 Ind. 115.

[g] (Sup. 1886)

The use of a road as a highway for 20 years vests an indefeasible right in the public.—City of Ft. Wayne v. Coombs, 107 Ind. 75, 7 N. E. 743, 57 Am. Rep. 82.

[h] (Sup. 1886)

User under claim of right for 20 years, will establish a highway as effectually as an express grant.—Cleveland v. Obenchain, 107 Ind. 591, 8 N. E. 624.

[i] (Sup. 1887)

When the use of a highway attempted to be acquired by prescription is interrupted, prescription is annihilated, and must begin again.—Shellhouse v. State, 11 N. E. 484, 110 Ind. 509.

[j] (App. 1898)

In a prosecution for obstructing a public highway, evidence showing a continuous and undisputed public use of the way for over 20 years is sufficient to show that it is a public highway, though there is no evidence of a dedication.—Cromer v. State, 52 N. E. 230, 21 Ind. App. 502.

[k] (App. 1898)

Uninterrupted use by the public of a road continuously for 20 years constitutes it a highway.—Blumenthal v. State, 51 N. E. 496, 21 Ind. App. 665.

[l] (App. 1905)

After the expiration of 20 years' use, the statute makes a road a public highway, regardless of its origin or the objection of landowners.—McClaskey v. McDaniel, 74 N. E. 1023, 37 Ind. App. 59.

[m] (Sup. 1909)

Where obstructions were placed in a way not to obstruct public travel, and the public continuously asserted its right to use the way by removing the obstructions when necessary, the public use was not interrupted thereby.—Pitser v. McCreery, 172 Ind. 663, 88 N. E. 303, 89 N. E. 317.

While a highway acquired by user is in a sense a prescriptive way, it is also a statutory way, as distinguished from a common-law prescription; and, it being immaterial whether it is used with consent, or over the objection of the landowner, obstructions therein or interruptions of the use could operate only as overt acts or objections to the use, no more effective than ordinary declarations.—Id.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. High. §§ 8, 9.

§ 7. Adverse character of use in general.

[a] (Sup. 1858)

Where a road was by an order of the proper authority located on the line between two farms, so far as such an order could locate it, but in point of fact was opened and used for 27 years on the land of one, a supervisor may not, under the statutes of this state, open the road on the line.—Lemasters v. State, 10 Ind. 391.

[b] (Sup. 1885)

Under section 5035, Rev. St., providing that roads which have been used as highways for 20 years shall be deemed public highways, a road becomes a public highway after such user without reference to the question of dedication or consent of the landowner.—Strong v. Makeever, 102 Ind. 578, 1 N. E. 502, 4 N. E. 11.

After a highway has been in use 20 years, and according to statute becomes a public highway, the course of the same must be as it has been used, and not as originally intended by 'the owners of adjoining land, and a court has no authority to order the record of the road according to the latter mode.—Id.

A person who wishes to make the question that by mistake or otherwise the highway used is not upon the proper line, should pursue the proper legal remedy for the correction of the mistake before the expiration of the 20 years' use, which, according to section 5035, Rev. St. 1881, confirms the highway as public property. Merely objecting is of no avail after the expiration of that time.—Id.

[c] (Sup. 1887)

Before a highway can be established by prescription, the general public under a claim of right, and not by mere permission of the owner, must have used some defined way, without interruption or substantial change, for 20 years or more, and a gate erected across the way, and maintained and kept closed at certain stated times during a period of 4 years, by the owner, evincing an intention to exclude the public from the uninterrupted use thereof, destroys any prescriptive right not already fully accrued.—Shellhouse v. State, 110 Ind. 500, 11 N. E. 484.

Where the owners of land devote a portion of it for use as an alley or passageway for their own private purpose, such alley or passageway will not be converted into a public highway simply because the public also uses it by permission from the owners.—Id.

[d] (Sup. 1891)

Where adjoining landowners agree upon their division line, and establish a road supposed to be on the land of one of them, which road for 50 years is used by the subsequent owners of the land and by the public, the road cannot be closed by the owner of one of the tracts, when he finds by a resurvey that the road is on his land, instead of the adjoining land, as it was supposed to be.—Bales v. Pidgeon, 120 Ind. 548, 29 N. E. 34.

[e] (App. 1896)

Under Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 6762 (Rev. St. 1881, § 5035), providing that, when a way has been used by the public for 20 years, it shall be deemed a public highway, the uninterrupted use of a road for such time, whether with the owner's consent or over his objection, constitutes it a public highway.—Brown v. Hines, 44 N. E. 655, 16 Ind. App. 1.

[f] (Sup. 1900)

Where a part of the right of way of a railroad company was used by persons hauling freight to and from the company's cars, and both such part and another part of the right of way was used by the general public as a highway, there was no such exclusive or adverse use of the part used for freighting as would make it a highway by prescription.—Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. City of Seymour, 55 N. E. 953, 154 Ind. 17.

[g] (Sup. 1902)

The public user of a strip on a railroad for a highway, which was neither exclusive nor adverse, did not prove an implied dedication, or a prescriptive right, no matter how long continued.—Cannon v. Cleveland, C., St. L. R. Co., 62 N. E. 8, 157 Ind. 682.

[h] (Sup. 1902)

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7663, providing for the establishment of a highway after 20 years' user, is not to be construed with section 6178, regulating the acquisition of easements, it being immaterial to user under the highway statute whether the use is with the consent or over the objection of the landowner.—Pittsford v. McCreery, 172 Ind. 663, 88 N. E. 303, 8 Ind. App. 317.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. HIGH. §§ 10, 12-14.

§ 8. Claim or color of right to use.

[a] (Sup. 1906)

A charge that, in order to constitute a highway, it is sufficient if the road in question shown to have been used as a public road "as a right" for a period of 20 years, is subject to the objection of not requiring user to have been under a claim of right, especially when taken in connection with a charge which stated that, "for a road to be a public highway by user, it must have been used * * * under a claim of right."—Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Norman, 74 N. E. 165 Ind. 126.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. HIGH. § 11.

§ 9. Use and recognition of pre-existing road or other way.

[a] (App. 1892)

Under Rev. St. § 5035, which provides that "all public highways" used as such more than 20 years shall be deemed public highways, a lane traveled by the public continuously for 40 years is a public highway.—Lafayette, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Etsler, 3 Ind. App. 562, 30 N. E. 32.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. HIGH. § 15.

§ 10. Use where proceedings to establish highway defective.

[a] (Sup. 1880)

Where the evidence shows that the way has been used for more than 20 years, and regularly worked from time to time as a public highway, and the survey gives the termini exactly and the line of the road between them, distances and directions from point to point, so that any practical surveyor could easily ascertain and describe the road as it is surveyed, it is sufficient.—Higham v. Warner, 69 Ind. 549.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. HIGH. § 17.

§ 11. Operation and effect.

Extent of dedication, see DEDICATION, §§ 49, 50.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,
SEE 25 CENT. DIG. HIGH. §§ 19-22.

§ 14. — Extent of highway.

Ascertainment and entry of record of highway by user, see post, § 15.

[a] A road which has been used by the public uninterruptedly for 20 years becomes a public highway; and its width, as used at the end of that time, is the established width of the road.—(Sup. 1854) Epler v. Niman, 5 Ind. 459; (1860) Hart v. Trustees of Bloomfield Tp., 15 Ind. 226.

[b] (Sup. 1883)

The character of a way established by user as a highway, is not to be determined by its length nor from the place where it terminates, and the fact that it is short and terminates in private property is immaterial.—Nichols v. State, 89 Ind. 298.

[c] (App. 1907)

Where the boundaries of a highway have never been established by any competent authority, but the right of the public to travel over the road has been established by continuous use, the width of the road is determined by the width of the use.—Anderson v. City of Huntington, 40 Ind. App. 130, 81 N. E. 223.

[d] (Sup. 1909)

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7663, creates a highway by 20 years' user, and declares that all highways, previously laid out according to law, or used as such for 20 years or more, shall continue as located and as of their original width, respectively, until changed according to law. Held, that "their original width" related to the width of the highway when the proceeding was begun to ascertain and record it, and not to a possibly wider or narrower way at some remote or recent period.—Pitser v. McCreery, 172 Ind. 663, 88 N. E. 303, 89 N. E. 317.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. HIGH. § 21.

§ 15. Ascertainment and entry of record of highway by user.

[a] (Sup. 1874)

To entitle a public highway, established by use for 20 years or more, to be entered of record, it should be ascertained and described with the same certainty that would be necessary in establishing a highway originally.—Stephenson v. Farmer, 49 Ind. 234.

[b] (Sup. 1878)

The only issue to be tried in a proceeding to ascertain and record a highway is whether the alleged highway has existed by user for more than 20 years with the consent of the owners, or has been laid out and not recorded; and no viewers are necessary to such a proceeding.—Vandever v. Garshwiler, 63 Ind. 185.

In a proceeding under Rev. St. p. 534, § 45, for ascertaining and recording a highway, the petitioners cannot be compelled to elect on which of several paragraphs of the petition they will proceed to trial.—Id.

A motion to dismiss a petition for ascertaining, describing, and entering of record an unrecorded highway, no ground for such motion being specified, is properly overruled.—Id.

A petition to ascertain and record a highway used by the public for more than 35 years before the filing of the petition should state the names of the owners, that the court may order the proper notice to be given.—Id.

The sufficiency of a petition to ascertain and enter of record an unrecorded highway may be tested by demurrer or motion, the same as the complaint in other actions.—Id.

[c] (Sup. 1879)

Under 1 Rev. St. 1876, p. 534, § 45, providing for the recording of highways, used for more than 20 years, proceedings may be instituted by boards of county commissioners without petition by or notice to any one, any person competent to sue may, on petition or motion, become a party to such proceedings, and no question as to the sufficiency of the petition can be raised. Parties aggrieved by the action of the board of commissioners have their remedy by appeal or by injunction.—Gibbons v. Copper, 67 Ind. 81.

[d] (Sup. 1880)

Under 1 Rev. St. 1876, p. 534, § 45, the board of commissioners of a county may, upon their own motion, proceed to ascertain, describe, and enter of record a public highway, alleged to have been used for 20 years, but not recorded. It is, however, proper to commence such proceedings by petition, when moved by any person other than such board. A written petition is not necessary in either case.—Higham v. Warner, 69 Ind. 549.

[e] (Sup. 1885)

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 5035, giving the county commissioners power to cause roads which have been used as highways for 20 years without being recorded to be ascertained, described, and recorded, held that, as the rights of property holders were involved, actual notice of the proceedings was necessary, though the statute made no provision therefor.—Yelton v. Addison, 101 Ind. 58.

[f] (Sup. 1885)

Orders by a board of township trustees finding for remonstrants on a petition to ascertain a record of the location of a highway on the ground of prescriptive user, and thereafter denying the petitioner's motion for a new trial, did not in any sense amount to a judgment precluding the county board from afterwards ascertaining, and making a record of the highway as established by 20 years' user, nor preventing persons from thereafter objecting to the establishment of such highway on a different line.—Strong v. Makeever, 1 N. E. 502, 4 N. E. 11, 102 Ind. 578.

(g) (Sup. 1885)

Where the petition and the evidence, in proceedings to have a highway declared on the ground of 20 years' user, agree that there was a highway commencing at the north end of a certain road, but disagree as to the distance of the north end of that road from the named corner of land, such variance will overthrow the proceedings.—Washington Ice Co. v. Lay, 103 Ind. 48, 2 N. E. 222.

Parties who appear before the board of county commissioners in a proceeding to have a road declared a highway by reason of 20 years' user, and make no objection to the failure to give proper notice, waive whatever objections might have been made, and cannot raise them on appeal.—Id.

(h) (Sup. 1893)

Where, in an action to establish a public highway on the ground that it had been used for 20 years, evidence as to dedication was admitted, it was error to refuse an instruction that such evidence was competent as tending to show the land became a highway by its continuous and uninterrupted use by the general public without objection for a period of 20 years or more, but it should be considered only in relation to the question at issue as to whether it became a public highway as the result of such use.—McKeen v. Porter, 34 N. E. 223, 134 Ind. 483.

It is not an abuse of discretion, in a proceeding for the ascertainment of a highway, which has been used as such without record, to allow an amendment changing the description so as to shift somewhat the location of the way, although there has already been one trial, and the petitioners have once before amended their petition in the matter of description.—Id.

(i) (Sup. 1897)

Notice to the owner of the land affected is essential to the validity of a proceeding under Rev. St. 1894, § 6762 (Rev. St. 1881, § 5035), empowering the county commissioners to ascertain and enter of record public highways which have been used as such for 20 years or more.—Town of Hardinsburg v. Cravens, 148 Ind. 1, 47 N. E. 153.

(j) (Sup. 1913)

In a proceeding for the ascertainment, description, and entry of record of a public highway by user, the burden is on the petitioner to affirmatively show that none of an objector's land would be unconstitutionally taken.—McCreery v. Fallis, 67 N. E. 673, 162 Ind. 255.

Acts 1897, p. 192, c. 127 (Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6762), providing for the ascertainment and determination of public highways which have been or may be used as such for 20 years or more, and the establishment of their location at not less than 30 feet, only partially repealed by Acts 1867, p. 133, c. 62, providing that public highways used as such for 20 years or more shall be public highways, and giving the board of county commissioners power to ascertain and describe, and enter of record such highways, and left that act in force as to prescriptive highways less than 30 feet wide.—Id.

Acts 1897, p. 192, c. 127 (Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6762), providing that all public highways which have been or may be used as such for 20 years or more shall be deemed public highways, and may be ascertained, described, and entered of record by the board of county commissioners, and the width thereof determined and described, "which width shall not be less than 30 feet," applies only to prescriptive highways having a width of 30 feet or more.

(k) (Sup. 1909)

If a way has been continually used as a highway for 20 years, its status as a public highway is fixed by Burns' Ann. St. 1903, § 7663, so that it may be ascertained and entered of record as the statute provides; and it is immaterial whether the use has been with the consent or over the objection of adjoining landowners, as the statute involves neither prescription nor dedication, though the way established by the statute is analogous to a way established by prescription.—Pitser v. McCreery, 172 Ind. 88, N. E. 303, transferred from Appellate Division (1909) 86 N. E. 980.

"Use as a highway," within Burns' Ann. St. 1903, § 7663, creating a highway by 20 years' user, contemplates a continuous use of the way as a public road which every person has a right to use for travel; and, though the way need not be kept in repair, or approved by the public authorities, the use by the public must be under a claim of right, either with the landowner's consent, or over his objection.

Interruptions preventing a way from becoming a public highway by 20 years' user, provided by Burns' Ann. St. 1903, § 7663, may be interruptions of the right of user by constituting denials of the right of public use, and not merely of the use itself by acts, for the convenience of the adjoining landowners, which incidentally impede travel.—Id.

Where a way has ripened into a public highway by 20 years' user, as provided by Burns' Ann. St. § 7663, the status of the way is fixed, so that it may be entered of record, though the proceeding is contested by an adjoining landowner.—Id.

A finding, in a proceeding under Burns' Ann. St. 1903, § 7663, for the ascertainment of a highway by user, that the public has continued for 20 years to lay down fences and gates interposed by adjoining landowners to assert the right to use the way, is equivalent to a finding of adverse assertion of right.

public, warranting a judgment that the way be entered of record as provided by the statute.—Id.

The width of a way at the end of 20 years' user by the public is the width the statute fixes as the width of the way to be entered of record, as provided in Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7663.—Id.

On an application to establish a highway under Rev. St. 1881, § 5035, on the ground of user, it is competent to prove facts tending to show dedication, as well as user.—McKeen v. Porter, 134 Ind. 483, 34 N. E. 223.

[b] (Sup. 1905)

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6762, providing that all public highways which have been or may be used as such for 20 years or more shall be deemed public highways, an unexplained user of a highway by the public for 20 years or more will be presumed to have been under a claim of right.—Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Norman, 74 N. E. 806, 165 Ind. 128.

[c] (App. 1908)

Where the public highway touching plaintiff's property has been vacated, leaving as his only way out another road, the presumption is strong that such latter road is a public way.—Gillespie v. Duling, 41 Ind. App. 217, 83 N. E. 728.

[b] (Sup. 1887)

The fact that Acts 1885, p. 162 (gravel road law), detached from all other laws, is incomplete in the sense that it cannot be practically administered is immaterial as it is not to be detached, but must be taken as part of a uniform system of law, and not as an isolated act, independent of all others.—*Robinson v. That cannot be deemed a highway of public utility which, if established, would render unfit for use another of much greater importance (as, for example, an important line of railway), or make the transit of passengers upon the latter seriously dangerous.—Crossley v. O'Brien, 24 Ind. 325, 87 Am. Dec. 329.

[b] (Sup. 1880)

There is no right to open and maintain a highway over land without the consent of the owner, where such highway has been found not to be a public utility.—Blackman v. Halves, 72 Ind. 515.

[c] (Sup. 1882)

Whether a proposed highway will be of public utility depends, not upon whether there is an absolute necessity for it, but upon whether the public convenience requires it.—Green v. Elliott, 86 Ind. 53.

[d] (Sup. 1898)

That the highway sought to be established might otherwise become a highway by use cannot affect the question of its utility.—Opp v. Timmons, 48 N. E. 1028, 149 Ind. 236.

[e] (Sup. 1898)

A road will be established if public convenience requires it, though there is no absolute necessity therefor, and it will be used by a few persons more than others.—Fritch v. Patterson, 49 N. E. 380, 149 Ind. 435.

[f] (Sup. 1906)

In order to establish the public utility of a proposed highway, it is not necessary to show that the entire community, or even a large portion thereof, will use the same, but it is sufficient if it will be a public convenience, although it will especially conduce to the convenience of one or more persons over that of others.—*Heath v. § 23. — In general.

[a] (Sup. 1859)

Our county commissioners have no jurisdiction to lay out a road, unless it is through more than one township.—Dan Green, 12 Ind. 303.

[b] (Sup. 1865)

Jurisdiction will not be deemed to have been acquired by the county board to establish a highway, unless the facts necessary to sustain the jurisdiction appear affirmatively on the record. But, when the jurisdiction has been obtained, the same presumption will be in favor of the regularity of all subsequent proceedings as is entertained in ordinary cases in courts of general jurisdiction.—Crossley v. O'Brien, 24 Ind. 325, 87 Am. Dec. 329.

The course of proceeding required by statute when inclosures interfere is not dispositive to the jurisdiction of the county to establish a highway.—Id.

[c] (Sup. 1884)

Boards of county commissioners have jurisdiction to locate, vacate, and change highways in their respective counties.—Tyler v. Marine, 93 Ind. 193.

[d] (Sup. 1892)

The board of county commissioners has original and exclusive jurisdiction over the establishment of highways in a county outside the limits of incorporated cities and towns.—Rassier v. Grimmer, 28 N. E. 866, 29 N. E. 130 Ind. 219; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Board of Commissioners, 30 N. E. 201, 130 Ind. 405.

[e] (Sup. 1899)

The jurisdiction of the board of county commissioners over the subject-matter of locating or changing a public highway is not devested by reason of the fact that the proposed location or change will appropriate the use of such highway any part of the right of way of a railroad company.—Gold v. Board of Commissioners, 53 N. E. 219, 130 Ind. 232.

County commissioners have jurisdiction over the person of a landowner across whose lands they directed a highway to be located where such owner was made a party to the proceeding, was named therein and in the notice and in the report of the viewers as the persons whose lands would be affected by the contemplated change, and was served with notice of the proceedings, under Burns' Act, St. 1894, §§ 6742-6746 (Horner's Rev. Stat.).

§§ 5015-5019), authorizing the county commissioners to locate or change a highway.—Id.

Under Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 6742 et seq., the board of county commissioners is invested with plenary jurisdiction over the subject-matter in proceedings to establish, locate, or change public highway; and jurisdiction of the parties is obtained by publication or posting notices, as prescribed by section 6742.—Id.

[C] (App. 1902)

Under Burns' Rev. St. 1901, 6742, providing for a location of a highway by petition to the county commissioners, and section 8080, expressly depriving township trustees of power to vacate or change any highway, it was no objection to the jurisdiction of the county commissioners on a petition for the location of a road that it lay wholly within one township.—Renard v. Grande, 64 N. E. 644, 29 Ind. App. 579.

[a] (App. 1905)

The board of commissioners has original jurisdiction of the establishment of highways, and, where the landowners are properly notified, it has jurisdiction of the parties, and its jurisdiction is not lost by any irregularities in the proceeding thereafter.—Sisson v. Carithers, 72 N. E. 267, 73 N. E. 924, 35 Ind. App. 161.

[a] (Sup. 1877)

An order of a board of commissioners locating a highway, if otherwise regular, is not invalidated by the fact that one of the termini and part of the way is within the limits of an incorporated town.—Sparling v. Dwenger, 60 Ind. 72.

[b] (Sup. 1908)

Acts 1905, p. 527, c. 167, § 21, provides that, where proceedings are instituted for the location, vacating, or change of a public highway "extending into two or more counties," the county board of commissioners before whom the petition is first filed shall have jurisdiction. Held that, in view of the comprehensiveness of the act and of section 123 (page 579) thereof providing the manner of appeal from the decision of the board and of the practical construction given to the act of 1853 relating to highways, the board had jurisdiction to locate a highway on and along the county line and not otherwise extending into the other county.—Cooper v. [a] (Sup. 1856)

A dismissal of a petition for a highway lying in a single township, pending before the county commissioners before the passage of Code 1852, changing the law authorizing such petition, is error, since the proceeding was saved by the statute with reference to pending suits.—Sayres v. Gregory, 7 Ind. 633.

[b] (Sup. 1895)

Rev. St. 1894, §§ 5656, 5662, 5663 (Act 1893, p. 329), amending Rev. St. 1881, §§ 4286, 4292, 4293, providing that benefits to public highways from drainage shall be assessed to the township, and paid out of the road fund, instead of assessed to the county, and that notice should be given by publication, instead of posting, without any saving clause, did not affect the jurisdiction of the commissioners in pending cases, but merely changed the mode of proceeding therein.—Steele v. Empson, 142 Ind. 397, 41 N. E. 822.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. High. § 30.

§ 28. Parties.

[a] (Sup. 1865)

To give the county commissioners jurisdiction of a petition for a highway, it must be signed by 12 freeholders of the county; but the withdrawal of one of the petitioners after the jurisdiction has attached will not oust it.—Little v. Thompson, 24 Ind. 146.

[b] (Sup. 1878)

A petition under Rev. St. p. 534, § 45, for ascertaining and recording a highway, need not be signed by 12 freeholders of the county.—Vandever v. Garshwiler, 63 Ind. 185.

[c] (Sup. 1879)

Under Rev. St. 1876, p. 534, § 45, it is within the power of the board of commissioners to institute and maintain proceedings to lay out, vacate, or change public highways without making any one a party to them.—Gibbons v. Copper, 67 Ind. 81.

[d] (Sup. 1880)

Under 1 Rev. St. 1876, p. 531, § 15, the petition for the opening of a highway is sufficient, as against a collateral attack, if it appears that either an owner, an occupant, or an agent was properly named and notified.—Porter v. Stout, 73 Ind. 3.

[c] (Sup. 1837)

The right of petitioners to insist, in the circuit court, upon a motion to withdraw their names, made before the board of county commissioners had decided upon the sufficiency of the petition, is not waived by permitting the remonstrants in the first instance to move in the circuit court to dismiss the petition for want of jurisdiction, and allowing the case to be disposed of upon that motion.—Black v. Campbell, 112 Ind. 122, 13 N. E. 409.

[f] (Sup. 1892)

A petition for the opening of a highway under Rev. St. 1881, §§ 5001, 5015, is sufficient to give jurisdiction if it makes either the owner, occupant, or agent a party thereto; and a complaint in an action to enjoin the opening of a road through plaintiff's land, on the ground of want of jurisdiction in the road proceedings because plaintiff was not made a party, which does not negative the fact that the occupant of the land was made a party to the proceedings, is demurrable.—Ryder v. Horsting, 130 Ind. 104, 29 N. E. 567, 16 L. R. A. 186.

[g] (Sup. 1892)

Where it appeared that, after the withdrawal of certain petitioners, the remaining petitioners were less than the required number, the proceeding was properly dismissed.—Ralston v. Beall, 171 Ind. 719, 30 N. E. 1095.

[h] (Sup. 1894)

Notice to a mortgagee, under Rev. St. 1894, § 6856 (Rev. St. 1881, § 5092), providing that in a proceeding to lay out a highway notice shall be given by publication of the viewers' meeting, binds a purchaser at a sale under foreclosure of the mortgage, made after the assessment is levied.—Murphy v. Beard, 138 Ind. 560, 38 N. E. 33.

[i] (App. 1902)

Under Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6742 (Hornor's Rev. St. 1901, § 5015), relating to the petition and notice in proceedings to open highways, the board of commissioners have no jurisdiction unless it is established that 12 of the persons whose names are signed to the petition are freeholders of the county in which the highway is proposed to be located, and that 6 of them reside in the immediate neighborhood of such highway.—Thrall v. Gosnell, 62 N. E. 462, 28 Ind. App. 174.

[a] (Sup. 1854)

Where there were two sections of a statute in force concerning highways, and a petition was filed for leave to do a certain act, and it was materially defective, upon the section on which it was evidently founded, the practice act of 1852, not being in force, it was not competent for the court to allow such amendments as would bring it under the other section.—Spencer v. Graham, 5 Ind. 158.

[b] The fact that a petition, under Acts 1849, p. 103, § 11, for the location of a highway, while stating the owners of the land through which it would pass, failed to state who occupied the land, will not affect the jurisdiction of the board of commissioners.—(1855) Milhollin v. Thomas, 7 Ind. 165; (1856) Donahey v. Thomas, 8 Ind. 255.

[c] (Sup. 1861)

A petition for the location of a highway to lie wholly within one county, not setting out the names of the owners, occupants, or agents of the lands through which the proposed highway will pass, is insufficient to authorize the county board to act upon it.—Hays v. Campbell, 17 Ind. 430.

If a petition to a county board for the location of a county road is so insufficient as to form no basis for the action of the board, an objection thereto will be fatal at any stage of the proceeding.—Id.

[d] (Sup. 1863)

A petition for the location of a highway need not allege that the petitioners are freeholders, or that six of them reside in the immediate neighborhood of the proposed highway; but these facts, though not alleged, may be proved on the hearing on the petition.—Brown v. McCord, 20 Ind. 270.

[e] (Sup. 1865)

An objection that the names of those who will be affected by a proposed highway are not given in the petition for it should be taken before the appointment of viewers.—Crossley v. O'Brien, 24 Ind. 325, 87 Am. Dec. 329.

[f] (Sup. 1870)

A petition for the laying out of a highway, which fails to give the names of the owners, occupants, or agents of the land through which the highway passes, is fatally defective. In such a case, to say that the owners of the land are the heirs of a designated person is not giving the names of the owners.—Hughes v. Sellers, 34 Ind. 337.

An objection to petition for location of a highway because of its failure to give the names of the owners of land involved or a portion of them is not waived by the failure to make it before said commissioners, but may be raised by motion in arrest of judgment on appeal to the circuit court.—Id.

[g] (Sup. 1873)

Where, on petition for a highway, a remonstrant over whose land it would pass appeared in the commissioners' court and filed his claim for damages, without objecting to the sufficiency of the petition, the right to object was thereby waived.—Fisher v. Hobbs, 42 Ind. 276.

[h] (Sup. 1876)

A petition to lay out and open a highway, which describes the beginning point as "near" the corner between the northwest and northeast quarters of a certain section, without designating which corner, is bad, though it states the highway is to run from thence south "between" a certain 80-acre tract of land.—Farmer v. Pauley, 50 Ind. 583.

[i] (Sup. 1876)

A petition for a highway, which describes the highway in several places as "running on the line dividing" the lands of certain named proprietors, without averring that it ran upon or over such lands, or what part of such road passed upon each tract, is sufficient, under 1 Rev. St. 1876, pp. 531, 532, § 16, providing that, where the road is laid out on the line dividing the land of two individuals, each shall give half of the road.—Hedrick v. Hedrick, 55 Ind. 78.

Where all the owners of lands which will be affected by the construction of a proposed highway have been duly notified of the pendency of a petition to establish such highway, but the petition and notice are defective in not averring to whom each separate tract of such lands severally belongs, an amendment of such petition, so as to show the ownership, will not constitute a fatal variance between such petition and notice.—Id.

Amendment of petition to establish a highway so as to show the ownership of the different tracts of land to be affected is proper, all the owners having had notice of the proceeding.—Id.

[j] (Sup. 1876)

A petition for the location of a highway is fatally defective where, instead of setting out the full given names of the owners of the land, it gives initials only of the Christian names of the individual owners, and the firm names only of the owners in partnership.—Vawter v. Gilliland, 55 Ind. 278.

[k] (Sup. 1877)

A petition to locate a highway is not insufficient, though it states that "the names of the owners, agents, or occupants of the lands through which such proposed highway would pass are as follows," and then gives the names of various persons, without specifying in which of such relations any of such persons stand to any of the tracts of land described.—Meyers v. Brown, 55 Ind. 596.

[l] (Sup. 1877)

Filing a remonstrance against granting a petition for the establishment of a highway, without objecting to the sufficiency of the petition, waives such objection.—Sowle v. Cosner, 56 Ind. 276.

[kk] (Sup. 1877)

A petition for the location of a highway, and the reports of viewers and reviewers locating the same, describing the beginning point thereof as being "at or near the residence of" a person named, are too indefinite and uncertain to authorize the location of the same.—De Long v. Schimmel, 58 Ind. 64.

[l] (Sup. 1877)

A petition to locate a highway described it as commencing at a point in a certain highway "south of and adjacent to the right of way" of a railroad named, running thence to intersect and connect with another highway described, "to be so widened or turned southerly at or near its terminus as to make a safe and convenient passage from one highway to the other," and run through and affect lands owned by, etc. Held, that the petition did not describe the starting point or terminus with sufficient certainty.—McDonald v. Wilson, 59 Ind. 54.

A petition to locate a highway must describe it with sufficient certainty to enable a practical surveyor to run it.—Id.

[m] (Sup. 1877)

A petition for a highway, after setting forth the beginning, described the course as follows: "Thence bearing southerly to avoid" a certain creek, "and keeping on the most favorable ground, running easterly and northerly in and through the land of" a person named, "100 yards back to" a given section line. Held, that the description of the course was too uncertain and indefinite.—Scraper v. Pipes, 59 Ind. 158.

[n] (Sup. 1879)

A mere clerical error in a petition for the location of a highway was supplied by the order of the county board establishing the highway, and no objection was taken to the petition on this account. Held, in a motion to dismiss the case, that there was a waiver of this error.—Turley v. Oldham, 68 Ind. 114.

[mm] (Sup. 1881)

A description in a petition to open a highway, which gives its course as "thence northwest 14 rods, with an angle of about 10°," is void for want of certainty.—Smith v. Weldon, 73 Ind. 454.

[n] (Sup. 1882)

Petition for the establishment of a highway considered, and held sufficient.—Breitweiser v. Fuhrman, 88 Ind. 28.

[nn] (Sup. 1882)

The fact that the name of one of the land-owners through whose land the proposed highway was to run was stated to be the "Indianapolis & Vandalia Railroad Co.," instead of the "Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad Co.," was not such a variance as could in any way injure or deceive other owners affected by the road, so as to entitle them to enjoin the opening of the highway.—Schmidt v. Wright, 88 Ind. 56.

[o] (Sup. 1882)

As the change of a highway requires the vacation of a portion thereof, and the location of such portion on a different line, the vacation and location may be made in the same proceeding.—Bowers v. Snyder, 88 Ind. 302.

[oo] (Sup. 1883)

Uncertainty, in a petition for a highway, as to the names of owners of lands affected, should have been taken advantage of by a motion to make more specific; and, in failure thereof, it cannot be reached by a motion in arrest of judgment.—Dillman v. Crooks, 91 Ind. 158.

[p] (Sup. 1884)

A petition, in a proceeding for the location of a highway, alleging that the petitioners are citizens of the county, but failing to allege that they are resident freeholders, is sufficient after a verdict.—Watson v. Crowsore, 93 Ind. 220.

A petition in a proceeding before the county commissioners for the location of a road need not state the width of the proposed road.—Id.

[pp] (Sup. 1884)

A petition for the location or alteration of a highway should show that the petitioners are freeholders, and that six of them reside in the immediate neighborhood of the highway proposed to be located or changed.—Conaway v. Ascherman, 94 Ind. 187.

A petition for a highway need not aver that the proposed road will be of public utility.—Id.

A petition for a proposed highway is reasonably certain if the description is sufficient to enable a surveyor to locate the highway.—Id.

[q] (Sup. 1884)

A description in a petition for locating a road, "commencing about 80 rods west of the northeast corner of section 2, township 18 north, range 10 east, where the road running east from Springport intersects the dirt road sometimes known as the 'Irvin' or 'Bazzle' road; thence east on the township line dividing sections 2 and 35 and 1 and 36 to the range line; thence east between sections 6 and 31 and sections 32 and 5 to the road running north from Rogersville a distance of about 2½ miles,"—is sufficiently definite.—Clift v. Brown, 95 Ind. 53.

[qq] (Sup. 1885)

Whether the petition for the location of a public way was properly signed, etc., is a matter on which the finding of the commissioners is conclusive; no objection having been taken before them.—Forsythe v. Kreuter, 100 Ind. 27.

[r] (Sup. 1885)

In a petition to locate a highway, a statement by the petitioners, followed by the words "as we believe," was equivalent to an unqualified assertion by them that it was true.—Thayer v. Burger, 100 Ind. 262.

[rr] (Sup. 1885)

It is within the discretion of the circuit court to permit amendments being made to petitions for the assessments of highways, and it is not an abuse of such discretion to permit an amendment changing in a slight degree the line in a proposed highway in a case where the change does not affect the interests of any persons.—Burns v. Simmons, 101 Ind. 557, 1 N. E. 72.

[s] Amendments to petitions in highway cases will be allowed.—(Sup. 1885) Burns v. Simmons, 101 Ind. 557, 1 N. E. 72; (App. 1902) Thrall v. Gosnell, 62 N. E. 462, 28 Ind. App. 174.

[ss] (Sup. 1885)

While the Indiana highway law requires that the petition to establish a highway shall be signed by freeholders, it does not require that this should appear upon the face of the petition.—Washington Ice Co. v. Lay, 103 Ind. 48, 2 N. E. 222.

Where it appears by appellants' motion to dismiss an appeal from the decision of the county board in proceedings to establish a highway, and otherwise, that appellants were the owners of all the land over which the highway passes, and that they voluntarily appeared in the proceedings before the commissioners, the petition cannot be objected to because it failed to state the names of the landowners.—Id.

[t] (Sup. 1886)

An objection that the petition is not signed by the requisite number of freeholders cannot be made after the report of the viewers is filed.—Osborn v. Sutton, 108 Ind. 443, 9 N. E. 410.

[tt] (Sup. 1887)

Technical accuracy is not necessary in the description of a proposed road, but it is enough that the general description shall be such that a surveyor can with the assistance of the points definitely named, trace, and designate the proposed route.—Adams v. Harrington, 14 N. E. 603, 114 Ind. 66.

The word "about," where the context limits and restrains its meaning, does not materially impair the certainty of a description of highway.—Id.

[u] (Sup. 1888)

In a petition for a highway, the following description: "Commencing at the road crossing over the Michigan Central Railroad known as 'Bendig's Crossing,' in section * * *; thence easterly and along the north line of said railroad to the intersection of a road running north and south, and along the east side of * * * said highway to be forty feet wide, * * * and running through lands owned by * * *,"—sufficiently designates the beginning, course, termination, and width of the proposed highway.—McDonald v. Payne, 114 Ind. 359, 16 N. E. 795.

[uu] (Sup. 1888)

A petition to establish a highway on a proposed line, described as "beginning at the signboard in the north line of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 17 in township 1 north, range 2 west, where the H. road intersects the F. road; running thence," etc.,—was sufficient, as a road need not be described, with technical certainty, but only so as to enable a surveyor to trace and designate it.—Wells v. Rhodes, 114 Ind. 467, 16 N. E. 830.

[v] (Sup. 1894)

An objection to an application to the county commissioners to locate and open a highway that a sufficient number of freeholders have not joined therein must be raised by remonstrance.—Bronnenburg v. O'Bryant, 139 Ind. 17, 38 N. E. 416.

After the commencement of proceedings before county commissioners to locate and open a highway, and before the jurisdiction of the board has been determined, the board may allow the petition to be amended by adding new names thereto.—Id.

[rv] (Sup. 1894)

Where no appeal was taken from a final order of the board of county commissioners establishing a highway, the sufficiency of the petition on which such order was based, and which became merged therein, will not be considered on appeal from an order setting aside all proceedings subsequent to the entry of such final order.—Badger v. Merry, 139 Ind. 631, 39 N. E. 309.

[w] (Sup. 1897)

A single petition for free gravel roads (Acts 1895, p. 145, § 2) may ask for the establishment of several disconnected roads.—Board of Com'rs of Monroe County v. Harrell 46 N. E. 124, 147 Ind. 500.

[ww] (App. 1904)

Acts 1899, p. 128, c. 97, providing for the improvement of highways, requires the proceeding to be initiated by a petition to the county commissioners, signed by 50 freeholders, which shall definitely describe the beginning and terminus of each of the roads, giving the general direction of all roads, together with the estimated distances, and declares that, if any part of a road is to be new, it shall be described with such definiteness as will enable any practical land surveyor to locate it. Held, that such act contemplated the construction of new roads as well as the improvement of roads already in existence.—Davern v. Board of Com'rs of Decatur County, 72 N. E. 268, 34 Ind. App. 44.

[x] (App. 1905)

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6742, authorizing the county board to locate, vacate, or change any highway on the petition of 12 freeholders, a petition for a highway is sufficient to confer jurisdiction of the subject-matter though it also contains a prayer for relief partially beyond the power of the board to grant.—Harris v. Curtis, 72 N. E. 1102, 34 Ind. App. 438.

[xi] (App. 1905)

Where the original petition for the establishment of a highway did not contain the names of the owners of the land through which the proposed highway would pass, the commissioners' court properly permitted it to be amended so as to cure such defect.—Sisson v. Carithers, 72 N. E. 267, 73 N. E. 924, 35 Ind. App. 161.

Where a petition for the establishment of a highway described the route as commencing at the southeast corner of the southeast quarter of section 32, etc., the starting point was defined with sufficient certainty.—Id.

[y] (Sup. 1908)

Under Acts 1905, p. 527, c. 167, § 21, requiring a petition for the location of a public highway extending into two or more counties to be signed by 24 freeholders, the fact that many of the signers of such petition signed their Christian names by the initials does not warrant the dismissal of the petition, but merely entitles defendants upon proper motion to have the full Christian and surname of each petitioner entered of record.—Cooper v. Harmon, 170 Ind. 113, 83 N. E. 704.

In a petition to locate a highway under Acts 1905, p. 527, c. 167, § 21, it is not necessary to allege that the proposed highway will be of public utility, nor that the cost thereof will be less than the benefits, since it is the duty of the board of county commissioners to appoint viewers, if the jurisdictional facts exist, and thereafter the matters suggested are to be considered.—Id.

[yy] (Sup. 1908)

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7712 (Acts 1907, p. 137, c. 96, § 1), amending Acts 1905, p. 551, c. 167, § 63, and Acts 1905, pp. 551-561, c. 167, §§ 64-83, providing for the improvement of any highway upon petition of 50 or more freehold voters of any township which includes an incorporated town of less than 30,000 population, or upon petition of the majority of freehold voters in townships containing not over 100 voters, and Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7713 (Burns' Ann. St. Supp. 1905, § 6790; Acts 1905, p. 551, c. 167, § 64), requiring such petition to set out the beginning, course, and terminus of the highway, together with a recommendation as to its width and of the character of the improvement, do not require the petition to allege that it is signed by 50 or more freehold voters of a township and whether the township includes an incorporated town of less than 30,000 inhabitants, or that the petitioners are a majority of the freehold voters and that there are less than 100 freehold voters therein; the only provision as to the allegations required being section 7713, which refers only to the description of the highways to be improved.—Hall v. McDonald, 171 Ind. 9, 85 N. E. 707.

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7713 (Burns' Ann. St. Supp. 1905, § 6790), requires the petition for highway improvements to set out the beginning and terminus and a general description of the highway, with a recommendation of its width and of the character of improvements to be made. Acts 1905, p. 552, c. 167, § 68, require the engineer and viewers appointed in highway improvement proceedings to determine and report the width of each highway to be improved. The petition recommended the highways to be improved to the width as now established, and described some of them as running in a northeasterly and southwesterly direction, and also described them by fixed monuments. Held, that the recommendation as to the width of the highways was sufficient on demurrer, since their width could be ascertained from the highways or from the public records, and the description of the highways was sufficiently certain; the remedy, if any, being a motion to make more definite.—Id.

[2] (App. 1908)

A petition for a highway described it as located in Davis township, Starke county, Ind., to be 40 feet wide, and to begin at the northeast corner of section 30, in township 34, range 2 west, to extend north along the section line between sections 19 and 20, in such township and range, and terminate at the northeast corner of section 19, being of the total length of a mile. Held that, as a surveyor, with the assistance of the points definitely named, would be able to trace the proposed route, the description was sufficiently definite.—Fancher v. Coffin, 41 Ind. App. 489, 84 N. E. 354.

A description in a highway petition is sufficient when a surveyor can, by the aid thereof, lay out and designate the proposed highway.—Id.

[22] (Sup. 1909)

While under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7649, the petition for the location of a highway must be signed by 12 freeholders of the county, 6 of whom reside in the immediate neighborhood of the highway proposed to be located, as required by said section, it is not necessary to the sufficiency of the petition that such facts be alleged therein.—Etna Life Ins. Co. v. Jones, 89 N. E. 871.

The petition for the location of a highway need only describe the line of the proposed highway with reasonable certainty, and a surveyor may locate it.—Id.

Where the petition does not show does not contain the names of all the occupants, or agents of the lands through the proposed highway passes, it is not sufficient for failing to show that the named are all the owners, etc.—Id.

The circuit court may properly permit amendment of the petition in highway pending an appeal, even to the changing route or as to jurisdictional matter; and the amendment of the petition for the location of a new highway, and the vacation of a highway, so as to more definitely describe part of the highway sought to be vacated proper.—Id.

Of proceedings of commissioners or viewers, see post, § 38.

Of proceedings to ascertain and enter of unrecorded highways, see ante, § 15.

Waiver of notice by appearance, see post, § 31.

[a] A notice of an application, under 1849, p. 103, § 11, for the location of a highway, need not be signed by more than the petitioners.—(Sup. 1855) Milhollin v. T. 1855, 7 Ind. 105; (1856) Donahey v. T. 1856, 8 Ind. 255.

Since Rev. St. 1843, p. 189, § 52, the county auditor power to administer oaths necessary for the performance of duties of his office, and since, by virtue of his office, he is clerk of the board of commissioners of highways, the proof of putting up notices of an intended application, and the petition was signed by the requisite number of freeholders, might be made on oath administered by the county auditor.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1865)

A county board cannot take jurisdiction of an application for the location of a highway unless it appear that notice of the application has been given, that 12 freeholders of the county have signed the petition, and that the petitioners are of the immediate neighborhood of the road.—Little v. Thompson, 2 Ind. 146.

[c] (Sup. 1868)

Notice of a petition for the location of a highway need not be signed by any one.—Wright v. Wells, 29 Ind. 354.

Upon a petition for the location of a highway, the sufficiency of the proof of the giving of the notice of the petition is a jurisdictional fact, which must be determined by the board of commissioners before the appointment of viewers.—Id.

[d] (Sup. 1880)

The Legislature has the power to prescribe what shall be reasonable notice of the pendency of a petition for the opening of a highway, and whether it may be given to the owner or to the occupant of land.—Porter v. Stout, 73 Ind. 3.

[e] (Sup. 1882)

The fact that one of the county commissioners posted the notice of the petition for highway does not affect the validity of the order establishing the road.—Schmidt v. Wright, 88 Ind. 56.

The marriage and subsequent change of name of one of the owners of the land through which the proposed road would run did not require a new and additional notice to her in order to give the court jurisdiction as to her.—Id.

[f] (Sup. 1892)

A valid highway cannot be established without notice to the landowner affected, or his agent or occupant.—Ryder v. Horsting, 20 N. E. 567, 130 Ind. 104, 16 L. R. A. 186.

[g] (Sup. 1892)

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 5015, jurisdiction of the parties in proceedings to establish a highway outside the limits of a municipal corporation is obtained by posting notices as prescribed by such section.—Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Sutton, 30 N. E. 291, 130 Ind. 405.

[h] (Sup. 1902)

An objection to the form of notice of presentment of a petition for the construction of a road cannot be raised after the board has taken action on such petition.—Gifford v. Baker, 62 N. E. 690, 158 Ind. 339.

Notice of the presentation of a petition to construct a road, stating that the petition would be presented on the first day of the next term of the board of commissioners, "which will be held on the first day of May," is not defective because such term in fact commenced on the "first Monday" in May, all persons being charged with notice of the statutory requirement (Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 7821) that such board shall meet on the first Monday of each month.—Id.

[i] (App. 1902)

Where a petition for the location of a highway was filed after due notice, as required by Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6742 (Horner's Rev. St. 1901, § 5015), providing for the notice to be given in such cases, and subsequently an amended petition was filed changing the length of the proposed highway from $2\frac{1}{2}$ to $1\frac{1}{4}$ miles, but no new notice was given, the board of commissioners had no jurisdiction to determine the matters set forth in such amended petition, since, in effect, it amounted to a new proceeding.—Thrall v. Gosnell, 62 N. E. 462, 28 Ind. App. 174.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. High. §§ 60-70; 10 CENT. DIG. Clerks of C. § 95.

§ 31. Appearance and representation by attorney.

[a] (Sup. 1855)

One who appears in an application to a board of commissioners for the location of a highway, and remonstrates, and has assessors appointed on his own motion, cannot object to want of notice of the application.—Milhollin v. Thomas, 7 Ind. 165; (1856) Donahey v. Thomas, 8 Ind. 255.

[b] (Sup. 1862)

The notice required on an application for the location of a highway will be deemed admitted or waived, on appeal, where the objectors appeared, made objections, had reviewers appointed, and took other proceedings.—Daggy v. Coats, 10 Ind. 259.

[c] (Sup. 1873)

Where, on a petition for a highway, a remonstrant over whose land the proposed road would pass appeared in the commissioners' court and filed his claim for damages, without objecting to the insufficiency of the notice given, objection was thereby waived.—Fisher v. Hobbs, 42 Ind. 276.

[d] (Sup. 1878)

In a proceeding to ascertain and record a highway, under the provisions of Rev. St. § 45, appearance of the parties without notice cures the defect of want of notice.—Vandever v. Garshwiler, 63 Ind. 185.

[e] (Sup. 1887)

A judgment in favor of the petitioners in a proceeding under Rev. St. 1881, § 5035, "to ascertain, describe, and enter of record" a public highway, will not be reversed for failure of the petition to state the names of all the owners, agents, and occupants of the lands through which the highway passes, where all of such parties appeared without objecting to the want of notice.—Orton v. Tilden, 110 Ind. 131, 10 N. E. 936.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. High. § 70.

§ 32. Remonstrances or answers to petition.

[a] (Sup. 1865)

It is not necessary under our statute that the persons remonstrating against the location, vacation, or change of a highway should reside immediately on the line of the highway to be located, vacated, or changed, but it is enough if they reside in the vicinity, or within such reasonable distance thereof that they would be affected thereby in their convenience of travel, or otherwise.—Wilson v. Whitsell, 24 Ind. 306.

[b] (Sup. 1865)

When a person, not a party to the original remonstrance against a proposed highway, is permitted in the circuit court to become a party, he occupies the same relation to the proceedings as the original remonstrants.—Smith v. Alexander, 24 Ind. 454.

[c] (Sup. 1865)

In proceedings on a petition for a highway, it is not proper to file an answer or a demurrer thereto. Such pleadings should be stricken from the files.—Logan v. Kiser, 23 Ind. 303.

[d] (Sup. 1870)

In a proceeding to lay out and establish a highway, a person filed with the board of county commissioners two remonstrances,—the first relying on the ground that the proposed highway was not of public utility; the second, on the ground that it ran through his inclosed land, damaging him to the extent of a certain sum specified, and asking the appointment of reviewers to assess his damages. Held, that the remonstrances raised no objection to the proposed highway on the ground that it ran through the remonstrator's inclosure of one-year standing without his consent, and that a good way could otherwise be had; and such objection was thereby impliedly waived.—Cummins v. Shields, 34 Ind. 154.

[e] (Sup. 1873)

Where, on petition for a highway, a remonstrant over whose lands it would pass appeared in the commissioners' court and filed his claim for damages, without objecting to the utility of the road, the objection was thereby waived.—Fisher v. Hobbs, 42 Ind. 276.

[f] (Sup. 1880)

Persons may remonstrate on the ground of the inutility of the proposed highway, and also claim damages in the same remonstrance.—Peed v. Brenneeman, 72 Ind. 288.

[g] (Sup. 1880)

The right to remonstrate against the utility of a highway sought to be established is not waived by first remonstrating on account of the damages that will be sustained by the remonstrating landowner.—Schmied v. Keeney, 72 Ind. 300.

[h] (Sup. 1881)

Any person through whose land a proposed highway will pass may in opposition thereto show that the statute has not been complied with in reference to some part of the road, whether he owns the land over which that particular part of the road will run or not.—Smith v. Weldon, 73 Ind. 454.

[i] (Sup. 1884)

In a proceeding for the establishment of a highway, a plea in abatement setting up that one of the signers of the petition was induced to sign it by a promise of other signers that they would build a certain fence for such signer was bad, where it appeared that the petition was signed by 33 persons, and such plea did not show that any of the parties to the petition therein set forth possessed any qualifications of proper petitioners required by the statute.—Denny v. Bush, 95 Ind. 31.

In a proceeding for the establishment of a highway, a remonstrance by a landowner alleging that damages were improperly dismissed was filed before the final action of the board, though it was not presented until the fourth term after the filing of the original petition.—Id.

[j] (Sup. 1885)

A remonstrance alleging that a highway is located for a certain distance previously appropriated for a public ditch, is not averring that the ditch will be improved by the construction of the road, is insufficient, as Rev. St. 1881, § 5095, confers on the board authority to make all necessary alterations in the line of the proposed highway.—Osborn v. Sutton, 9 N. E. 410, 108 Ind.

[k] (Sup. 1888)

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 5023, conferring the right to object to the location of a highway on the resident freeholders of the county, a remonstrance must show on its face that the signers are such resident freeholders.—Rhodes, 114 Ind. 467, 16 N. E. 830.

An averment in a remonstrance that the proposed highway would not be of "public utility" is a negative pregnant, equivalent to an admission that it would be of public utility.—Id.

Where a remonstrance, alleging that the proposed highway was not of public utility, was rejected by the commissioners and circuit court as to that allegation, as not showing that the remonstrant was a resident freeholder, the court does not err in refusing to allow the remonstrance to be amended in that respect; there being no reason why the amendment should not have been made before the commissioners' court, and no showing that what actually occurred there.—Id.

[l] (Sup. 1891)

In a proceeding for the establishment of a highway, a person, who was not a party to the proceeding, appeared before the board of county commissioners, and filed a "plea in abatement," alleging that less than six persons, signers of the petition for the highway, resided in the neighborhood thereof. The board struck the plea, on the ground that the contestant was not a party to the proceeding. Held, that, if contestant had a right to contest the jurisdiction of the board, he had the right to do so without filing any plea whatever, and his plea was properly stricken out.—Irwin v. Smith, 129 Ind. 340, 28 N. E. 702.

[m] (Sup. 1894)

A remonstrance filed in proceedings for the establishment of a highway is in the nature of an answer to the petition, and raises an ed of before the county board and on to the circuit court.—Bronnenburg v.

t, 38 N. E. 416, 139 Ind. 17.

App. 1896)

on a trial before a board of county commissioners of a remonstrance for damages on struction of a highway, the petitioners make petition to the sufficiency of the remonstrance and also fail to do so on an appeal of to the circuit court, they waive all objections to the remonstrance in that it did not show specific damage, and evidence of specific damages is admissible.—Lake Erie & W. R. Co.
t, 48 N. E. 1042, 19 Ind. App. 8.

App. 1909)

in Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7657, authorizing the filing by any freeholder of and residing in the county of a remonstrance against the construction of a highway as not being of public utility, the petitioners, not being a freeholder and residing in the county, had no right to file a remonstrance raising the question of public utility.—Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Jones, does not ask for a change in an existing highway, but seeks to establish a new highway and vacate a different one, which is not supported by any evidence, should be overruled.—Harris

v. Curtis, 72 N. E. 1102, 34 Ind. App. 438.

In proceedings for the establishment of a motion to dismiss must be supported by facts showing such want.—Id.

§ 37. — Appointment and qualifica- tions.

[a] (Sup. 1854)

Under the highway act of 1849, a petitioner for a road cannot act as a viewer.—
Epler v. Niman, 5 Ind. 459.

The establishment of a road under the order of the commissioners is void if one of the petitioners therefor was appointed and acted as viewer.—Id.

In a suit for obstructing a road, an objection that one of the viewers was a petitioner for the laying out of the road was fatal.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1859)

Persons who own land along a proposed highway are not competent viewers, and their report is a nullity.—Daggy v. Green, 12 Ind. 303.

[c] (Sup. 1875)

In the absence of any statutory requirement therefor, it is not necessary that the oath taken by the viewers appointed by the board of commissioners in proceedings to lay out and establish a highway should be subscribed by them.—Hays v. Parrish, 52 Ind. 132.

[d] (Sup. 1882)

Failure to object, either before the board or in the circuit court, that viewers or reviewers were not properly sworn, will not constitute a waiver of objection.—Brown v. Stewart, 86 Ind. 377.

[e] (Sup. 1886)

Objections to the competency of the committee must be made within a reasonable time after the committee is appointed.—Osborn v. Sutton, 108 Ind. 443, 9 N. E. 410.

It is within the power of the board of county commissioners to appoint a member of the committee to take the place of one of the original members, rendered incapable of serving on account of physical infirmities.—Id.

[f] (Sup. 1892)

Rev. St. §§ 5092, 5093, relative to roads, provide that there shall be appointed "three disinterested freeholders of the county as viewers, and a competent surveyor or engineer," to lay out the road. The viewers and engineer, after taking an oath "to discharge their duties respectively," shall "assess and determine the damages sustained" by the owners of property through which the road extends, provided "such viewers shall not be required to assess damages," except in certain cases. Section 5094 requires the viewers and engineer to make "a report," and provides that, where the lands are liable to be assessed for two or more roads, "the viewers" shall take into consideration that fact in assessing. Held, that an engineer is not ineligible because he or his brother-in-law owned real estate within the limits assessable for the construction of the road laid out, the viewers alone being empowered to make the assessments, and his duty being simply to aid the viewers in the location of the work, and in making estimates of cost, etc.—Thompson v. Goldthwait, 132 Ind. 20, 31 N. E. 451.

§ 38. — Notice of proceedings.

Notice of application for establishment of highway, see ante, § 30.

[a] (Sup. 1883)

Under Act March 3, 1877 (Rev. St. 1881, § 5092) § 2, relating to the construction of roads, providing that the county auditor shall notify the viewers and surveyor of the time and place of their meeting to make the view, and also give notice by publication in a newspaper printed in the county for three consecutive weeks next prior to the meeting, notice by publication in a newspaper printed in the county for three consecutive weeks is sufficient, although the three weeks were not next prior to the meeting, where it appears that a fair interval intervened between the close of the third publication and the day of the meeting.—Board of Com'rs of Carroll County, 88 Ind. 38.

[b] (Sup. 1894)

In a proceeding under Rev. St. 1881, § 5091 et seq., for laying out and improving roads, a parcel of land to be assessed is not entitled to notice, as the notice by publication of the viewers' meeting, required by section 6856, is sufficient.—Murphy v. Beard, 138 Ind. 560, 31 N. E. 33.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. HIGH. §§ 93-97.

§ 39. — Acts and proceedings in general.[a] (Sup. 1875)

The view and report, in proceedings to lay out and establish a highway, are not rendered insufficient by the fact that only two viewers appointed by the board of commissioners took the required oath and made the report.—Hays v. Parrish, 52 Ind. 132.

[b] (Sup. 1885)

The statute regulating the establishment of free gravel roads imperatively requires the notice of the time appointed for the meeting of the viewers, and the notice so provided is the first one required to be given. Held, that the viewers cannot legally meet and transact business at a time different from that specified in the notice; and, if there is no meeting pursuant to the notice, the proceedings are void, and an injunction may issue to restrain the collection of a special tax levied in aid of the road by virtue of such proceedings.—Board of Com'rs of Tipton County, 137 Ind. 575, 3 N. E. 263.

[c] (Sup. 1894)

A report made by two out of three viewers is sufficient.—Bronnenburg v. O'Brien, 138 Ind. 17, 38 N. E. 416.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. HIGH. §§ 98-106.

§ 40. — View.[a] (App. 1904)

Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6742, relating to the establishment of highways, provides for the filing of a petition and giving of notice, and requires the board of commissioners to "appoint three persons to view such highway." Section 6745 makes it the duty of the a precept to the sheriff commanding to notify the viewers of the time of their report, and "such viewers at such time" shall view the highway. The report of the duly appointed showed that they did not until several days subsequent to that in the commissioners' order. Held, the report was not void, as the commissioners had no authority to name the day on which they were to meet, and section 6743 of the auditor to issue the precept as to the time, and not mandatory.—Shoup v. Bubner, 70 N. E. 300, 32 Ind. App.

VIEWERS FROM OTHER STATES,
25 CENT. DIG. High. § 104.

— Report and proceedings thereon.

Evidence to show acceptance of report.
EVIDENCE, § 417.

§ 1566)

report of viewers appointed to lay out the highway reported in favor of its utility. They had laid out the road commencing at a quarter post between certain sections, running through the lands of A. and B., and ending at a quarter post between two certain other sections, terminating at the intersection of the road to C. Held, that the course and location of the highway were sufficiently stated.—Manman v. Forrest, 27 Ind. 233.

§ 1870) proceeding before the board of county commissioners to locate a public highway, the report of the first viewers appointed is insufficient if it does not show that they have laid out and marked the highway, and, when it runs along a line dividing the lands of different owners, that they have so laid it out that each adjoining owner shall give half of the width. Held, second viewers, appointed upon reception of the first report, have no authority to change the location and mark the highway.—Illughes v. ..., 34 Ind. 337.

§ 1877)

report of viewers locating a proposed highway should prescribe its width.—De Long v. ..., 38 Ind. 64.

§ 1880)

Where one of the remonstrants claimed that in case the proposed road should be located, and the viewers neither found for nor against him on the question of damages, the report was so defective that there should be a venire de novo.—Peed v. Brenneisen, Ind. 288.

Where viewers failed to find either for or against one of the remonstrants on the question of damages, and a venire de novo is granted, the question of public utility and damages is reopened up, not only as to him, but as to all the remonstrants.—Id.

[e] (Sup. 1881)

When the report of viewers in highway proceedings is adverse to the petitioners for the opening of the highway, the commissioners should act upon the report, and deny the prayer of the petition.—Doctor v. Hartman, 74 Ind. 221.

[f] (Sup. 1881)

The improper rejection by commissioners of the report of road viewers does not divest the former of jurisdiction over the matter before them, but they may proceed to order a review; and they have power to proceed in the matter until the final order or conclusion is reached.—Grimwood v. Macke, 79 Ind. 100.

[g] (Sup. 1882)

Where remonstrance against a proposed highway includes the ground of damages and the inutility of the proposed road, it cannot be objected that the reviewers exceeded their authority in reporting the highway of public utility.—Brown v. Stewart, 86 Ind. 377.

Where viewers in their report stated that they made a review on a highway, setting it out that the highway thus viewed was 30 feet wide, and that they marked out such road, it sufficiently describes the road.—Id.

Where remonstrants united in the same remonstrance the question of utility and damages, they cannot complain that the reviewers took action on both questions and reported the highway of public utility.—Id.

Irregularities in the reports of viewers is no ground for dismissing the entire proceedings.—Id.

So where parties to a proceeding for the establishing of a highway admitted that all the proceedings prior to the appointment of the viewers were regular, it is improper to dismiss the entire proceedings on the ground of mere irregularities in the reports of the viewers.—Id.

[h] (Sup. 1883)

Rev. St. 1881, §§ 5016, 5017, relating to highways, provide that, if the viewers shall deem the highway to be located, or the change to be made, of public utility, they shall lay out and mark the same on the best ground, not running through any person's inclosure of one-year standing without the owner's consent, unless, on examination, a good way cannot otherwise be had; that such viewers shall make a report of their proceedings at the next session of the board, "giving a full description of such location, change, or vacation by metes and bounds and by course and distance, except that in case of the vacation of a road, or any part thereof, such description only as will designate it clearly shall be required"; and that when objection is made to the proposed highway, vacation, or change as not being of public utility, and thereupon other viewers are appointed, as provided in section 5023, such other viewers shall report whether or not in their opinion it will be of public utility. Held, that where the report of viewers appointed to locate a public road is favorable, but is silent as to the public utility of the location, or if it does not state that the location is of public utility, it will be presumed that they deemed it of public utility.—Heagy v. Black, 90 Ind. 534.

[i] (Sup. 1884)

In a proceeding for the establishment of a highway, objections to the report of the viewers must be presented to the board of commissioners, and, if not there made, they are deemed waived.—Clift v. Brown, 95 Ind. 53.

[j] (Sup. 1888)

Where in the report of the viewers a highway is laid and described substantially as in the petition, the substitution of the words "Bending's Crossing" for "Bendig's Crossing" as the point of commencing is an immaterial variance; parol evidence being admissible to identify the monument.—McDonald v. Payne, 114 Ind. 359, 16 N. E. 795.

[k] (Sup. 1888)

In a collateral proceeding to restrain the collection of assessments for a gravel road established by county commissioners, the report of viewers appointed to locate the road, stating that they, "in pursuance of a certified copy of said petition, and an order from the said board of commissioners, * * * did meet on the — day of August, 1881," etc., is sufficient to show that they met on the day appointed, August 22, 1881.—Hobbs v. Board of Com'rs of Tipton County, 116 Ind. 376, 19 N. E. 186.

[l] (Sup. 1892)

Under Rev. St. § 5016, which imposes on viewers the duty to ascertain whether a highway will be of "public utility," and to "lay out and mark" it "on the best ground," and under section 5017, providing for a report by such viewers giving a description of such location "by metes and bounds," their report that they have "proceeded to review, mark, and locate the proposed highway," with a description of the road, is sufficient, and they are not required to state therein that the road will be of public utility, and is located on the best ground.—Campbell v. Fogg, 132 Ind. 1, 31 N. E. 454.

In a proceeding to establish a highway, a report of the viewers describing the location of the proposed highway as commencing on a public highway at the southeast corner of a certain section, township, range, and county in the state, thence north on the section line for a distance of about three-fourths of a mile where the proposed highway would intersect with another highway, and where the proposed highway would terminate, sufficiently describes the proposed highway in view of the law fixing the width of highways.—Id.

[m] (Sup. 1892)

Where the report originally filed by the viewers was defective, and the board referred it back to them for correction, no new notice to the parties interested was necessary.—Fu Cummings, 132 Ind. 453, 30 N. E. 949.

[n] (Sup. 1894)

Where the report of reviewers that they were sworn, it will be presumed they were sworn to do the things they appointed to do.—Bronnenburg v. O'I, 139 Ind. 17, 38 N. E. 416.

[o] (Sup. 1896)

Where the record of the board of commissioners of proceedings before them establish a highway shows that the view report, as originally submitted, was amended to include additional property in the assessment for benefits, a petition, in an action to restrain the collection of such assessment, which stated that the board orally instructed the viewers to report petitioner's land, it having subsequently been included by the amendment, is not sustainable.—Bowen v. Hester, 143 Ind. 511, 43 N. E. 330.

The board of commissioners have authority, in proceedings to establish a highway, to amend the report of the viewers and reappoint by them to examine the proposed route, and report the lands that will be benefited thereby, by adding a list of the lands reported, and to assess such additional lands together with those reported as benefited by the viewers.—Id.

That certain property was not mentioned in the report of the viewers, as benefited by the establishment of a proposed highway, will not deprive the commissioners of jurisdiction, if the notice of the return of the report, at the time that the commissioners would meet to hear it, has been duly published, as required by Rev. St. 1894, § 6860 (Rev. St. 1881, § 6860).—Id.

[p] (Sup. 1902)

When the board of commissioners in a proceeding for the establishment of a free road has considered the report of the viewers and decided that the apportionment of the expenses has been fairly and equitably made, and have confirmed it, it becomes the unequaled duty of the auditor under Burns' Rev. St. § 6860, to spread the report on the record, and to place the assessments not stayed by judgment on a duplicate for collection, and to defend the property owners may have assessments, or, if they have one, whether they will care to make it, is of no legal consequence to the auditor, and no ground for hesitation in the discharge of his duty.—Smyth v. State, 148 Ind. 332, 62 N. E. 449.

[q] (App. 1902)

Under Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 4408, requiring to opening highways, and making it the duty of the board of trustees to accept or reject the report of the commissioners within ten days after it is filed, failure to so accept or reject the report nullifies the proceedings.—Town of gomery v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co., 85 N. E. 217, 29 Ind. App. 692.

[r] (Sup. 1904)

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6744 (Hornor's Ann. St. 1901, § 5017), provides that the viewers appointed in proceedings to locate and open a public highway shall report, giving a full description of such location by metes and bounds and courses and distances. The report of road viewers recited that they met as directed "in the order attached and made a part hereof"; that they proceeded to view the proposed highway, which was to be 32 feet wide, and to commence at the place stated in the "order attached herunto," and over the route as stated in "said order"; and that the proposed highway would be of public utility. The order attached was the order to the viewers, in which the location of the proposed highway was stated in detail. Held, that the proposed highway was sufficiently described in the report of the viewers.—Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Shelley, 71 N. E. 151, 163 Ind. 36.

[s] (App. 1904)

A report of viewers in highway opening proceedings, reciting that the highway was to be 30 feet in width, and was to commence at a place where a public highway intersects the section line on the west side of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 21, township 7 N., range 10 W., running thence south to the southwest corner of said section 21, joining to the public highway on the west side of section line of section 28, township and range aforesaid, was not defective for insufficiency of description.—Merom Gravel Co. v. Pearson, 69 N. E. 604, 71 N. E. 54, 33 Ind. App. 174.

Where objectors in highway opening proceedings claimed that the description in the viewers' report was written after the report had been filed, and without the viewers' knowledge, and that the report was insufficient for want of a description, the burden was on the objectors to prove such fact in the commissioners' court.—Id.

[t] (App. 1904)

The remedy of any person aggrieved by the report of viewers that the highway petitioned for was not of public utility was not by motion to set aside the report, but was under Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 6753, permitting action on a second petition on a bond for costs being filed by the petitioners.—Schepman v. Buhner, 70 N. E. 390, 32 Ind. App. 562.

[u] (App. 1905)

In proceedings to establish a highway, it is not necessary that the width of the highway be stated in the viewers' report.—Sisson v. Carithers, 72 N. E. 267, 73 N. E. 924, 35 Ind. App. 161.

Objections to the report of highway viewers, in that it was "insufficient in law," and "not made in accordance with law," were insufficient for indefiniteness.—Id.

[v] (App. 1906)

In proceedings for the establishment of a road, a report of viewers to the effect that the route selected passed through inclosures of more than one year's standing on lands of certain persons and that a good way for the road could not otherwise be had without departing essentially from the route petitioned for, showed that the viewers proceeded in accordance with Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6743, providing that the viewers shall proceed to view the highway to be located, and, if they shall deem it of public utility, shall lay it out, not running through any person's inclosure of more than one year's standing unless a good way could not otherwise be had without departing from the route petitioned for.—Baker v. Gowland, 76 N. E. 1027, 37 Ind. App. 364.

§ 42. Determination as to necessity and utility of road.

[a] (Sup. 1886)

In determining whether a proposed highway will be of public utility, though it is necessary to consider the wants of the particular neighborhood which desires it, yet the interests of the community outside of such neighborhood ought not be disregarded.—Crossley v. O'Brien, 24 Ind. 325, 87 Am. Dec. 329.

In deciding whether a proposed highway will be of public utility, the damages, which, if it were established, would have to be paid for the land appropriated, ought to be taken into consideration.—Id.

[b, c] (Sup. 1882)

The public utility of a proposed highway on a decision of a board of commissioners need not be shown by direct evidence, but may be inferred from facts contained in the case.—Hagaman v. Moore, 84 Ind. 496.

[d] (Sup. 1882)

On the question of the public utility of a highway, damages and all expenses which will result from the construction should be considered.—Rominger v. Simmons, 88 Ind. 453.

[e] (Sup. 1884)

On proceedings to establish a highway, all the damages and benefits determinable from all the evidence are to be considered.—Watson v. Crowsore, 93 Ind. 220.

[f] (Sup. 1886)

In proceedings to establish a highway it is not error to exclude evidence of an existing highway which does not affect the one proposed to be opened.—Kyle v. Miller, 108 Ind. 90, 8 N. E. 721.

[g] (Sup. 1886)

The only remedy petitioners may resort to when an adverse report is made on the subject of the utility of a highway petitioned for is to file their bond for costs and petition over again. —McKee v. Gould, 8 N. E. 724, 108 Ind. 107.

[h] (Sup. 1892)

In proceedings to open a highway over respondents' land, it was proper to allow a witness, who was acquainted with the value of land in the neighborhood, to testify that the proposed highway would be a convenience to persons residing on a certain part of the land, and would make a difference in the market value thereof. —Hire v. Kniseley, 130 Ind. 295, 29 N. E. 1132.

[i] (Sup. 1898)

In determining the utility of a highway, existing ways, condition of population, location of markets, character of soil, physical features of the locality, etc., are proper subjects of inquiry. —Opp v. Timmons, 48 N. E. 1028, 149 Ind. 236.

[j] (Sup. 1898)

Under Burns' Rev. St. 1894, §§ 6735, 6737, 6752 (Horner's Rev. St. 1897, §§ 5010, 5012, 5025),—providing that, before the county commissioners can grant petition to establish a highway in two counties, they must determine whether the damages assessed are greater than the public utility of the highway, and leaving it to them to determine by whom the damages shall be paid, except that any amount in excess of such utility cannot be paid out of the county treasuries,—where, after the commissioners have, on a petition for a highway, allowed one $50 damages, and determined that the damages assessed are not greater than the public utility, and found in favor of the highway, and declared that each county shall pay half the damages, such person appeals, and gets verdict for $450 damages, the case should be returned to the county commissioners to determine whether the damages exceed the utility, and who shall pay them; and therefore a judgment, without this, that the damages shall be paid half by each county cannot be enforced. —State ex rel. Bible v. White, 51 N. E. 481, 151 Ind. 364.

[k] (Sup. 1903)

On an issue as to the public utility of a proposed highway, it is proper to consider the location of established ways, their proximity to the proposed road and their accessibility, but not the number of miles of highway in the township, the amount of taxable property, the rate of road taxation, the amount of the road fund, nor the number of road bands in the district. —Sterling v. Frick, 171 Ind. 710, 86 N. E. 65, 87 N. E. 237.

[l] (App. 1903)

On proceedings for the location of a highway, evidence concerning existing highways, location of markets with relation to the residences of the inhabitants, the character of the soil, the location of schoolhouses, churches, graveyards, and the condition of other highways already in use, are proper subjects of inquiry in determining the utility of the way. —Angell v. Hornbeck, 67 N. E. 23, Ind. App. 59.

Where, in proceedings on the location of a highway, there was evidence that the proposed highway would be of public utility, it was proper to instruct that the benefits accruing to a landowner should be considered in connection with all the other evidence in the case, "as all the jury to consider all the evidence, when they should have been instructed to consider only such as bore properly on the issue of damages and benefits." —Id.

[m] (Sup. 1905)

Evidence held sufficient to support a finding of the jury in highway proceedings that a proposed highway would be of public utility within the requirements of the highway act. —Speck v. Kenoyer, 73 N. E. 896, 164 Ind.

Under the general highway act, limiting the right of viewers to lay out highways to highways as will, in their judgment, be of public utility, and declaring a want of public utility a ground of remonstrance, the question of public utility is generally one of fact, to be determined in the light of public convenience and interest, but it is not essential that the contemplated road be absolutely necessary to the public. —Id.

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6743, providing it the duty of viewers in highway proceedings to lay out and mark the same on the ground, without departing essentially from the route petitioned for, and section 6750, entitling a landowner to have new viewers appointed to reconsider the question of public utility of a proposed highway, the determination of the question of public utility on a trial in the court on issues of inutility and damages is limited to the utility of the route selected by the viewers, and the utility of other proposed routes is immaterial. —Id.

[n] (Sup. 1905)

In proceedings to establish a highway, questions of public utility of the proposed highway and of damages to remonstrators are for the jury. —Heath v. Sheetz, 74 N. E. 503, Ind. 665.

In proceedings for the establishment of a highway, evidence held sufficient to support a finding that the proposed highway would be of public utility. —Id.

[o] (Sup. 1908)

On an issue as to the public utility of a proposed highway, it was proper to exclude the question as to how much it would cost to lay out a good road through the timber, "since it was asked for an indefinite answer, and since witnesses had testified to the cost of putting the road in such passable condition as would be required for the road district, which was as far as the question was material." —Sterling v. Frick, 171 Ind. 710, 86 N. E. 65, 87 N. E. 237.

instruction in a proceeding to establish that, in deciding the question of utility, the jury should determine whether a "useful" road, and that usefulness would exceed its cost the jury find for the petitioners, was not error in leading the jury to believe that, if it would be useful to one citizen or to a number, the finding should be for the expense of public utility regardless of public inconvenience or private utility falls short of utility, and that in determining the same the jury should consider whether the road was already supplied with sufficient highway in the neighborhood leading to towns, and the proposed road would be convenient to persons only, etc.—Id.

instruction, in a proceeding to establish a highway, that if the benefits to land are equal to or greater than the damages by destruction the jury should find against the grant on the question of damage, was not precluding consideration of the cost of building and rebuilding fences, where the jury directed to determine the amount of respondent's damages through the facts alleged in remonstrance, one item of remonstrance was that it would be necessary to build and fence a specified amount of fence.—Id.

(Sup. 1866)

Where the viewers appointed to lay out a highway find an "inclosure" on the route petitioned for, and the owner of which will not consent that the road shall be located through it, and they find that a good route for a road can be located without it, held, that they cannot locate the road through such inclosure; nor can they locate the road by such other route, if such route would be a material departure from the route mentioned in the petition.—*Crossley v. There is no presumption that, because a highway had some portion of its course on a section line, it followed the line throughout.—Seisler v. Smith, 46 N. E. 903, 150 Ind. 88.

(c) (Sup. 1900)

The location of a highway partly on a "half-section line," forming part of a city's boundary, under Highway Law, § 16 (Rev. St. 1881, § 5016; Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 5016; Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 6743), authorizing the county commissioners to locate a highway on any section line forming a city boundary, cannot be sustained, though the objectors' lands lie outside the city, and do not border on the part of the proposed road located on the corporate limits, since by surrendering their lands for the road they paid for an interest in it as an entirety, and, the commissioners being unauthorized to locate the road on the portion forming such boundary, a part of the consideration failed.—Gascho v. Sohl, 58 N. E. 547, 155 Ind. 417.

Under Highway Law, § 16 (Rev. St. 1881, § 5016; Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 5016; Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 6743), as amended by Acts 1895, p. 14, authorizing the county commissioners to locate a highway on any section line which forms a city boundary, the commissioners cannot locate a proposed road on a "half-section line," though it forms a part of the boundary of a municipal corporation.—Id.

In opening a road established by the county commissioners, the supervisor cannot deviate from the course of the road so established.—Phipps v. State, 7 Blackf. 512.

[b] (Sup. 1878)

The board of commissioners has no authority to lay out and mark highways, but these acts are to be performed by the viewers; and the duty of the board is to cause a record thereof to be made after the report of the viewers.—Suits v. Murdock, 63 Ind. 73.

§ 53. Judgment or order establishing road.

Arrest of judgment, see JUDGMENT, § 203.

[a] (Sup. 1840)

Under Rev. St. 1838, p. 493, authorizing county commissioners to establish roads of a "width not exceeding forty feet," an order by them establishing a road of undefined width is void.—White v. Conover, 5 Blackf. 462.

[b] (Sup. 1846)

The establishment of a road whose width is not defined is void.—Carlton v. State, 8 Blackf. 208.

[c] (Sup. 1868)

In a proceeding for the location of a highway, the final order of the board of commissioners was as follows: "And the board, having duly examined and considered said report, accept and approve the same, and it is now ordered that said road be, and the same is hereby, located to the width of 25 feet." The petition stated the beginning, terminus, course, and distance of the road. Held, that the order was sufficiently definite.—Ruston v. Grimwood, 30 Ind. 364.

[d] (Sup. 1878)

Where the record of proceedings before county commissioners to open a highway through inclosed lands does not show that the proposed road was to be located on the line between adjoining proprietors, the objection that the order of the board did not direct that the highway be taken equally from adjoining proprietors will not be considered.—Suits v. Murdock, 63 Ind. 73.

[e] (Sup. 1881)

Where viewers have been appointed upon petition for the location of a highway, and made a report adverse to the petitioners, judgment approving their report has been entered by the board of commissioners, such board has no right to set such judgment aside and appoint reviewers.—Doctor v. Hartman, 74 Ind. 221.

Under section 23 of the highway law, authorizing freeholders of the county living on the line of the proposed highway to restrain and litigate the utility of the proposed highway, freeholders whose lands are taken cannot confer jurisdiction on the county commissioners to vacate a judgment refusing to open the highway, and thus prejudice the interests of those whose lands are not taken.

[f] (Sup. 1884)

An order directing the opening of a proposed highway, but not fixing its width, is void.—Win v. Fulk, 94 Ind. 235.

[g] (Sup. 1893)

Rev. St. 1881, § 5028, provides that an order for laying out of any highway shall specify the width thereof." Held, that an order of the commissioners that "a road be established and opened as prayed for in the petition" is void, there being no statutory requirement that the petition in such a case should mention the width of the road.—Hudson v. Voreis, 124 Ind. 642, 34 N. E. 503.

A petition for the location of a highway does not necessarily contain a description of the width, and an order locating and establishing a highway, giving no other specification of width than by reference to the petition, is in compliance with the statute.—Id.

[h] (Sup. 1894)

A board of county commissioners has no power to set aside its previous final and recorded order establishing a highway.—Badger v. Merry, 139 Ind. 631, 39 N. E. 809.

[i] (Sup. 1900)

A judgment of a county board of commissioners establishing a highway before the damages were paid, as required by Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 6752, as a condition precedent thereto, is void, and payment 30 days later into the county treasury for the use of the parties entitled thereto will not render it operative.—Helms v. Bell, 58 N. E. 707, 155 Ind. 502.

[j] (Sup. 1903)

The power of county commissioners to vacate a highway, if established by a final order, is statutory; they cannot, after a final order establishing a highway has been made and recorded, vacate or modify it.—Robson v. Richey, 65 N. E. 1032, 159 Ind. 600.

[k] (App. 1904)

On proceedings to lay out a highway, the objection did not direct the trial court's action.

1881, § 5096, a recital in the record of the proceedings that the board met in special session called by the auditor, and confirmed the report, after finding that notice of the filing and of the time fixed for the hearing had been given, is sufficient, in a collateral proceeding, to show that due notices were given.—Id.

[f] (Sup. 1909)

Viewers reported that a proposed highway would be of public utility, and thereafter a remonstrance was filed, and reviewers appointed, who reported that it would not be of public utility, and judgment was rendered against the petitioners. Held that, while it would have been proper practice for the commissioners' record to have shown that the first viewers' report had been made, the failure to do so did not deprive the board of jurisdiction, or make its subsequent acts void, as under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, §§ 7653, 7657, making it the duty of the board to appoint reviewers on the filing of a remonstrance, it was its duty to appoint such reviewers without making an order establishing said highway on the report of the viewers, and, as under sections 7652, 7653, and 7657, the board was not authorized to appoint reviewers until after the viewers had reported in favor of the public utility of the proposed highway, it will be presumed that said board received the report of the viewers before appointing the reviewers.—Fowler v. Newsom, 90 N. E. 9.

§ 55. Defects and objections, and waiver thereof.

[a] (Sup. 1870)

The validity of proceedings to establish a road is not affected by payment of a part of the damages awarded to the remonstrator into court for his use by one of the petitioners it not being presumed that such would influence the court prejudicially to the remonstrator.—Cummins v. Shields, 34 Ind. 154.

[b] (Sup. 1878)

An objection to proceedings of the board of commissioners establishing a highway that the damages should have been ordered to be paid out of the county treasury is waived by failing to appeal from the proceedings.—Suits v. Murdock, 63 Ind. 73.

[c] (Sup. 1888)

A person who appears before the board of county commissioners in a proceeding for the location of a highway and who failed to make objections there will be deemed to have waived all defects or irregularities in the proceedings, except such as render them wholly invalid.—Wells v. Rhodes, 16 N. E. 830, 114 Ind. 467.

[d] (Sup. 1892)

In a proceeding before the board of county commissioners to establish a road, any irregularities therein which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties will be disregarded.—Fulton v. Cummings, 30 N. E. 949, 132 Ind. 453.

[e] (Sup. 1900)

The board of commissioners has power to establish highways; but the conditions and manner of its exercise, being clearly defined by the statutes, must be substantially observed or the proceeding becomes a nullity.—Helms v. Bell, 58 N. E. 707, 155 Ind. 502.

[f] (Sup. 1909)

After answering to the merits of a petition for the establishment of a highway by filing a remonstrance with the county board and an appeal to the circuit court, appellant cannot be heard on a plea in abatement on the ground that petitioners failed to file a bond for costs, as required by Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6753 (Acts 1879, p. 148, c. 57), where a petition is filed for a highway over a route which has been held on a prior petition not to be of public utility.—McKaig v. (Sup. 1880)

(Sup. 1907)

§ 1903, p. 255. c. 145 (Burns' Ann. St. 1877), authorize the board of county commissioners to construct gravel roads upon petition of a majority of the landowners benefited by the road. Section 7 provides that on or before the day set for the hearing of the report of the viewers the owners of the land affected may remonstrate against the report, first, because the same is not according to law; second, assessment too high; third, damages too low; fourth, costs more than benefits; and fifth, not a public utility. Section 14 provides that any person who appeared and filed a remonstrance before the board of commissioners shall be allowed an appeal to the circuit court in like manner as appeals are now allowed to be taken from the board of commissioners to the circuit court, and on such appeal the only question that may be tried in the circuit court shall be the questions raised before the board of commissioners. Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6754, relating to highways, provides that any person aggrieved by any decision of the board of commissioners may appeal therefrom to the circuit court of such county. Section 7850, relating to organization of boards of commissioners, provides that from any decision of such commissioners there shall be allowed an appeal to the circuit court by any person aggrieved. Held, that landowners had the right to appeal to the circuit court from a decision of the board of county commissioners finding that a majority of the landowners had signed a petition for a road.—Ross v. Becker, 169 Ind. 166, 81 N. E. 478.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. High. §§ 177-198, 200-203.

§ 58 (3). Decisions reviewable.

(a) (Sup. 1865)

Viewers who were appointed upon a petition for a highway reported that the proposed way would not be of public utility, and also assessed the damages of the persons who would be affected by the way if it should be established. The board of commissioners thereupon dismissed the petition unless the petitioners would open and maintain the road at their own expense. Held, that an appeal would lie under 1 Gav. & H. St. p. 364, § 26, to the court of common pleas.—Crossley v. O'Brien, 24 Ind. 325, 87 Am. Dec. 329.

(b) (Sup. 1865)

No appeal lies from an order sustaining a demurrer to an answer to a petition for a highway, as no such pleadings as an answer and demurrer are proper in such case.—Logan v. Kiser, 25 Ind. 393.

(c) (Sup. 1877)

Where damages have been assessed in favor of a person who objects to the location of a highway which has been petitioned for, the decision of the board of commissioners as to whether such highway is one of sufficient importance to the public that such damages, and the costs attendant, be paid out of the county treasury, is final and not reviewable.—Jameson v. Board of Com'rs of Cass County, 56 Ind. 466.

[d] (Sup. 1883)

Under the statute making the question of paying damages on the establishment of a highway out of the county treasury, one solely for the consideration of the board of commissioners, its judgment and determination in that regard cannot be controlled or reviewed by any other court.—Wilkinson v. Bixler, 88 Ind. 574.

[e] (Sup. 1886)

No appeal to the circuit court lies from an order of the board of county commissioners confirming the report of original viewers, finding that a proposed highway is not of public utility.—McKee v. Gould, 108 Ind. 107, 8 N. E. 724.

[f] (Sup. 1886)

In proceedings for the establishment and construction of a free gravel road under Rev. St. 1881, § 5091 et seq., the final order by the board of county commissioners is the order confirming the assessments of benefits made by the committee appointed as required by section 5096 of the statute; and an appeal will not lie to the circuit court from an order rejecting a motion to vacate former orders approving the report of the viewers, and directing the improvement to be made.—Neptune v. Taylor, 108 Ind. 459, 8 N. E. 566.

[g] (Sup. 1889)

No appeal to the circuit court lies from an order of the board of county commissioners confirming the report of reviewers, finding that a proposed highway is not of public utility.—Jones v. Duffy, 119 Ind. 440, 21 N. E. 348.

[h] Under the Indiana statutory proceedings for the construction of gravel roads, an appeal does not lie from an order of the commissioners for the construction of the road, but only from the final order confirming the report of the freeholders appointed to estimate the expense of the improvement.—(Sup. 1889) Tomlinson v. Peters, 120 Ind. 237, 21 N. E. 910; (1890) Anderson v. Claman, 123 Ind. 471, 24 N. E. 175.

[i] (Sup. 1890)

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 5024, which makes it the imperative duty of the county commissioners to enter judgment refusing to establish a highway when the second viewers have reported against its utility, it is proper to dismiss an appeal from such judgment; the circuit court having no greater jurisdiction in the matter than the commissioners.—Bowman v. Jobs, 123 Ind. 44, 23 N. E. 976.

[j] (Sup. 1890)

A proposed highway commenced at the bank of a river, of such size as to be called a "lake," and used by the public for fishing, hunting, and bathing, and ran about 40 rods, intersecting with other public highways. Held that, notwithstanding the proposed road was open only at one end, the finding of a jury that it would be of public utility should be sustained on appeal.—Moore v. Auge, 125 Ind. 562, 25 N. E. 816.

[k] (Sup. 1892)

In proceedings on petition before a board of county commissioners for the establishment of a free gravel road, an appeal to the circuit court will lie only from a final order of the board.—Wilson v. McClain, 131 Ind. 335, 30 N. E. 1083.

[l] (Sup. 1894)

Where no appeal was taken from a final order of the board of county commissioners establishing a highway, the sufficiency of the petition on which such order was based, and which became merged therein, will not be considered on appeal from an order setting aside all proceedings subsequent to the entry of such final order.—Badger v. Merry, 139 Ind. 631, 30 N. E. 309.

[m] (Sup. 1896)

On appeal in proceedings to establish a highway, the Supreme Court will not disturb findings, supported by the evidence, as to public utility.—Forsyth v. Wilcox, 143 Ind. 144, 41 N. E. 371.

[n] (Sup. 1908)

The highway act (Acts 1905, p. 579, c. 167, § 123; Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7793) provides for a hearing de novo in the circuit court on appeal from decisions of the board of commissioners, and authorizes the Supreme Court to finally determine the cause or to refer it back to the county board. A judgment of the circuit court authorized the highway improvements petitioned for, made final disposition of all the questions involved in the appeal, and certified it back to the board of commissioners, with directions to proceed according to the law; and no motion was made to modify the judgment. Held, that the judgment was a "final judgment," and appealable to the Supreme Court under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 644 (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 671), permitting an appeal to the Supreme Court from all final judgments, and Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 1393 (Acts 1907, p. 137, c. 96), requiring appeals in proceedings to establish highways to be taken directly to the Supreme Court.—Hall v. McDonald, 171 Ind. 9, 85 N. E. 707.

[o] (Sup. 1908)

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 5024, providing that, if a majority of the viewers report against the public utility of a highway, it shall not be established, but, if they report favorably thereto, the highway shall be opened, as amended by Acts 1905, p. 524, c. 167, § 10, by adding the proviso that an appeal shall lie to the circuit court from an order dismissing the petition, or ordering the highway established, petitioners may appeal from an order of the commissioners dismissing their petition.—Kelley v. Angsperger, 171 Ind. 155, 85 N. E. 1004.

Where, in highway proceedings, a motion to dismiss was sustained, and the judgment adjudged that the remonstrators recover of petitioners their cost, such action of the court fully disposed of the case, and was a final appealable judgment, and not merely a judgment for costs.—Id.

[p] (Sup. 1909)

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7658 (Acts 1905, p. 524, c. 167, § 10), providing that, if a majority of the viewers report against the public utility of a highway, it shall not be established, but, if they report favorably, it shall be opened, and providing for appeal to the circuit court from an order dismissing the petition or ordering the highway, petitioners may appeal from an order dismissing their petition, on the return of an adverse report of the viewers.—Gangloff v. Lawler, 171 Ind. 726, 87 N. E. 131.

[q] (Sup. 1910)

Where, on proceedings to establish a public highway, the board of county commissioners entered an order finding the road of public utility, and ordering the payment of proper damages before the opening of the road, it was sufficient to authorize an appeal to the circuit court, although it contained clerical errors affecting its grammatical sense, and though it was unskillfully drawn; it having finally determined the public utility of the road and the amount of damages which must be paid.—Glen-denning v. Stahley, 91 N. E. 234.

§ 58 (4). Presentation and reservation of grounds of review.

[a] (Sup. 1862)

Alleged defects in proceedings concerning the location or change of highways, had before the township trustees, must be presented to the consideration of the board of commissioners while the cause is in progress before them, or they will not be available in the circuit court on appeal.—Shafer v. Bardener, 19 Ind. 294.

[b] (Sup. 1865)

The objection that one of the petitioners for a highway is not a resident of the county in which such way is asked for cannot be taken for the first time by motion or by a plea in abatement, in the circuit court, on appeal from the decision of the board of commissioners, but must be made before the appointment of viewers.—Little v. Thompson, 24 Ind. 140.

[c] (Sup. 1865)

It is too late on appeal to the circuit court to deny for the first time the right of parties to make objection to the establishment of a proposed highway.—Wilson v. Whitsell, 24 Ind. 306.

[d] (Sup. 1885)

A question as to the definiteness of the location in proceedings to establish a public road cannot first be raised on appeal.—Smith v. Alexander, 24 Ind. 454.

An objection as to the sufficiency of a notice of a petition for a highway cannot be made for the first time on appeal to the circuit court, even by one who did not become a party to the proceedings until after the appeal was taken.—Id.

[e] (Sup. 1884)

In proceedings to establish a highway, objections not affecting the jurisdiction of the commissioners' court will not be considered when made for the first time on appeal to the circuit court from such commissioners' court.—Lowe v. Ryan, 94 Ind. 450;

On appeal from an order opening a highway, an objection that the road will pass through appellant's inclosure of more than a year's standing, and that he had not given his consent to such location, not presented before the commissioners' court, cannot be raised in the circuit court.—Id.

[f] (Sup. 1885)

On appeal from the board of commissioners to the circuit court in proceedings to locate a highway, nothing can be tried except what was put in issue before the board, and objections can only be taken to facts upon which the jurisdiction of the board depends by appearing before the commissioners and making such objections at the time the petition is presented and before the appointment of viewers.—Forsythe v. Kreuter, 100 Ind. 27.

[g] (Sup. 1885)

Objections to the report of viewers in proceedings to locate a highway must be presented to the board of commissioners, and cannot be first raised in the Supreme Court.—Thayer v. Burger, 100 Ind. 262.

Objections to the report of commissioners on laying out a way cannot first be taken in the supreme court on appeal.—Id.

[h] (Sup. 1886)

No question can be raised on appeal which was not presented to the board of county commissioners, and objections to the petition and proceedings must be specifically stated.—Osborn v. Sutton, 108 Ind. 443, 9 N. E. 410.

[i] (Sup. 1887)

Where a party appears before the board of county commissioners without objecting to the sufficiency of a notice for the construction of gravel roads, he waives his right to make such objection on appeal.—Robinson v. Rippey, 12 N. E. 141, 111 Ind. 112.

This Digest is compiled on the Key-Number System. For explanation, see page iii.

5 IND.DIG.—29

In a proceeding to establish a gravel road, under the gravel roads acts (Act March 3, 1877; Act April 8, 1885), where there is a petition signed by a number of freeholders, and it is adjudged sufficient by the board of commissioners, the proceedings will not be void; and, unless the objection is made before the board that the petition is not signed by the requisite number of freeholders, it will not be available on appeal.—Id.

Objections to the sufficiency of the bond required by the gravel roads act of 1877 to be filed in proceedings for the establishment of such roads must be made in the commissioners' court, or they will not be considered on appeal.—Id.

The delay of the board of commissioners in acting on a petition for the establishment of a gravel road, under the law (Act March 3, 1877; Act April 8, 1885), does not oust jurisdiction, and if the party does not urge that objection in the commissioners' court it will not be available on appeal.—Id.

[j] (Sup. 1888)

An order on a motion to dismiss a petition for a public highway because of lack of notice will not be reviewed on appeal when such objection was not raised before the county board, and the motion is not made of record by a bill of exceptions.—Mathews v. Droud, 114 Ind. 268, 16 N. E. 590

[k] (Sup. 1890)

Under Elliott's Supp. § 1485, no appeal lies from a judgment of a board of county commissioners ordering the construction of a free gravel road, at the instance of owners of land assessed therefor who failed to appear and remonstrate before the board.—Wilkinson v. Lemasters, 122 Ind. 82, 23 N. E. 688.

[l] (Sup. 1892)

In a proceeding before the board of county commissioners to establish a road where an appeal is taken to the circuit court, no question can be tried on appeal that was not presented to the board of commissioners before the appeal was taken, notwithstanding that, on appeal, the cause is tried de novo.—Fulton v. Cummings, 30 N. E. 949, 132 Ind. 453.

[m] (Sup. 1895)

In proceedings to establish a highway, the question of the sufficiency of proof in the circuit court as to the qualifications of the petitioners cannot be raised for the first time in the supreme court.—Forsyth v. Wilcox, 41 N. E. 371, 143 Ind. 144.

In proceedings to establish a highway, where remonstrant appears generally, and raises in the commissioners' court and the circuit court only the questions of public utility and the amount of his damages, he waives all objections to the qualifications of petitioners, sufficiency of the petition, notice, order to view, report of viewers, and the failure to appoint second viewers.—Id.

[n] (Sup. 1908)

In a proceeding for the establishment of a highway, only those questions raised before the board of commissioners, except jurisdictional questions, can be raised in the circuit court on appeal.—Kinzer v. Brown, 170 Ind. N. E. 618.

[o] (App. 1908)

In proceedings for the establishment of a highway, objections to the petition not made before the board of commissioners are unavailable either in the Circuit or Appellate Court.—Fancher v. Coffin, 41 Ind. 489, 84 N. E. 354.

In highway proceedings objector's remonstrance, verified by his attorney, and to which petitioners replied, filing a petition to strike out parts thereof, which was sustained by the board of commissioners and viewers were thereupon appointed and to the remonstrance, who reported to the board as to the utility of the highway and damages to objector. Held, that petitioner having appeared to and answered the remonstrance before the board of commissioners, and out objection, could not object for the first time on appeal to the circuit court that the remonstrance was defective because not verified by the party.—Id.

[p] (Sup. 1909)

In highway proceedings, objections to the jurisdiction of the county commissioners depends, not apparent on the face of the record, can only be taken by motion, and such objections before the board when the petition is presented, and before the appointment of viewers.—Etina Life Ins. Co. v. Jones, 100 Ind. 871.

Acts 1905, p. 579, c. 167, § 123 (Burns' Supp. 1908, § 7793), provides that any person aggrieved by any decision of the county commissioners in any proceeding relating to highways may appeal therefrom, etc., and that such appeal shall be tried de novo, and may be heard on any issue tried, "or that might have been tried, before the county board." Held, that the last clause only authorizes the trial of such issues on appeal as might have been presented under issues made before the board, and does not authorize the trial of issues not presented to the board.—Id.

[q] (Sup. 1910)

Under Acts 1905, p. 579, c. 167, § 123, providing that an appeal from the decision of the board of county commissioners in a highway proceeding shall be tried de novo, and may be heard on any issue tried, or that might have been tried, before the county board, the jurisdiction of the board could not be challenged on appeal in the circuit court, on the ground that the petition for the improvement of the highway was not signed by the requisite number of freeholders; such question not having presented before the board.—George v. N. E. 606.

FROM OTHER STATES,
CENT. DIG. High. §§ 177-198, 200-

(5). Proceedings for transfer.

p. 1848)
appearance of remonstrants to the open-highway before the board of commissioners, so that they were take notice of an appeal; and summons as appellees was not necessary.—Hardesty, 1 Ind. 79, Smith, 53.

appeal from the decision of county commissioners ordering a road prayed for to the original papers must be filed in circuit court, the court of appeal; and sufficient to file a transcript of them.

p. 1855)
an appeal taken to the circuit court board of county commissioners in the locating a public highway, no other were filed in that court but a transcript of the proceedings of the board. The appeal was properly dismissed.—Moore v. Smock, 6 Ind. 392.

p. 1855)
Rev. St. 1843, pp. 186, 187, §§ 37, board of commissioners could not allow from their decision establishing a road and approving the appeal bond since the were incumbent upon the auditor.—v. Hulings, 7 Ind. 144.

provisions of Rev. St. 1843, pp. 186, 187, 38, and of General Highway Act 1865, in relation to appeals from the board of commissioners, are to be read together; and those of the Revised Code of 1843 governed in relation to highway proceedings, except as to the manner in which the appeal was to be taken.

affidavit required by Rev. St. 1843, pp. 186, 187, 38, to authorize an appeal from the board of commissioners, was to be the maintenance of the appeal, and an appeal was taken by a person who was not a party to the proceedings, the appeal was sustained, though the road was through appellant's land, and the board dismissed the appeal and approved the bond.

p. 1860)
appeal from the record on appeal from the board of commissioners vacating a highway that the commissioners had made an appeal, specifying the penalty of the bond and the surety to be taken. The auditor filed the bond, and sent a transcript. Held, that the auditor should have approved the bond as an act of his own judgment, and, as it was left in doubt by the record whether he did so approve it or merely filed it under the approval of the commissioners, the appeal was not well taken.—Shepherd v. Dodd, 15 Ind. 217.

[e] (Sup. 1865)

Where viewers appointed to report as to the utility of a proposed highway make a conditional report that, if the petitioners for the way will open it, the change is of public utility, otherwise not, and the board of commissioners make an order to the effect that, when the new route is opened and made as good as the old one, it will be established and located as a highway, and afterwards make another order declaring the new route to be a public highway and vacating the old road, an appeal taken in less than 30 days from the last order is in time.—Wilson v. Whitsell, 24 Ind. 306.

[f] (Sup. 1868)

A bond signed by the appellants only is not a bond with surety, as required by 1 Gav. & H. Rev. St. p. 364, § 26, allowing an appeal from the decision of the county commissioners in a proceeding for the location of a highway, and the defect cannot be cured by filing a proper bond in the Appellate Court.—McVey v. Heavenridge, 30 Ind. 100.

[g] (Sup. 1868)

An application was made to the county commissioners for permission to organize an association for the construction of a gravel road, under Act 1865. A contest was filed by persons alleged therein to be owners of the land, which was subject to taxation on the construction of the road. The application was granted, and an appeal to the circuit court was dismissed because the statute under which such proceedings were had did not provide for an appeal from the decision of the commissioners. Held that, no affidavit having been filed as required by 1 Gav. & H. St. p. 253, § 31, under which the appeal was allowable, and the persons taking the appeal not being parties to the proceeding before the commissioners, it was properly dismissed.—Jones v. Theiss, 30 Ind. 311.

[h] (Sup. 1870)

An appeal by a petitioner for the establishment of a highway from an order of the board of county commissioners having been taken in term time of the circuit court, all adverse parties before the commissioners were obliged to take notice of the appeal, and were bound to look to their interest in the circuit court; and the omission of the name of one of the appellees from the docket was unimportant.—Smith v. Seearce, 34 Ind. 285.

[i] (Sup. 1877)

Though, on appeal from the decision of the county board locating a highway, appellant should cause a summons to be issued out of the circuit court, returnable on the first day of its next term, requiring the appellees to appear and answer, failure to sue out such summons is not ground for dismissal of the appeal.—Scraper v. Pipes, 59 Ind. 158.

[j] (Sup. 1883)

Where several persons interested filed separate remonstrances on the ground that the proposed road will not be a public utility, one of them may appeal from the order made against him by filing bonds with his co-remonstrator as his surety.—Leffel v. Obenchain, 90 Ind. 50.

[k] (Sup. 1890)

Under Rev. St. 1881, § 5772, which provides that any person aggrieved by a decision of the county commissioners may appeal to the circuit court, but, if such person is not a party to the proceeding, such appeal shall not be allowed, unless he shall file an affidavit showing his interest in the matter, a person who is named in a petition for opening a highway as one whose land is to be taken therefor need not file such an affidavit in order to appeal from an order establishing such highway, since he is a party to the proceeding.—Wilson v. Wheeler, 126 Ind. 173, 25 N. E. 190.

[l] (Sup. 1896)

Rev. St. 1894, § 6754 (Rev. St. 1881, § 5027), providing that any person aggrieved by the decision of the board of commissioners in laying out a highway may appeal therefrom, and that, in case proceedings be had in more than one county, the auditors of each county, on being notified of such appeal, shall transmit to the court to which the appeal is taken all the proceedings in such county, and upon the determination of such appeal such clerk shall notify the auditors of all the counties interested therein, does not make each appeal a separate case, which must be brought up on a separate transcript of the record.—Glassburn v. Deer, 41 N. E. 376, 143 Ind. 174.

Under Rev. St. 1894, § 6754 (Rev. St. 1881, § 5027), providing for appeals from any decision of the board of commissioners in laying out a highway, and the filing by appellants of a bond with surety, a bond given by one appellant, with another appellant as surety, is sufficient.—Id.

[m] (Sup. 1899)

That parties not appealing were not duly summoned on the appeal is immaterial, when the appeal is taken in term time, as Rev. St. 1881, § 5775 (Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 7862; Horner's Rev. St. 1897, § 5775), requires summons only when appeal is taken in vacation.—Kirsch v. Braun, 53 N. E. 1082, 153 Ind. 247.

[n] (Sup. 1903)

An appeal from an order of county commissioners establishing a highway cannot be taken after the 30 days limited by Burns' Rev. St. 1901, §§ 7850, 7860.—Robson v. Richey, 65 N. E. 1032, 159 Ind. 660.

[o] (Sup. 1909)

Where the court allows the filing of a substituted bond, it is not required that the substituted bond be signed by the same persons who signed the original bond, and there is no presumption that it is so signed.—Fowler v. Newsom, 90 N. E. 9.

By granting leave to appellants to file such substituted bond and approving it when filed, the circuit court necessarily found that an appeal bond had been filed, and approved by the auditor within the required time.—Id.

The granting of leave to file such substituted bond, and approving it when filed, was equivalent to a finding that the bond was sufficient, and complied with the statute.—Id.

Where a petition in highway proceedings is signed by several persons, and an appeal from the judgment of the board of commissioners is taken by one of those persons, another petitioner may sign the appeal bond as a surety.—Id.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. High. §§ 177-198, 200-203.

§ 58 (6). Record and proceedings not in record.

[a] (Sup. 1863)

The circuit court cannot entertain an appeal from the board of commissioners in a matter relating to highways unless the original papers before the board are brought also before the court.—Purviance v. Drover, 20 Ind. 238.

[b] (Sup. 1870)

A ruling of the circuit court dismissing an appeal from the board of county commissioners in a proceeding to change the location of a highway cannot be presented to the supreme court except by a bill of exceptions.—Burntrager v. McDonald, 34 Ind. 277.

[c] (Sup. 1877)

Under 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 177, §§ 345, 346, a motion to dismiss an appeal from an order of the board of commissioners to the circuit court can be made part of the record only by a bill of exceptions, or by order of the circuit court; and only by such bill will the action of that court thereon be reviewed by the Supreme Court.—Scotten v. Divilbiss, 60 Ind. 37.

[d] (Sup. 1879)

Error alleged on an appeal in highway proceedings that the court erred in rendering judgment that the highway should be opened is not sustained by the record, which fails to show that the court rendered any such judgment.—Turley v. Oldham, 68 Ind. 114.

[e] (Sup. 1881)

An appeal to the supreme court from a decision of the circuit court dismissing an appeal from an order of a board of commissioners for the opening of a highway will only review what occurred in the circuit court; and therefore, where a bill of exceptions recites the proceedings which resulted in a dismissal of the appeal, but fails to state the grounds upon which the appeal was dismissed, or to assign any reason for dismissing it, all the presumptions must be indulged in favor of the decision below dismissing the appeal.—Cox v. Lindley, 80 Ind. 327.

[f] (Sup. 1882)

Upon an appeal from an order of a board of highway commissioners establishing a highway, only such issues and questions are open in the circuit court as were before the board, except such as are properly raised by amendment.—Green v. Elliott, 86 Ind. 53.

[g] (Sup. 1890)

Where, on appeal from the decision of county commissioners laying out a highway, no affidavit of interest appears among the files, or in the transcript, which the law requires the county auditor to make full and complete, it will be presumed, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that no such affidavit was filed.—Wilson v. Wheeler, 125 Ind. 173, 25 N. E. 190.

[h] (App. 1902)

Where, on appeal from a decision locating a highway, appellant makes affidavit showing that H. was a member of the board of county commissioners, and, when the proceedings were pending before it, owned real estate that would be affected by the improvement, but the record shows that all the proceedings were had before the other two members of the board, and contains an entry that H., being the owner of such land, declined to act, the record must control.—Renard v. Grande, 64 N. E. 644, 29 Ind. App. 579.

[i] (Sup. 1906)

Burns' Ann. St. § 7793, providing that persons aggrieved by any decision in highway proceedings may appeal to the circuit court by filing a bond, and section 6023, providing that within 20 days after the filing of such bond, the auditor shall make out a complete transcript of the proceedings, and deliver the same and the bond to the clerk of court to which the appeal is taken, do not require that the record of the proceedings before the board of commissioners or the transcript filed by the auditor in the circuit court should show that an appeal was taken from the decision of the board to the circuit court, or that the appeal bond should be incorporated or mentioned in said record or transcript.—Fowler v. Newsom, 90 N. E. 9.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. High. §§ 177-198, 200-203.

§ 58 (7). Effect of appeal.

[a] (Sup. 1879)

Where an appeal is taken to the circuit court from an order of a board of commissioners for the location of a highway as the case stands for trial de novo, the reports of the reviewers are thereby vacated.—Turley v. Oldham, 68 Ind. 114.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. High. §§ 177-198, 200-203.

§ 58 (8). Hearing and determination of cause in general.

[a] (Sup. 1856)

The object of an appeal to the circuit court from an order of the county commissioners laying out a road is to give the party the benefit of a trial on questions of fact in a court where a jury can be called; and it follows that the appointment of reviewers by the circuit court was irregular, and that their report was properly set aside.—Kemp v. Smith, 7 Ind. 471.

[b] (Sup. 1883)

On appeal to the circuit court from the decision of highway commissioners, the case stands as if originally instituted there to be tried on its merits; and an inquiry as to what was proved before the commissioners is not legitimate, nor need the transcript of their proceedings contain any of the proofs adduced before them.—Brown v. McCord, 20 Ind. 270.

[c] (Sup. 1875)

The practice on appeal to the circuit court in proceedings to lay out and establish a highway is not to appoint viewers, but to try the case de novo in the circuit court by the court or a jury.—Hays v. Parrish, 52 Ind. 132.

[d] (Sup. 1877)

Where, in a proceeding to establish a highway, one appeal is taken from the order locating it, and another from an order of the board approving the report of reviewers as to damages, they should be consolidated as constituting one cause.—Jamieson v. Board of Com'rs of Cass County, 56 Ind. 466.

[e] (Sup. 1880)

An appeal from an order of the county board establishing or relocating a highway is, by 1 Rev. St. 1876, p. 357, § 36, placed on the same footing as an ordinary civil action, and a change of venue from the judge for cause may be granted therein.—Schmied v. Keeney, 72 Ind. 309.

[f] (Sup. 1882)

On appeal from the proceedings of a county board in locating a highway, it is error to refuse to allow a party to show that the county board unlawfully prevented him from filing a remonstrance.—Breitweiser v. Fuhrman, 88 Ind. 28.

[g] (Sup. 1883)

On appeal from proceedings before a board of commissioners for the establishment of a highway, where the remonstrance, having been amended in the circuit court, is for damages only, the remonstrant is entitled to open and close.—Peed v. Brenneman, 89 Ind. 252.

[h] (Sup. 1883)

Since the proceedings before a board of commissioners to establish a highway are set aside by appeal to the circuit court, and the issues are tried de novo, a motion to set aside such proceedings is useless.—Dillman v. Crooks, 91 Ind. 158.

[i] (Sup. 1885)

The petition for establishing a highway need not be offered in evidence in proceedings in the circuit court on appeal from a decision of the board, as it is a paper in the case, as the complaint is in an ordinary action.—Washington Ice Co. v. Lay, 103 Ind. 48, 2 N. E. 222.

[j] (Sup. 1891)

On appeal in proceedings to establish a highway, the circuit court properly refused to allow appellant to file a plea in abatement alleging that less than six persons signing the petition resided in the neighborhood, since he had a right to contest the jurisdiction without filing any plea.—Irwin v. Armuth, 129 Ind. 340, 28 N. E. 702.

[k] (Sup. 1892)

Rev. St. 1881, § 5095, provides that the county commissioners, on return of the report of the viewers appointed by them in proceedings for the construction of roads, shall not make an order for such improvement "until a majority of the resident landholders of the county whose lands are reported as benefited and ought to be assessed, and also the owners of the majority of the whole number of acres of all the lands that are reported as benefited and ought to be assessed, shall have subscribed the petition" asking for such improvement. Held, where an appeal was taken to the circuit, and the cause tried there by a jury, who returned a special verdict, on which judgment was entered for the petitioners, that such verdict need not show that all the landowners in the county whose lands were benefited signed the petition, regardless of the fact that they had not been included in the report of the viewers, but was sufficient if it showed that the names and acres designated therein constitute a majority of the names and acres reported by the viewers as benefited.—Fulton v. Cummings, 132 Ind. 453, 30 N. E. 949.

On trial of an appeal from an order of the board of highway commissioners allowing a highway, it was not error for the court to permit the petitioners to read to the jury the report of viewers, with a plat of the lands reported benefited attached as an exhibit, where the court instructed that the contents of these papers were not evidence of the facts therein contained, as such report was one of the papers in the case, and fixed the limit of the territory to be assessed, and without which the jury could not have intelligently applied the evidence.—Id.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. High. §§ 177-19203.

§ 58 (9). Scope and extent of review.

[a] (Sup. 1862)

The necessary papers of record in the case are operative in the appellate court to establish a prima facie case, at least, for the party whose favor they are; and, if reviewed by the court, no proof of the notices made on appeal.—Daggy v. Coats, 19 Ind. 203.

On appeal from the order of the commissioners to the common pleas, no new evidence can be introduced in favor of or against the proposed highway, as matter of right, but the cause must be tried on the papers on file, if it is tried before the commissioners' court, no new viewers or reviewers can be appointed except by mutual consent.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1865)

When the report of the viewers is silent concerning an "inclosure" found on the land for a proposed road, it will be presumed that there is none, or that the owner has given consent required.—Crossley v. O'Brien, 24 Ind. 87, 37 Am. Dec. 329.

Where, on appeal on a proceeding to establish a highway, in which the report of the viewers is silent as to the interference of such way with inclosures, the questions of damages only are submitted to the jury, and the remonstrants do not ask that the question concerning inclosures shall be also submitted, it is too late afterwards to raise an objection about it.—Id.

[c] (Sup. 1876)

On appeal to the circuit court in a proceeding to establish a highway, the report of the viewers appointed by the county commissioners cannot be called in question.—Vawter v. Land, 55 Ind. 278.

[d] (Sup. 1877)

On appeal in a proceeding for the establishment of a highway, an agreement entered into by the parties on record that with certain specified objections matters are regular is a waiver of all irregularities prior to such entry, except those specified.—Sowle v. Cosner, 56 Ind. 276.

[e] (Sup. 1879)

Where, on appeal to the circuit court from a proceeding for a highway, the verdict is that the road will be of public utility, and that no one is damaged, no one, the Supreme Court will not disturb the action of the circuit court; the evidence being conflicting.—Spencer v. R. Co., 60 Ind. 603.

[f] (Sup. 1880)

Where the remonstrance is against the public utility of the proposed road and on of damages, two issues are presented which must be tried by the circuit court on appeal from the commissioners.—Schmied v. Keeney, 72 Ind. 309.

[c] (Sup. 1884)

Where, on appeal from highway commissioners, a jury is sworn in the circuit court and evidence introduced, the remonstrants cannot file a plea alleging disqualification of some of the petitioners of the highway.—Denny v. Bush, 95 Ind. 315.

[h] (Sup. 1888)

An order refusing a motion for a venire de novo on a petition for a public highway will not be disturbed when the verdict covers the issues which were before the county board, and there is no affirmative showing of prejudicial error.—Mathews v. Droul, 114 Ind. 268, 16 N. E. 599.

[i] (Sup. 1892)

Where proceedings for laying out a highway were had before the board of commissioners without objection, on appeal to the circuit court there was no abuse of discretion in refusing to permit a remonstrance to be filed on an affidavit showing that the attorney employed by the remonstrator employed another attorney to appear and make the proper defense before the commissioners, and that such attorney neglected to do so.—Indianapolis, D. & W. R. Co. v. Hood, 130 Ind. 594, 30 N. E. 705.

[j] (Sup. 1893)

On appeal in a proceeding to establish a road, the appellants cannot complain of insufficient descriptions of lands not belonging to them.—Fulton v. Cummings, 30 N. E. 949, 132 Ind. 453.

[k] (Sup. 1902)

In a proceeding for the opening of a highway, the circuit court's refusal to open the issues and permit a motion made on the trial of a remonstrance for damages to be filed after one trial of the appeal had been had, and after the case had been sent to another county for retrial, and a large amount of costs had been accumulated, was a proper exercise of discretion, and not reviewable.—Fifer v. Ritter, 64 N. E. 463, 159 Ind. 8.

[l] (App. 1902)

Where, on an appeal from an order establishing a highway, the issue was as to public utility, and the evidence was conflicting, the questions as to credibility and weight of evidence were for the jury; and its conclusion, when approved by the trial court, will not be disturbed on appeal.—Raab v. Roberts, 64 N. E. 618, 65 N. E. 191, 30 Ind. App. 6.

[m] (App. 1904)

Though a verified motion was filed in the circuit court to strike out the report of highway viewers for want of a sufficient description of the highway, and alleged that the description in the report was written after the report was filed, without the viewers' consent, an order overruling such motion would be presumed correct on appeal in the absence of a bill of exceptions showing what evidence was introduced in support of the motion.—Merom Gravel Co. v. Pearson, 69 N. E. 694, 71 N. E. 54, 33 Ind. App. 174.

[n] (Sup. 1909)

In highway proceedings, remonstrators have no right to complain of instructions concerning questions and issues to which they were not parties.—Etna Life Ins. Co. v. Jones, 89 N. E. 871.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. HIGH. §§ 177-198, 200-203.

§ 58 (10). Dismissal of appeal.

[a] (Sup. 1875)

It is not a sufficient ground for dismissing the case in the circuit court that one who filed a petition before a county board to lay out and establish a highway, in whose name, with the names of other petitioners, the case was conducted before such board and in the circuit court on appeal, did not sign the petition.—Hays v. Parrish, 52 Ind. 132.

[b] (Sup. 1877)

A motion to dismiss an appeal to the circuit court from an order of a highway board need not be made in writing. If causes therefor are so presented, additional ones may still be assigned orally.—Scotten v. Divilbiss, 60 Ind. 37.

[c] (Sup. 1893)

The want of jurisdiction of the board clearly appearing by the record, a motion to dismiss the case on an appeal from the action of the board in approving the report of the commissioners was properly granted.—Millisor v. Wagner, 133 Ind. 400, 32 N. E. 927.

[d] (Sup. 1908)

Where appellees signed only their surnames and initials to a petition for highway improvements, they may not require the appeal to be dismissed because the assignment of errors describes them in the same manner and does not set out their full names, as required by the Supreme Court rules.—Hall v. McDonald, 171 Ind. 9, 85 N. E. 707.

[e] (Sup. 1909)

Though a bond for costs should have been filed before any action by the county board on the second petition for the establishment of a highway over a route previously found not to be of public utility (Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6753; Acts 1879, p. 148, c. 57), where the bond is filed while the proceedings are before the board, the circuit court on appeal should refuse to dismiss for failure to file the bond at the proper time.—McKalg v. Jordan, 172 Ind. 84, 87 N. E. 974.

[f] (Sup. 1909)

Before a motion to dismiss an appeal in highway proceedings on the ground that no appeal bond was filed was heard, appellants filed an affidavit showing that an appeal bond had been filed with the county auditor, and that such bond was lost or destroyed, and also filed a written request for permission to file a substituted bond. Held, that as there is no statute prescribing the kind of evidence necessary to establish the filing and approval of an appeal bond in similar cases, nor the manner of proving such filing or approval, the same may be established by affidavit, and appellants were not required to prove the same by affidavit of the county auditor or the surety on the bond, but appellees could show by the affidavit of the county auditor that no such bond was ever approved by him.—Fowler v. Newsom, 90 N. E. 9.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. High. §§ 177-198, 200-203.

§ 58 (11). *Determination and disposition of cause.[a] (Sup. 1864)

An order for the location and opening of a highway should specify the width thereof; but where such a defect exists in an order, and does not conflict with the rights of an appellant to this court, it will not be made the ground of a reversal, but the cause will be remanded to the lower court for the correction of its order in that respect.—Sidener v. Esser, 22 Ind. 201.

[b] (Sup. 1867)

The circuit court must try an appeal from the board of commissioners, in a proceeding for the location of a highway, as an original cause, and may either execute its own judgment, or send the case down to the board with directions to execute the judgment.—McPherson v. Leathers, 29 Ind. 65.

[c] (Sup. 1870)

On appeal by petitioners for the establishment of a highway from an order of the board of county commissioners refusing to pay the damages assessed by viewers to one through whose land the road would run, the entire proceeding goes to the appellate court, which has full power to make a final disposition thereof.—Smith v. Scearce, 34 Ind. 285.

[d] (Sup. 1877)

Where, on appeal of highway proceedings to the circuit court, there is a finding that the proposed highway is of public utility, and damages are assessed in favor of a remonstrant, it is not error in the court to leave it to the option of the board of commissioners to pay such assessment.—Jamieson v. Board of Com'rs of Cass County, 56 Ind. 466.

[e] (Sup. 1877)

On appeal to the circuit court from the decision of the board of county commissioners locating a highway, the verdict of the jury or decision of the court must embrace a finding of all the facts which the board would have been required to find to entitle the petitioner to a highway.—Scraper v. Pipes, 59 Ind. 13.

[f] (Sup. 1883)

Where an order is made establishing a highway, and, on the refusal of the county commissioners to pay damages, a remonstrant appeals to the circuit court, which finds that the petitioner is entitled to damages, and refers the case back to the commissioners to make the road, if they should deem the road of sufficient importance, the commissioners, by refusing to open the road and pay the damages out of the county treasury, do not lose the right to entertain the petition to open the road, and the petitioners of highway damages.—Wilkinson v. Bixler, 88 Ind. 100.

[g] (Sup. 1886)

In a special finding made by the circuit court on an appeal in a highway case, it is necessary to state in detail the proceedings taken before the board of commissioners, if, indeed, it is proper to state them.—Lowe v. Brannan, 105 Ind. 247, 4 N. E. 184.

[h] (Sup. 1886)

Where the board of commissioners has properly acquired jurisdiction, no irregularity in their subsequent proceedings is caused by the missing the petition in the circuit court, if such irregular proceedings are vacated on appeal.—Black v. Thomson, 107 Ind. 13, 4 N. E. 184.

[i] (Sup. 1888)

A motion to the circuit court, pending proceedings therein, for an order to compel the board of commissioners to correct its record, is overruled, as an appellate court has no power to compel an inferior court to correct its record on appeal; the remedy being by application to the board of commissioners for that purpose.—Wells v. Rhodes, 114 Ind. 467, 4 N. E. 830.

[j] (Sup. 1891)

Where in a proceeding to establish a highway before commissioners a remonstrant alleges the ground that the highway would be of no public utility is dismissed, and on appeal the remonstrant alleges the same objection, a general verdict finding that the proposed highway would be of public utility, and that the petition is sufficient.—Potter v. McCormack, 439, 26 N. E. 883.

[k] (App. 1901)

On appeal from an order of the county commissioners establishing a highway, the circuit court has power to make a final disposition of the case, or send it back to the board with an order how to proceed.—Woods v. Brown, 61 N. E. 946, 27 Ind. App. 6.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. High. §§ 177-203.

§ 59. — Hearing de novo.

[a] On appeal to the circuit court from the decision of the county board locating a highway, there must be a trial de novo.—(Sup. 1848) Malone v. Hardesty, 1 Ind. 79, Smith, 53; (1855) Moore v. Smock, 6 Ind. 392; (1877) Scraper v. Pipes, 59 Ind. 158; (1879) Bowers v. Snyder, 66 Ind. 340; (1880) Schmied v. Keeney, 72 Ind. 309; (1886) Black v. Thomson, 107 Ind. 162, 7 N. E. 184.

[b] (Sup. 1868)

Proof of the posting up of notice of a petition for the location of a highway may be made before the board of commissioners by affidavit, and the same mode of proof is admissible on appeal.—Wright v. Wells, 29 Ind. 354.

[c] (Sup. 1876)

In proceedings to locate a highway on the trial in the circuit court after appeal by remonstrants from the order of the county board, the jury may be allowed to view the premises, under 2 Rev. St. p. 169, § 328.—Coyner v. Boyd, 55 Ind. 166.

[d] (Sup. 1876)

Where, from the order of a board of commissioners locating a highway, a remonstrant has appealed to the circuit court, the cause there stands for trial de novo; and neither the reports of the viewers and reviewers appointed by such board to view the location of the proposed highway nor certified copies thereof are competent evidence on such trial.—Coyner v. Boyd, 55 Ind. 166; Freck v. Christian, Id. 320.

[e] (Sup. 1878)

Where a remonstrant against the opening and establishing of a highway is not allowed damages on appeal from the decision of the board of county commissioners, such board is not a necessary or proper party, the petitioners for the highway are the proper plaintiffs, and the remonstrants, or those who oppose the petition, are the proper defendants.—Board of Com'rs of Grant County v. Small, 61 Ind. 318.

[f] (Sup. 1881)

On an appeal from the decision of the commissioners of the circuit court by the express requirement of the law, the case is to "be heard, tried and determined as an original cause," (1 R. S. 1870, p. 357, § 36), and, on such hearing, the previous orders of the board and the reports of viewers have no significance.—Grimwood v. Macke, 79 Ind. 100.

[g] (Sup. 1882)

On appeal to the circuit court from proceedings of the board of county commissioners establishing a highway, it is not required that the proceedings and proof be the same as before the county board, but the matter to be tried de novo is the matter which was in controversy before the county board, unless the issues be amended in the circuit court, and hence the petitioners are not required to prove in the circuit court matters upon which no issue was made below, or matters the regularity of which was either expressly or impliedly admitted in the hearing before the commissioners.—Green v. Elliott, 86 Ind. 53.

[h] (Sup. 1883)

On an appeal from the location of a highway, the case is tried de novo in the circuit court, and the report of the reviewers is not in issue.—Clift v. Brown, 95 Ind. 53; Fleming v. Hight, Id. 78.

[i] (Sup. 1884)

Where, in proceedings for the opening of a highway, an owner introduced witnesses who testified to the value of his land that would be taken for the highway, together with the cost of constructing additional fences, together with the fact that the market value of his land would not be increased by the proposed highway, it was not reversible error to permit evidence showing that a specified number of acres of the owner's land would be increased in market value by reason of the proposed road.—Lowe v. Ryan, 94 Ind. 450.

[j] (Sup. 1885)

A verdict in the circuit court, on trial of proceedings to locate a highway, finding that it will be of public utility to have the proposed highway established and opened "as prayed for by the plaintiffs in their petition," sufficiently describes the proposed highway. Even if defective, the defect is cured by a judgment.—Thayer v. Burger, 100 Ind. 262.

Where the proceeding to locate a highway is tried on its merits in the circuit court on appeal from the board of commissioners, and the verdict is defective in form, the proper method of reaching the defect is by motion for a venire de novo.—Id.

[k, l] (Sup. 1885)

An appeal to the circuit court in a proceeding to establish a highway brings up the case for trial de novo, and the reports of the viewers and reviewers cease to be affected.—Burns v. Simmons, 1 N. E. 72, 101 Ind. 557.

[m] (Sup. 1898)

In proceedings to establish a highway, the ultimate fact of utility on appeal of the proceedings to the circuit court is to be determined by the court or jury trying the issue from all the evidence relative thereto, including legitimate inferences from facts and circumstances in evidence.—Fritch v. Patterson, 49 N. E. 380, 149 Ind. 455.

[n] (Sup. 1902)

A motion made on a trial of a remonstrance for damages in proceedings for the opening of a highway is not open to review, where not renewed on appeal to the circuit court; the cause being there triable de novo.—Fifer v. Ritter, 64 N. E. 463, 159 Ind. 8.

[o] (App. 1902)

On an appeal in the circuit court from an order of the board of commissioners establishing a highway, the case stands for trial as other causes; the petition and report of reviewers being considered the complaint, and the remonstrance as the answer; and the facts therein controverted are the issues to be tried.—Raah v. Roberts, 64 N. E. 618, 65 N. E. 191, 30 Ind. App. 6.

[p] (App. 1904)

Where, in proceedings for the establishment of a highway, objector moved to strike the finding and report of viewers that the proposed highway would be of public utility, etc., and from an order establishing the highway objector appealed, and in the circuit court renewed its motion to strike out the report, which motion was again overruled, whereupon it filed an answer, which denied only the public utility of the proposed highway, the refusal of the court to submit any other question than that of public utility was proper.—Merom Gravel Co. v. Pearson, 69 N. E. 694, 71 N. E. 54, 33 Ind. App. 174.

[q] (Sup. 1905)

On appeal to the circuit court from the order of the board of commissioners establishing a highway, the burden is on the petitioners to establish that the proposed highway will be of public utility, and upon each of the remonstrators to prove his individual damages.—Heath v. Sheetz, 74 N. E. 505, 164 Ind. 665.

[r] (Sup. 1903)

No question of former adjudication having been properly put in issue before the board of commissioners, so that such question could not be raised on appeal to the circuit court, the striking out of answers filed in such court attempting to raise such question was a proper way of disposing of them.—Kinzer v. Brown, 170 Ind. 81, 83 N. E. 618.

[s] (Sup. 1908)

Under Acts 1905, p. 524, c. 167, § 10, amending Rev. St. 1881, § 5024, by adding a proviso allowing an appeal to the circuit court from an order dismissing a petition to establish a highway, an adverse report of the viewers is not binding upon the circuit court, but on appeal the cause is there heard de novo and determined on its merits on all the issues raised before the commissioners.—Kelley v. Augsperger, 171 Ind. 155, 85 N. E. 1004.

[t] (Sup. 1909)

Since, under Acts 1905, p. 579, c. 167, on retrial in the circuit court on appeal from a decision of the commissioners as to a highway, reports by the reviewers may be considered as evidence, it was proper to instruct that the reviewers found for the utility of a highway and assessed damages to a remonstrator, though the amount of damages was stated.—Sterling v. Frick, 171 Ind. 710, 86 N. E. 63, 87 N. E. 237.

[u] (Sup. 1909)

Under Highway Act 1905, § 123 (Laws 1905, p. 579, c. 167), providing that the appeal in highway proceedings shall be tried de novo, and that every report of viewers or of any committee "shall be considered in evidence on appeal," on the trial of a highway proceeding on appeal the reports of the viewers to the county board could be taken to the jury.—McKaig v. Jordan, 172 Ind. 84, 87 N. E. 171.

[v] (Sup. 1909)

Acts 1905, p. 579, c. 167, § 123 (Laws Ann. St. 1908, § 7793), providing that the reports of viewers in highway proceedings may be considered in evidence on appeal, do not require such reports to be given in evidence if they are in evidence, whether formally introduced or not.—Etna Life Ins. Co. v. Jones, 172 Ind. 87, 87 N. E. 171.

[w] (Sup. 1909)

Under Burns' Ann. St. § 7793, providing that, on an appeal to the circuit court in highway proceedings, every report made to the board of commissioners by viewers or reviewers or by any commissioner or officer under the provisions of this act shall be considered in evidence on such appeal, the viewers' report need not be formally introduced in evidence.—Fowler v. Newsom, 90 N. E. 171.

[x] (Sup. 1910)

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7663, providing that no highways shall be laid out less than 30 feet wide, and requires the order laying out a highway to specify its width. On appeal from the order of a board of commissioners establishing a highway, the verdict of the jury was that the petition signed by 12 freeholders, 6 of whom resided within the immediate neighborhood of the proposed highway, and that it would be a public utility, and that neither of the remonstrators had sustained any damages. Held, that the verdict sufficiently covered the issues, the proposed route of the proposed road having been given in the petition, and the same having been laid out 30 feet in width by the viewers, and the provisions of the statute having been fully complied with in the order and judgment of the court.—Glendenning v. Staley, 91 Ind. 234.

On proceedings for the establishment of a highway, an instruction that property appropriated and used for a public highway was not subject to taxation was not erroneous; taxation being prohibited by Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 10,257.—Id.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,
SEE 25 CENT. DIG. High. § 199.

§ 60. Certiorari to review proceedings

[a] (Sup. 1908)

Under the gravel road law (Burns' Rev. St. 1894, §§ 6879-6889) certiorari will not lie to review the determination of the board of commissioners that the petition is signed by a majority of the property holders within two miles of the proposed road.—Gifford v. Board of Commissioners, Jasper County, 87 N. E. 509, 160 Ind. 63.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,
SEE 25 CENT. DIG. High. §§ 204-210.

§ 61. Costs and expenses of proceedings.[a] (Sup. 1853)

In an appeal from the decision of the board ordering a road to be laid out and damages paid from the treasury, the county, through the board, who are defendants in the court of appeal, is liable for costs, as any other defendant, and not those who petitioned for the road.—Board of Com'rs of Switzerland County v. Hedges, 11 Ind. 201.

[b] (Sup. 1877)

Where, on the trial of a highway appeal, there is a finding establishing such highway, but allowing damages therefor to such remonstrant, the costs accruing from the trial of the former issue should be assessed against such remonstrant, and that accruing upon the latter against the petitioners.—Jamieson v. Board of Com'rs of Cass County, 56 Ind. 466.

[c] (Sup. 1882)

A remonstrant against the establishment of a highway, who, on appeals from the county commissioners, obtains a dismissal for want of jurisdiction, is entitled to judgment against petitioner for the costs accrued in the circuit court on appeal, as well as before the board.—Dyer v. Board of Com'rs of Steuben County, 84 Ind. 542.

[d] (Sup. 1885)

Under Rev. St. 1881, §§ 5091, 5092, providing that on petition for a gravel road, "and the filing of a bond * * * conditioned for the payment of expenses of preliminary survey and report if the proposed improvement shall not finally be ordered," the commissioners shall order a survey, held, that where, pending proceedings, the commissioners have, for good cause, revoked an order establishing the road, the signers of the bond are as liable as if no such order was made.—Scott v. Board of Com'rs of Vermillion County, 101 Ind. 42.

[e] (App. 1891)

Rev. St. 1881, § 5096, concerning the proceeding to secure free gravel roads, which provides that "the cost and expense of the preliminary survey, proceedings, and report of said improvement shall be paid out of the county treasury, and be refunded, as well as all other amounts advanced by the county for the preliminary expenses of such improvement," does not empower the county commissioners to order the payment of attorney's fees for services rendered to the petitioners.—Board of Com'rs of Rush County v. Cole, 2 Ind. App. 475, 28 N. E. 772.

[f] (App. 1898)

Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 6924 et seq., provides for the construction of roads by county commissioners on a petition, and after the report of the appraisers, and notice that the question is to be voted on at a certain election, have been published in some newspaper, on the order of the commissioners. The petitioners are required to pay all costs of the election. The ninth section provides for a certain compensation for persons employed under the act (naming surveyors, etc.) to be payable out of a county fund. Held, that the expense of publishing the notice of election was not chargeable to the county under the ninth section, but was chargeable to the petitioners.—Walker v. Board of Com'rs of Hamilton County, 49 N. E. 1078, 10 Ind. App. 668.

[g] (Sup. 1909)

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6753 (Acts 1879, p. 148, c. 57), providing that, where viewers shall report that the proposed location of a highway would not be of public utility, no second petition for the location on the same route shall be acted on unless petitioners file a bond for costs, it is within the discretion of the board to allow such bond to be filed after approval of the report of the viewers on a second petition.—McKaig v. Jordan, 172 Ind. 84, 87 N. E. 974.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES.

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. High. §§ 107, 214-221.

§ 62. Conclusiveness of decision.[a] (Sup. 1878)

Upon a report of the viewers that a highway will be of public utility, etc., and a remonstrance and review, with like result, the order of the board, if no appeal was seasonably taken, can only be impeached by showing it to be void.—Suits v. Murdock, 63 Ind. 73.

[b] (Sup. 1884)

A judgment directing the establishment of a new and the vacation of an old highway is not one that the board of commissioners can set aside or grant at their pleasure, and, when an order has been made establishing the new one, the authority of the commissioners is exhausted, and they have no right to change or vacate it nor to ignore it.—Kyle v. Board of Com'rs of Kosciusko County, 94 Ind. 115.

[c] (Sup. 1885)

A decision of the county board that public utility did not require the board to open a new highway is not a bar to a subsequent proceeding to have a road entered of record on the same line as an existing highway by reason of a 20 years' user.—Washington Ice Co. v. Lay, 103 Ind. 48, 2 N. E. 222.

[d] (Sup. 1906)

The board of commissioners being the only judge created by the Legislature to determine whether its right to proceed on a petition to establish a gravel road, as provided by Acts 1903, p. 255, c. 145, has attached by having presented to it such a petition and notice thereof as the act requires as a prerequisite to its jurisdiction, the finding of the board that jurisdiction existed in a particular case is conclusive.—Todd v. Crall, 77 N. E. 402, 167 Ind. 48.

[e] (Sup. 1908)

No question of former adjudication was properly put in issue before the board of commissioners in proceedings to open a highway, the matter, when the answer of former adjudication was filed before the board, being pending on the petition and the proof of notice, at which time the board, having found in favor of petitioners on the jurisdictional facts, had, under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6742, in that connection but one duty to perform—the appointment of viewers—making proper the action of the board in striking the answer from the files as containing matter wholly impertinent to the step about to be taken, and, after the coming in of the viewers' report, at which time only could such an answer have been considered by the board, the remonstrators having submitted no such issue, but praying that reviewers be appointed to assess the damages.—Kinzer v. Brown, 170 Ind. 81, 83 N. E. 618.

The answer, in the nature of a plea of former adjudication, in a proceeding to locate a highway, that on the bearing of a former petition for the establishment of a highway along the same line the board of commissioners, after the coming in of the report of the reviewers, had assessed remonstrators' damages, and had ordered that the highway be opened as soon as such damages were paid, is insufficient, as the board had no power, in anticipation that the damages would be paid, to order that on such payment the highway be opened, and therefore, the highway not having been established, so that remonstrators were not bound by the award, the matter was not adjudicated as to the public, as estoppels must be mutual.—Id.

FOR CASES FROM OTHER STATES,

SEE 25 CENT. DIG. HIGH. §§ 166, 167.

§ 63. Collateral attack.

[a] (Sup. 1880)

The fact that in the petition and notice the Christian names of landowners were not given, but only initial letters, and the owners of one of the tracts were described as the "Bryant heirs," held not to render the order establishing the highway void when attacked collaterally.—Miller v. Porter, 71 Ind. 521.

The existence or nonexistence of a highway which, in pursuance of a valid order of the county board for its establishment, has been actually opened and put into use as such, should not be brought into question collaterally on account of any alleged irregularity of conduct on the part of the supervisor in the opening thereof.—Id.

[b] (Sup. 1880)

A defect in a petition for opening a highway in that it describes some of the owners of lands by the initials of their Christian names and others as "W.'s heirs," and "B.'s heirs," etc., is not such as to invalidate the proceedings on collateral attack.—Porter v. Stout, 73 Ind. 3.

[c] (Sup. 1883)

Where the board of commissioners acquired and held complete jurisdiction of proceedings in the establishment of a highway, the same liberal presumptions must be applied in favor of the regularity and legality of the proceedings and order as are in favor of judgments and proceedings of general jurisdiction. Such orders are held final and conclusive, even though they are, when attacked collaterally.—McIntyre v. Board of Com'rs of Carroll County, 81 Ind. 534.

[d] (Sup. 1883)

It cannot be alleged, by way of attack on the proceedings of a board of commissioners in opening a highway, that no notice was given as provided by statute, when the board's record shows that notice was given.—Heagy v. Black, 90 Ind. 534.

Rev. St. 1881, § 5015, providing that whenever 12 freeholders, etc., shall petition the board for the location, vacation, or alteration of any highway, such board, if it shall be satisfied that due notice of such application has been given by publication, etc., shall appoint three persons to view such highway, and that the giving of the notice of presentation of the petition is a jurisdictional fact, if the board finds that due notice was provided by the statute, and has proceeded to appoint viewers, the decision in regard to notice is conclusive.—Id.

Rev. St. 1881, § 5016, relating to highways, provides that if the viewers shall find that a highway is to be located, or the character of a highway of public utility, they shall lay out the same on the best ground, and mark the same on the best ground, and that no person's inclosure standing without the owner's consent, unless, on examination, a good way can be otherwise be had." Held, that the one-year standing without the owner's consent cannot be raised in a collateral attack on the proceedings of the board.—Id.

[e] A judgment of the county board of commissioners establishing a highway cannot be successfully attacked collaterally unless it is absolutely void.—(Sup. 1884) McIntyre v. Rine, 93 Ind. 193; (1892) Rassier v. Rine, 28 N. E. 866, 29 N. E. 918, 130 Ind. 100; (1900) Helms v. Bell, 58 N. E. 707, 130 Ind. 502.

[f] (Sup. 1884)

A landowner cannot collaterally attack the proceedings of commissioners establishing a highway over his land on the ground that the owner's or occupant's name was not in the petition or notice, when the description of the route was such that one reading the petition could know the location.—McIntyre v. McIntyre, 93 Ind. 193.

[g] (Sup. 1884)

Where the petition in a proceeding to establish a highway is shown to be as invoked exercise of the jurisdiction of the board of commissioners, and there was notice, the judgment of the board was rendered in a case where it had jurisdiction, and its judgment cannot be collaterally impeached.—Rutherford v. Davis, 95 Ind. 245.

(h) (Sup. 1887)

Proceedings and orders of county boards establishing a free gravel road, over which they have jurisdiction, cannot be collaterally impeached unless absolutely void.—Strieb v. Cox, 111 Ind. 209, 12 N. E. 481; Burton v. State ex rel. Baker, 111 Ind. 600, 12 N. E. 486.

(i) (Sup. 1887)

The presentation to the board of county commissioners of a petition for a free gravel road, not showing want of jurisdiction on its face, calls into exercise the jurisdiction of such board, and their decision cannot be collaterally impeached on the ground that the petition was not signed by the requisite number of competent landholders.—Ely v. Board of Com'rs of Morgan County, 112 Ind. 361, 14 N. E. 236.

(j) (Sup. 1887)
